In my solitude many questions are suggested by the discussions. (1) Ordination is a Scriptural institution, but is licensure equally so? (2) What reason exists for such a provision, except as a test of qualification, that the candidate may exhibit to the Christian public and the Presbytery his fitness for ordination? (3.) If so, ought not this public exhibition to be made after licensure? (4.) Inasmuch as this test requires time for its satisfactory application, ought not a reasonable interval to be prescribed between licensure and ordination? (5.) Since the whole process of candidacy up to ordination has for its object to satisfy the judgment of the Church as to the qualifications of the probationer, including experience in preaching, ought not the interval to be sufficiently long to avoid the installation of novices in the pastoral office? (6.) Ought not the Presbytery to regard the crucial test of several years' authorized preaching as the best possible security against the "lowering of the standard," and the most satisfactory of all proofs that the candidate may be safely entrusted with "the care of souls." * * *

AFTERMATH.

If I may be allowed at this late day, like a false prophet of old, to "take up my parable," there are some things I would like to say further anent my trip to the North Carolina mountains and elsewhere—more of the nature of reflections and corollaries than observations.

For one thing, it was delightful while inhaling the pure and invigorating mountain air to note how many and what precious things are said in the WORD about mountains. What a wonderful book that dear old Bible is anyway. A magic mirror that reflects yourself, your needs, nature in its varied aspects, and the infinite loving heart of the Eternal. I could not help preaching, on my return home, on the text, "Thy Righteousness is like the Great Mountains," my mind was so full of it. When I was a boy at college, a very popular book in our society libraries was Headley's "Sacred Mountains." I confess Headley's style was about suited to a college boy's taste, efflorescent—evanescent. Still there is a glory unmatched in those names hallowed by Divine lips, whose summits burned or blossomed beneath the Divine feet. There were stern Sinai, snowy Hermon, cedared Lebanon, Horeb and Pisgah and Carmel, each spot revered and loved, rich with the "spoils of truth." And what lip quivers not at the mention of Mount Zion, and Calvary and Olivet! Take up the Bible with this thought of mountains in your mind and you will be amazed at the multitude and wealth of story and fact teaching and promise connected with these massive monuments of divine power.

For another thing, I would like to say how full is the world of pleasant people and pleasant things. The Spanish have a proverb, "To him who wears shoes, the world is carpeted with leather." Perhaps when one is "on pleasure bent" he will extract it in most unlikely places, as "honey from the rock." And when one's heart overflows towards everybody, everybody's heart overflows toward him. I went out expecting to have a good time, and was not disappointed. Every one helped me to it. I am told moreover that all through that part of North Carolina doors are unlocked and clothes hang out on the line all night. There is a ready neighborly kindness everywhere.

I went to a little mountain Sunday-school one Sunday, taught in a little log cabin. The benches were backless, there was no blackboard "chalk-talk," and everything was very plain and unpretending. But they had Bibles and lesson helps, teachers who had prepared and scholars who had studied; there was decorum, reverence, attentiveness. You may be sure it was a pleasure to preach to such a gathering of devout and hungry worshippers. There were only three or four Presbyterians, some who came a long distance that day because they had heard that a Presbyterian minister was to preach. Their greeting was most hearty—two of them Scotch people, from Paisley I believe. And all present heard the word with such quiet and sweet solemnity that it was a great delight "to tell the story of Jesus and His love."

In Charlotte too—ah how it does one good to get to a Presbyterian stronghold—it was no less a pleasure to preach for my good brother, Rev. F. D. Hunt, (who was licensed by the Presbytery of East Hanover at its meeting in the Second church in Norfolk) and to meet old friends and commune of the things touching the King. I mentioned the delightful comity and interchange among the churches in Charlotte, and their devotion to their pastors. I did not speak of the beautiful, commodious and admirably equipped church built by the Second church since I last worshipped with them—now that the First church is undergoing repair and construction, better to adopt it to its great and growing congregation.

In my old charge, and among the people where I labored fifteen years I preached repeatedly. Even six years make great changes. But the old gospel loses none of its power or sweetness. And if instead of the fathers there shall be the children, it is because God is a covenant-keeping God. Many of those who heard me were children whom I baptized. How delighted I was to find so many of these interested in their soul's welfare, either openly confessing Christ or seeking His face.

I saw no one at any time or anywhere under the influence of liquor. In Rutherford and Buncombe counties they have voted liquor out—except from the county towns, Rutherfordton and Asheville. I heard no oath or obscene word. I was witness to many an act of kindness and courtesy, and some deeds of accommodation that involved toil and disappointment. I felt that notwithstanding the sin and suffering everywhere, this is "a right good old world" as Dr. Talmage phrases it.

I tell you what I did see all over North Carolina (that is where I was), HOPE! Every one spoke of better times coming. There has been economy, there has been industry, and there was the promise of prosperity. Raising their own supplies and living within their means, the outlook was every way brighter and so were the faces and voices of the people. I attribute it to the good sense that hard times and debts have taught them. I never have seen such good crops everywhere, and corn like plumed armies stood in serried ranks—the tallest grenadiers one ever saw afield. I saw some corn standing twenty feet tall, and how they will ever get the ears without step-ladders I don't know! (I am afraid you will think my story as tall as the corn—but I have witnesses to substantiate my statement.) It was a matter of amazement to see corn growing on steep mountain sides—so steep that its cultivation is done with the hoe chiefly. "The valleys also are covered over with corn." Are you surprised that "they (the hills and valleys not only but the inhabitants too) shout for joy—they also sing." I think there will be a glad thanksgiving this fall.

LIFE.

Life is a book
Of clear, white pages, given us at birth,
Wherein to write the record of our lives—
The record which beyond us still survives
The story of our pilgrimage on earth.

Our ev'ry deed
Each day we take the pencil and indite
On a new page—our wishes, hopes and fears,
For good or ill. And so on thro" the years
The record grows of every day and night.

We may not look
At what we once have therein written, but Thro' memory: nor may we e'er erase
A single thing that in there has its place,
Till all is finished, and our book is shut.

O soul, take heed
That in this life's book naught shall e'er offend:
Have thou a care about thine every act,
That thy book's beauty may appear intact,
Nor blot, nor blemish mar it to the end!

Small Fruit.

BY OBADIAH OLDSCHOOL.

I don't see why all those peaches can't be large and uniform in size. It's such a bother to handle small fruit, and then, it don't sell for much more than enough to pay for the picking."

So said the chronic grumbler in the orchard to-day. He is one of that numerous class of shallow-pated and conceited people who are always finding fault with everything. I said to him: "Jonas, do you know why this fruit is not all first-class?"

"I suppose because it was made to grow that way."

"Why, just to aggravate us. I can't see any other reason. The rain and the sunshine might as well make five hundred big peaches on each of these trees as to make a thousand little ones."

"And you think that all the power and the responsibility in regard to fruit rests with rain and sunshine, do you? If so, you ought to abandon the abodes of civilization, and go out and live in the woods as savages do, depending for food on the spontaneous products of the earth. You would then have nothing but little acorns, little berries, and now and then a wild plum or crab apple about as big as the acorns and about as hard. God gives us, in what we call nature, possibilities of excellence; but he expects us to develop them by study and toil. Our choicest fruits are the result of generations of culture in the improvement of varieties, and of annual culture, in making the best of the season, of the best varieties. Now, in planting this orchard I made a mistake. I might have secured better stock than I did. Then I might have prepared the soil better by deep plowing. Then I might have improved it by the use of fertilizers. Then I might have irrigated it by digging an artesian well. Then I did not prune the trees as severely as I should so as to divert more of the sap from wood-growth to fruit-growth. And finally I did not thin the young peaches enough; I took off only half of them, when I should have taken three-quarters. Now you see why so much of the fruit is small. If I had planted a larger variety and helped the rain and sunshine by mellowing, watering and fertilizing, and then had pruned and thinned more wisely, I might have more bushels and better fruit. God kept saying to me all through the year: 'I will give you just such a crop as you want and are willing to work for—shall it be nubbins or shall it be large and luscious peaches? Take your choice.' In my folly and laziness I chose the nubbins, and I have only myself to blame. God has given me a few splendid peaches, just to show me what I might have had all over the orchard if I had done my part. It isn't the fault of nature or of the rain and sunshine. They were ready to work with me, but I did not direct their forces as I should.

And it is not in the orchard only that we are to be workers together with God. He gives us ability and opportunity, but the result, in success and in character, in what we accomplish and in what we become, depends largely on ourselves. If we are lazy and self-indulgent we will not grow in knowledge or in grace. The wise man and the good men are not creations; they are developments. The germ of possible excellence is in every man, just as the sap which may form first-class fruit is in every peach tree. Why then are there so many people in the world who may be called, in slang phraseology, "small potatoes." They are wanting in the two elements that are essential to success—industry and self-denial. The wise orchardist cultivates and prunes. He stimulates the roots cuts back the branches. And so the man who wants to realize the highest possibilities of his being must not only study, think and work, but he must restrain his appetites and passions. He must sacrifice many little plans and concentrate all his energies upon one great and worthy object.

There was a story circulating in the papers some thirty years ago of a Hoosier who kept a one-horse grocery away down in "The Pocket." He used to lean over the counter and say to his customers, "What wonderful luck some folks have! Why, Abe Lincoln and I were boys together. We went for three months in the winter to the same district school, and he couldn't read, write or cipher any better than I could. When we were older we used to chop wood and split rails together, and I could split as many in a day as he could. But now he is President of the United States and I am here weighing sugar and measuring molasses."

That man did not consider that when he was spending his evenings at country frolics, Lincoln was lying before a fire of pine knots with a book in his hands; and that when he was spending his money for whiskey, Lincoln was spending his in facilities for mental improvement. No wonder that the Hoosier grocer was small in character and influence—a little peach hard and bitter, while his quondam schoolmate was one of the great men of his day and generation. Possibly, if the man who talked about luck, had been as studious as Lincoln was, he might have been equally eminent and useful. All men are not created with the same intellectual and moral faculties, but our inequalities of condition result far more from our fidelity or want of fidelity than from any original and arbitrary difference.

I am sorry for the small peaches. Nobody admires them. The canners won't touch them. The driers grade them as number four, and the dealers have to sell for what they can get. But for all this they are not to blame. They could not cultivate the orchard in which they grew. They could not prune the trees on which they grew. But for the people who are small intellectually and morally I have very little sympathy. They might be a great deal better than they are. Their lives, in nine cases out of ten, have been shiftless. They have wasted in indolence or dissipation the time given to them for self-improvement. God endowed them with capacity and opportunity. He would have helped them to grow if they had tried to meet the conditions of growth. He has done more for the least of them than he did for some of their fellowmen who have achieved pre-eminent success.

Let the youthful reader ponder this lesson from the orchard. Time is passing. Opportunities not improved promptly may never return. If I were a peach, merely, I would want to be a large and luscious one. And since I am a man, should I not long and try to be as great and good and useful as possible? —Interior.

Protestantism in the British Isles.

The following from Dr. John Hall, of New York, to the Presbyterian Banner is so clear and satisfactory on a subject of which American readers generally know so little, at least so little that is reliable, that we lay it before our readers, with great pleasure:

For many and obvious reasons an American Christian must feel a deep interest in the Churches of the motherlands. They not only gave to our country the founders of our Churches, but they have continued their contributions of members from year to year, and by the press and otherwise they still exercise an influence on religious thought in America. A few paragraphs, therefore, from one who is interested in Church-life on both sides of the Atlantic are here presented.

Without assigning reasons for the arrangement let the first place be given to the Green Isle. Episcopalians and Presbyterians—not differing much in numbers—make up the bulk of the Irish Protestants. Methodists have congregations in most of the large towns, and the smaller body of Baptists, with some congregations, are pushing missionary work, but unhappily it is among their fellow-Protestants mainly. The "Irish Church"—the usual description of the Episcopal branch—has a decided evangelical majority, and its leading officers are doing their utmost in the face of some difficulties. The Archbishop of Dublin maintains a brotherly attitude towards the outside Protestants, and favors missionary work among those who are called "Catholics" both at home and in Spain; for which course he is criticised by his brethren in England who describe themselves as the Catholics of the country. The present primate of the Irish Church is the son of an evangelical bishop who once filled the most conspicuous place as preacher in his denomination. Everyone knew of "John Gregg of Dublin." His son appears to be on the same line. While there is, here and there, a cropping up of High Churchism, the bulk of the clergy are evangelical, and the laity in the new condition of things—introduced by Disestablishment—take a deeper and more practical interest in Church matters than formerly. While the pecuniary means of the congregations and of missionary organizations have been well sustained, there are reasons for grave anxiety on this matter. A portion of the "ready money" which came into the hands of the Church, in consequence of disendowment, was loaned to landlords at a reasonable rate of interest. But rents are not paid as they used to be, and if the movement of which "Home Rule" was the salient point were pushed successfully the number of their supporters in three provinces would be alarmingly diminished. Unhappily this consideration does not receive the attention that ought to be given it by the sister Church of England.

The Presbyterians are mainly in Ulster, but with congregations in all the large towns through the other three provinces, and having been accustomed to ministerial support all through, they have had less difficulty on the financial side than their brethren. They maintain their inherited convictions on doctrinal matters. A portion of the Church, including nearly all outside Ulster, favors the modernizing of some things, as for example, the use of the instrument and of the hymn in public worship. The oldest congregations outside Ulster have long had hymns in use; but a so-called "conservative" section in the north opposes such innovations. Happily no bad spirit has been shown in the matter. Systematic work is maintained for the enlightenment of the Roman Catholic people, mainly by colportage; but the results do not attract attention for this, among other reasons, that the enlightened often betake themselves to other lands. It is difficult to be a professed "convert" to Protestantism in most of Ireland.

It is only a little way from Ulster to Scotland. Looking across from Larne towards Stranraer the Irish eye can see the Scottish hills. So we look into Presbyterian Scotland in the next place. There, as in some other places, some anxiety has been created by public utterances on the line of "broad" critical views, and so far, it is believed by candid onlookers, harm has been done to the evangelical cause. On the other hand a good feeling is being developed between the Free Church and the United Presbyterian, while the convictions of the latter on "Establishment" keep up the barriers between it and the "Church of Scotland." The last-named, it is conceded on all hands, has developed much effort, made steady advance, and should the endowments be withdrawn, would, like the sister Churches, no doubt, hold on her way on the "voluntary" line. As is known the Free Church did not come out against the union of Church and State, but against the abuse of the State's power; but now, doubtless the majority of her members would not oppose disestablishment, but would hope for the union of the three great branches in one great Scottish Church. A lady would, presumably, feel an interest in the future of one who honorably proposed for her, even though she did not accept him. With a feeling of this sort the writer, in a hurried visit to Glasgow, worshipped in the fine Free church in which the justly-valued Wm. Arnot labored before going to Edinburgh. It was pleasant to see a good congregation, even in the vacation-season, to join in hymns, sweet and familiar in America, from the Free Church Hymn Book, and to notice the devout bearing of the worshippers. There was no merit, indeed, in the close attention given to the sermon. It was thoughtful, Scriptural, earnest in delivery, and edifying in its influence. It was by a U. P. minister, the Free Church pastor of the place having exchanged with him for the previous month, so that each might have a modest vacation. A large choir on the floor in front of the pulpit, with a leader whose arms, in constant motion, "timed" the singing, was heartily supported by the congregation in the praise of God. The influence of Scotland upon Christendom—explain it as one may—has been out of all proportion to her population and extent, and one can wish for her nothing better than the perpetuation of the teaching and the principles which made her what she is.

Waiting.

Wait, but wait not too long. The King's business on which you are sent requires haste. The enemy is at the gate; be not too long in putting on the armor; a belt may be tightened or a side-piece adjusted after you begin march. Some men make preparation so much a life business as never to find time for life's work. The upper chamber was exceptional—a place for arming, and not a dwelling-house. The scene in that chamber was never to be repeated. There the watchword and the battle-cry were given, when the disciples swept out into the grand arena of struggle to do and dare for the Lord Jesus.

Our best things are gained in service. The soldier learns in the field; the swimmer becomes expert by plunging into deep water. However much the teacher may gain, in the preparatory drill, his best lessons will come in actual teaching. The theoretical instruction was never before understood by him. You may not feel exactly prepared and in trim for the religious service; the best way to prepare is to fall into line and march with the Christian army. Begin to do something and begin now. Take up the first duty at hand and follow that with the succeeding one, and you will soon find yourself at home in the work. The fact that you have a sense of unreadiness is a reason why you should begin. It is only by beginning and going on that you can ever be ready. The very best preparation is in doing. Be sure to be at the next prayer-meeting, and do not fail to perform your part. Wait not for feeling; act, and you will feel. To do what Christ bids is religion.—Zion's Herald.

Let Us Take Time.

Let us take time for the goodby kiss. We shall go to the day's work with a sweeter spirit for it.

Let us take time for the evening prayer. Our sleep will be more restful if we have claimed the guardianship of God.

Let us take time to speak sweet, foolish words to those we love. By and by, when they can no longer hear us, our foolishness will seem more wise than our best wisdom.

Let us take time to read our Bible. Its treasures will last when we have ceased to care for the war of political parties, and the rise and fall of stocks, or the petty happenings of the day.

Let us take time to be pleasant. The small courtesies which we often omit because they are small will some day look larger to us than the wealth which we have coveted or the fame for which we have struggled.

Let us take time to get acquainted with our families. The wealth you are accumulating, burdened father, may be a doubtful blessing to the son who is a stranger to you. Your beautifully kept house, busy mother, can never be a home to the daughter whom you have no time to caress.

Let us take time to get acquainted with Christ. The hour is coming swiftly for us all, when one touch of His hand in the darkness will mean more than all that is written in the day-book or ledger or in the records of our social world.

Since we must take time to die, why should we not take time to live—to live in the larger sense of a life begun here for eternity.—Selected.

Christian Manhood.

The religion that produces the noblest and best type of manhood in this world is certainly the religion that offers the best security for the world to come. By their fruits we may know them. The religion that tends to develop true manhood is the true religion. How does the Christian religion stand this test? Is Christian manhood the highest possible type of manhood?

We must confess that there are many narrow, bigoted, unjust, unmanly men who pose as representatives of the Christian religion and make loud professions of Christianity. When men point to one of these and call attention to their unmanly words or acts we can only say that they are not true representatives of Christianity. To be a Christian is to be a Christ like man or woman: "For if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." He is the Perfect Example for every one of his people, and when we examine his life we may search in vain for anything that is unmanly. We see him in every conceivable condition—in prosperity, in adversity; in the presence of friends and surrounded by enemies; hearing the multitudes crying "Hosanna!" and hearing them again crying "Crucify him! Crucify him!" Never in any condition or circumstances does he fall below the standard of perfect manhood; he combines courage with kindness, ardent love for his friends with just estimate of his and their enemies; he never speaks a word that he need to recall: for "When he was reviled, he reviled not again, and when he suffered he threatened not." We believe that even the infidel world, so far as it is intelligent on the subject, will agree that the character of Christ as portrayed in the Gospels is the character of the Perfect Man. Neither history, poetry nor any work of fiction has ever presented as perfect manhood as appears elsewhere in the Author of Christianity—the Man, Christ Jesus. If to be a Christian is to be a Christ-like man, Christianity is certainly designed and adapted to develop the noblest manhood.

We may, however, look at Christianity from a different point. Instead of looking at the perfect example we may look at what Christianity gives to every man. In order to have perfect manhood we need intelligence to know the right and courage and strength to maintain and defend it. Faith in the heart clothes a man with divine wisdom, strength and courage: he need not fear though the mountains be removed, so long as the Lord of Hosts is his strength; he can afford to be just when all others are unjust, to stand alone for the right in the midst of a wicked, ignorant, corrupt and impure generation; God's justice is his comfort, his strength and the source of his courage. From the long list found in the 11th chapter of the book of Hebrews, down the ages to the present day, the true heroes were always heroes by their faith in God. One of the highest tributes that we have ever known to be paid to a Christian missionary was by a prominent Hindoo. When speaking of one of the missionaries of the Presbyterian Church he said, "Mr. Hull is a perfectly just man." If the heathen world and the infidel world could all say this in regard to every Christian man it would require very little effort in the way of preaching and teaching to convince the world that Christianity is the true religion. The most potent forces in all this world for making infidels and skeptics and unbelievers are the unjust, cowardly, unmanly acts and words of professing Christians, while the best evidences of Christianity are honest, upright, courageous Christian lives.—Presbyterian Messenger.

THOUGHTS IN A WHEAT FIELD.

In His wide fields walks the Master.
In His fair fields, ripe for harvest,
Where the evening sun shines slantwise
On the rich ears heavy bending;
Saith the Master: "It is time."
Though no leaf shows brown decadence,
And September's nightly frost-bite
Only reddens the horizon,
"It is full time," saith the Master,
The wise Master, "It is time" * * * *
Who shall know the Master's coming?
Whether it be dawn or sunset,
When night dews weigh down the wheat ears,
Or while noon rides high in heaven,
Sleeping lies the yellow field.
Only, may Thy voice, Good Master,
Peal above the reapers' chorus,
And dull sound of sheaves slow falling,
"Gather all into My garner,
For it is My harvest time."

BOOKS.

The Presbyterian Committee of Publication at Richmond send us a story entitled "How A-Chon-Ho-Ah found the Light." It is by Anna Maria Barnes, author of "Ninito" and several other bosks. We were greatly pleased with "Ninito" and so have to confess to a little disappointment with A-Chon-Ho-Ah. Some things upon which Presbyterians are not agreed, are presented too dogmatically to suit us, especially as we do not see that way, but on the whole there is no harmful error disseminated, no truth perverted. Much good wholesome truth is taught in an interesting way and much about the manners and customs of Indian life. It is a book peculiarly calculated to please half-grown children.

COLLECTION FOR THE BIBLE CAUSE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The pastors and sessions of our churches are respectfully reminded that the General Assembly has ordered that a collection be raised for the Bible Cause in all our churches on the 3rd Sabbath in October, or as soon thereafter as convenient. Very few of the churches last year recognized this claim; but let us not forget what the American Bible Society is doing for us, in both the Home and Foreign fields, in providing the people with the Word of God, whose distribution among them is fundamental and indispensable in all our Christian Work.

Special information concerning the Bible work, and envelopes for the collection, will be cheerfully supplied without charge to all who apply to me.

THOS. H. LAW,
District Superintendent in North and South Carolina.
Spartanburg, S. C.

THE OCTOBER COLLECTION FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

DEAR BRETHREN:—It is with confidence inspired by past experience, that we appeal to you again for your support of our Foreign Mission work. The past twelve months of greatest financial depression in our history, has shown beyond question, that this cause lies very near the heart of our people; as it lies near the heart of our Saviour. You have said, most assuredly with the Master's approval, that this work must go forward, at any cost or sacrifice on your part. You have said to your Committee that you are willing to live more simply in your homes, that you may be able to relieve the necessities of our brethren, whom you have sent to represent you in heathen lands. You have nobly answered the appeals for help in times past. Remember the work still calls urgently for support and enlargement. God's blessing is sure to our Church at home, if we will heed the cry of the perishing in foreign lands.

Shall the good work go on? Shall we continue to advance? Shall we not only improve on past liberality; but go forward until the freeness of our gifts shall bear some worthy proportion to the freeness of God's gift to us. Surely we should not faint just as the reaping season draws near. We should not halt in the moment of victory.

But we are sorry to say that there are signs of reaction and apathy. Our contributions to the 1st of September are about $2,000 less than at the same time last year. This is no time for retreat or discouragement. It is the time for earnest prayer, for self-denying liberality. Now is the time to stop the deficit, before it grows beyond our power to stay it. We, your representatives and servants appeal to you to come to the rescue quickly.

Our stated collection is near. We urge every minister in our bounds to present the cause on the first or second Sabbath of October, with earnest zeal to the people. Let every band of Christians among us take part with us in this great work. Let every member who loves his Church, express that love by helping the Church to go forward, and to maintain her noble record of service among the heathen. Let us by self-denial see to it that our Savior's name be proclaimed to the ends of the earth. Now is the time for courage and energy in upholding the banner of the cross.

We send out leaflets and envelopes to every Church without waiting to be asked for them. We beg our friends to whose care they are sent, see that they are placed in the hands of those who should give to the cause. Let the effort be made to get a contribution from every Church and from every member.

Dear Brethren, listen to the cry of the perishing. You have the great salvation. Send it to them. Their need calls you. Your Savior's dying love to them urges you, Let no plea of worldly ease or of selfish greed prevent you from sending them the gospel. Your former liberality encourages us to expect large response from you.

Your Brethren and Servants in the Lord, the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions:

S. H. Chester, Secretary; J. H. McNeilly, Chairman; J. W. Bachman, J. H. Bryson, Z. W. Ewing, R. J. Gordon, J. W. Lupton, Angus McDonald, G. W. Patterson, W. H. Raymond, R. C. Reed, C. A. R. Thompson, W. C. Clark, F. B. Webb.

Interesting Women.

If I were a girl anywhere along in the bright years which lie between fourteen and twenty, I would set it before myself as a goal worth striving for—to become an interesting woman. The interesting woman is always sought for, always welcome, always gives pleasure, and finds chances to be useful. It does not make much difference whether she is pretty or plain; she possesses a secret of more value than beauty, and a charm which always make homeliness peculiarly attractive.

I can think at this moment of several interesting women whom I have known. One, a dumpy, dark little woman of irregular features, and the worst taste in dress that I ever saw, was so bright a talker, so quick in repartee, so full of cheery jests and of agreeable stories, that when she came into a room a ripple of expectation ran all through it. "There's Mrs. V—," people would say. "Now things will be stirred up." Once I saw her at a picnic seated on a mossgrown log, telling in her own bright way some reminiscences of her girlhood among the Welsh mountains, and the children stopped their play to listen to the story, older people grouped around, intent and amused, the minister took out his notebook and pencil behind her back, and entered a suggestion or two for a future sermon. There she sat in her blue satin bonnet with yellow flowers her brown delaine gown with gay figures sprinkled over it, an ill-dressed, elderly, but most fascinating gentlewoman. To the latest day of a long life she remained interesting to everybody; most so to her husband and her children and grandchildren.

Another woman I think of is still young and in no way remarkably endowed, except in this same quality of captivating people's hearts and pleasing people's fancies. "She is worth her weight in gold," said a fellow-member of a literary society lately. "And yet you would not call her clever—I don't know how to define it—but, to my mind, Miss K— is so delightfully interesting!"

If some girl asks how she is to set about attaining this advantage, I can assure her that the recipe is quite within her reach.

First. She must quit letting her life center around herself. Think little of yourself, dear girl, and dwell on the needs of others. Try, as Ruskin says so well, "to please people and serve them in dainty ways." Live an altruistic life, but live it right in your own home, in your own street, in your own church.

Second. The interesting girl, by which I mean, as you have, of course, gathered by this time, the girl who interests, goes through the world with her eyes open. A wide-awake lassie, no bit of knowledge escapes her; she garners from her reading, from her social opportunities, from her walks and her daily work, a store of incidents and information which she has on hand when it is needed.

Third. The interesting girl who will be an interesting woman by-and-by, does not have false standards of value. She will not judge, as some silly girls do, of a man's merits by his clothes only. Neither a cutaway coat, nor pointed shoes, nor an elegant distinction of evening dress, with manners to suit, will prove passports to her favor, unless there be a true man behind the apparel. The girl who has mind enough to be interesting has mind enough to go under the surface when choosing her companions and friends.

There is, believe me, nothing specially occult or difficult about this thing. You can be as interesting as ever woman was since the world began if you will elect to do so. And neither good looks nor good families, nor even good feelings and good principles, will suffice to keep you from being stupid and monotonous, unless each is supplemented by sweetness of manner, kindness of heart, tact, and intelligence, and the desire to please, which makes people interesting.

"I ask thee for a thoughtful love,
Through constant watching wise,
To meet the glad with joyful looks,
And wipe the weeping eyes;
A heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize."

—Margaret E. Sangster.

Following Christ.

At the beginning of Christ's public ministry he called certain men to be his disciples, saying to them: "Follow me." All through his ministry he urged and encouraged them to continue following him. The last recorded word found in the gospels, as addressed to any of his disciples, is the same exhortation, or command, to Peter: "Follow thou me."

The religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is a personal one. Each Christian is to be bound to the person of the Savior. It is not a life accepting certain truths, living according to a certain code of ethics, or doing certain duties, but personally devoted to Jesus Christ, loving him as a personal friend, hearkening to him as a personal teacher, following him as a personal guide, trusting to him as a personal Savior, and devoted to him personally as the sum and center of all truth, goodness, attractiveness, life and salvation.

More than this, Christian life is to be one of growth. It is not to stand still, but is to be advancing continually in all the elements and characteristics of discipleship. Progress, growth, increasing likeness to Christ, are to mark the one who is willing to devote his life to the imitation and following of Christ. In conversion, or the new birth, a certain likeness to Christ is imparted to the soul, as a physical likeness marks and pervades human families. But there is to be, not only the passive likeness, but especially an active imitation of Christ. It is a remarkable fact that the printed book the largest number of copies of which, next to the Bible itself, have been sold, is Thomas a'Kempis' "Imitation of Christ." Certainly no theme and no endeavor should have more careful attention than that of striving to be like Christ and imitating his holy life.

Christian life is to be active. Christ was busy. He went about doing good. He led his disciples on many a journey. He was on a search for lost souls, and he made himself often very weary. The zeal of his mission was like a fire, eating and burning him up. The Son of man was seeking to save the lost. The disciples who followed him about became busy men, tireless workers all, we may well believe. So if we are Christians to day we shall show it by being active in the work of Christ, not listless, passive, uninterested, much less hard to arouse to earnest work. We shall be followers of Christ, and that means that we shall be active and full of zeal.

Christian life is one of personal service and consecration, rather than of speculation and inquiry as to the future. When, in that last conversation with Peter, Christ had urged him to follow him, Peter tried to divert attention from himself and the solemn warnings which Christ had been administering to him, and asks as to the future of John: "Lord, and what shall this man do?" Christ mildly reproves him by saying: "What is that to thee?" and again presses his personal "Follow thou me" upon his mind and heart. We are to be ready for service, and willing to help bring others to Christ and anxious to establish them in holy life, but we are not to be given to speculation as to the things which are hidden, or the things which God has hidden behind the curtain of the future.

Some people seem much more interested in trying to find out what the future contains; where heaven is and what hell is; just what is meant by future and eternal punishment, and what shall be the employments of the redeemed, than they are to know and do the will of God for the present moment. God's decretive will is one thing, and we may rest assured that he will order all things in the wisest way. God's preceptive will is another thing, and it is this that we are personally to have in mind as we pray: "Thy will be done!" We are to seek to be obedient children, doing the will of God, following Christ in love, activity, spirituality, self-sacrifice, and thus have that prayer answered in and by our own lives.

For our own personal peace and enrichment, for usefulness and holy influence, we need each one to watch and pray that we may more thoroughly and lovingly follow Christ. The one who keeps nearest the Master, and who grows to be the most like him, will be the one through whom the most will be done in bringing the world to Christ. And that we may not forget it, we are to draw close to Christ very often in prayer, that we may hear him in exhortation and persuasion, saying to us over and over again, as to Simon Peter: "Follow me." Christ presses it upon us personally, and makes its personal acceptance the chief mark and assurance of Christian life and character.—Herald and Presbyter.

Religion a Life Service.

What a false and narrow conception of religion is that which regards it only as essential for the close of life. It is a ticket which will pass one safely through "the iron gate of death;" but there is no special use for it until that great crisis is reached. Well, even so. It is desirable to get tickets in time. The office is not always open. We are told that many shall seek to enter in and not be able. There comes a time when the door is shut. It is a most presumptuous confidence of the soul that salvation may at any hour be begun. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found. So, if religion is only safety at last, in view of all uncertainties and contingencies, it is wise to secure that safety first. A life insurance policy may only be available after death; but the last sickness is not the time to secure it. A will is of no force while the testator liveth, but life is the only time to make it.

There is a comfort, in the consciousness of preparation made. Life is brighter when freed from the bondage of the fear of death. But just in proportion to the real worth of life is the worth and value of religion as a present possession. For religion alone is life. Its advantages are immediate, and the normal condition of the soul. "All things" are yours, if Christ is yours.

Our magnificent ocean steamers and floating river palaces are not constructed and equipped merely to carry life preservers. The present life condenses the future. It is only when to live in Christ, that to die is gain. There is only one authentic instance of genuine death bed conversion. To die the death of the righteous the only sure way is to live his life.

Is there no hereafter for our mental, and moral, and spiritual energies? Are these intense activities of our entire nature limited in their reach and scope to this earthly sphere? Has not "the daily round" of duty a grander and ultimate destiny?

We are admonished to lay up treasure, and are told that their works follow the blessed dead. The treasure is the investment of life service for God, the works those who present their bodies a living sacrifice to Him. The difference between being early saved, and barely saved, is like the difference between a vessel entering port under full sail, with colors flying and cargo safe, or being towed in, a broken, dismantled, empty hulk.

So the soul may make its final harbor, "saved as by fire," or, with "an abundant entrance."—Christian Intelligencer.

The Best Sermon.

As a general rule, the more a sermon is "admired" the further it is from doing good. The sermons that men feel the most, they talk about the least. When a man has listened to one of them, he does not stay after church to compliment the preacher, but he goes quietly home, by himself if he can, and says nothing, but is happier, or not so happy, as the case may be, for a good while after.—Church Standard.

Mission Work in Mecklenburg Presbytery:—Mr. W. M. Hunter, a student at the Columbia Seminary, was sent by the committee in June to the mission field in Rutherford and McDowell counties; also serving Sandy Plains in Polk county. The writer was with him at meetings of five and eight days at Duncan's Creek, Dysartville and Weavers. Through these seasons of refreshing, wherein the few members were greatly revived and strengthened, taking upon themselves new vows, and forming new resolutions, there were added to Duncan's Creek eleven, (eight of these received later by Bro. McCorkle), making a total of thirty. Among these are some excellent material, a good number being adults.

Brother Hunter has proven himself to be a fine worker, in the three and a half or four months he has been in the field and has done much at the homes of the people to work up this comparatively large accession to the little churches. To God be all the praise.

Dunn Church:—Rev. A. M. Hassell writes: The Rev. John A. McMurray, of Smithfield, assisted me in a revival at Dunn Presbyterian church. The meeting lasted ten days. Mr. McMurray preached the gospel with great effect. The church and community felt the power of the Holy Spirit. The church is revived, and many inquired the way to be saved. Two adults were added to Presbyterian church on profession of faith in Christ.

Bethlehem Church:—Four adults were added to Bethlehem Presbyterian church on last Sabbath, 16th inst. One by letter and three by profession. This makes twelve during one month.

Expression of Thanks:—J. S. Morrow wishes to express his thanks to his members and friends of Bethany church for a fine wide quilt and Bethany members and his many white friends of First Presbyterian church, for such a grand pounding of so many good things. Flour, sugar, coffee, rice, grits, lard, soda, can fruit, bacon, potatoes, and I cannot tell how many other good things. It was quite a late hour in the night when the friends came, the family had all gone to bed; but were awaken by sweet singing, "A stranger at the door will you let him in?" It was a great pleasure to us, for to let them in. May our good Master bless them all. Theirs for the gospel.

Ida Mills Church:—At our fall communion at Ida Mills church yesterday, of which Rev. W. B. Arrowood is pastor, sixteen persons were announced as having been received into the communion of the church since our spring communion in June; eleven of these were on profession of faith, and five by letter. With these tokens of the divine blessing we thank God and take courage.

Union Church, Gaston County:—The pastor of this church, Rev. G. A. Sparrow, began a meeting on Saturday before the third Sabbath in September. It was evident from the first that there was deep interest in the church, and the results have been glorious. The meeting closed on Sunday with twenty received on profession of faith, and six by letter, with four at Olney by letter, making thirty added to the two churches in one week. Nearly all those who united with the church were young men and young women. Splendid material promising great things for the future. Bro. McAllister, pastor of Bethel church in South Carolina, came over on Tuesday, preaching Tuesday night, Wednesday morning and twice Thursday the remainder of the time the pastor preached. Truly God has given the church showers of blessing beside the good done in many ways. It has been sixteen years since the church has enjoyed such a season of refreshing. On Sunday night this large church was crowded and the meeting closed by all singing, "God be with you till we meet again."

ELDER.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Notes from the two P's—Pleasant Hill and Pineville:—Rev. J. R. McAlpine writes: I have been very busy, settling, since the arrival of my family at Pineville, Aug. 30th, in fact, too busy for writing. Some of the ladies of Pineville took charge of the manse and brought order out of reigning chaos, preparatory to the reception of its occupants. A delegation of ladies and young men met the incoming train and escorted the new comers to their future home; where additional kindly faces beamed a welcome, and a hot supper sent its pressing invitation to the table. The pantry also bore evidence that kindly hearts and full hands had been there. Flour, coffee, sugar and numerous articles of prime necessity to the housekeeper had been placed ready to hand. May the rich blessing of the Lord rest upon all these kind and thoughtful people, of both congregations.

Pleasant Hill:—Our communion season, with preparatory services beginning Thursday night preceding, embraced the second Sabbath. The pastor elect was vigorously seconded and helped by his dear people. A quiet, but very refreshing, time. Three members received by letter, and two on confession of faith. Three infants and one aged disciple received the ordinance of baptism.

At Pineville:—The Lord's Supper was administered on third Sabbath with preparatory services beginning, as above, on Thursday night. Here again the pastor elect was assisted by his dear flock, who came out with commendable diligence, notwithstanding the pressing demands of this busy season. Bro. G. S. Robinson, a former pastor, was also present at most of the services, and lent such assistance as his health permitted—leading us to the throne of grace, and on Sabbath, distributing the wine at the table. Two were received on examination, and one infant baptized.

The outlook in both churches is encouraging; the people seem to be thoroughly in earnest, and with God's blessing resting on us, His work will surely prosper.

Acknowledgment:—On the 22d of August the recently refitted and repainted manse of Bethlehem church was occupied for the first time by the pastor and his family. It was not long before the good people of the congregation began to drop in and leave behind them tokens of their mindfulness of the comfort and well-being of the minister of their preacher's house. They did not take us by storm, they did not come all at once, but one at a time, or two or three together they called on us and stocked our larder for many days to come. Flour, meal, coffee, fowls, canned goods, preserved fruits, vegetables, butter, milk, meats, melons, &c., in abundance. One good elder gave us a pig; another good lady, a good sized shoat. A venerable elder came over the morning after we moved with his horse loaded down with vegetables, melons, &c., and unloaded. And still they come. Almost every day some one sends or brings something of a substantial sort. They seem determined in the goodness of their hearts that their minister and his family shall not lack for the necessaries of life. May the Lord bless these good people in all their ways, and give their pastor grace to be as faithful in ministering to them in spiritual things as they are mindful to minister to him and his in temporal things.

Installation at Bethlehem:—On Sunday, Sept. 9th, a commission of Roanoke Presbytery met at Bethlehem church, Prince Edward county, to install Rev J. M. W. Elder as pastor. Rev. C. C. Hersman, D. D., LL.D., of Union Theological Seminary presided, preached and propounded the usual constitutional questions. The sermon was a very powerful one, and was attentively listened to by a large and appreciative congregation. Rev. T. C. Johnson, D. D., of Union Seminary, who had been appointed to charge the pastor, was unavoidably absent. Rev. W. McC. Miller, of Smithville, who had been appointed to charge the people, delivered both charges. It has never been our privilege to hear more appropriate and forcible addresses of the kind. The charge to the pastor was a marvel of Scripturalness, while that to the people was remarkable for its clearness and fullness, while at the same time it was brief.

At the conclusion of the services the members of the congregation, together with a number of members of other churches and denominations who frequently worship at Bethlehem, came forward and welcomed the newly-installed pastor by heartily shaking his hand.

School Notice.

MRS W. M. PARSLEY will open a school for small children at the residence of Mr. John McLaurin, 619 Orange St., on Monday, October 8th. Terms moderate. This change of location will give the children the benefit of an excellent play-ground.

THE DEATH OF DR. J. S. COZBY.

We have just received the inttelligence of the death of Rev. J. S. Cozby, D. D., pastor of the Aveleigh Presbyterian church of Newberry. Dr. Cozby has been in feeble health for some weeks, and we have been hoping for better tidings of his condition. But it has seemed best to the great Head of the Church to call him away from his earthly labors to to his heavenly reward, and his Church and family are left to mourn his loss, with that chasteued sorrow which the Christian is permitted to feel. We have lost a dear personal friend in our departed brother, the Church has been deprived of one of its most faithful pastors, attractive preachers, and intelligent presbyters. Dr. Cozby has been in Newberry about seven years, having been for fifteen years previous pastor of Mount Zion church in Harmony Presbytery, where the writer succeeded him as pastor. Readers of this paper have been familiar with his clearly written and able articles, which exhibited not only his keen descrimination but his lovely Christian spirit.

The sympathy of many hearts will go out to his bereaved family consisting of his wife; two married daughters both wives of ministers, Mrs. G. G. Mayes, and Mrs. S. C. Byrd: and two sons, nearly grown. And the prayers of our Synod will go up for the Church thus called to mourn the loss of its pastor, that affliction may be sanctified, and the chief Shepherd himself may be with the bereaved flock.

[This was given out last week for publication, but overlooked.]

MEETINGS IN LUNENBURG COUNTY, VA.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

On the night of Tuesday, July 24th, Prof. Sommerville of Hampden-Sidney College and the writer began a series of meetings at Lunenburg C. H., Virginia, where we have a little handful of zealous Presbyterians and a small organization, and services were held day and night for a little over a week. At first our congregations were small, but increased at each service till they filled the house. Our little flock was much encouraged, and Christians of all denominations edified. On Sabbath, July 29th, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, among the communicants being Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians and one or two Baptists, all partaking together of the elements commemorating the dying love of a common Lord. There was one addition to the church, a bright intelligent young girl just budding into womanhood. One adult and one infant were baptized.

One very encouraging feature of the meeting was that we gained a stronger hold on the people of the community than we have ever had there. Sufficient funds were raised to modernize the old-fashioned pulpit and to purchase two neat oak chairs to furnish it, and to enclose the church lot with a neat, substantial board fence.

On Saturday night, August 18th, protracted services were begun at Nutbush, a mission point seven and half miles from Lunenburg C. H., where I have an evening appointment once a month at a brush arbor. Mr. Chas, C Anderson, a recent graduate of Hampden-Sidney College and a candidate for the ministry under care of Roanoke Presbytery, stood by me here, rendering efficient service in helping with the singing and leading in prayer, while I did the preaching. For a week large and increasing congregations assembled day and night to hear the gospel. There were six professions and two reclamations, all men except two, and nearly all young men.

This is a very interesting mission field, not more than one-third of the men in the community having any church connection at all. The people are favorably inclined to us, and they are anxious to have preaching. They are beginning to build a house of worship, having a good part of the lumber on the ground and part of the money and labor pledged to put up the building, which when completed, will be used by different denominations. Will not some of the readers of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN help them.

I will gladly receive for them any amounts that may be sent me. Reader, how much will you give to help these people to build a plain house in which to worship the Lord?

J. M. W. ELDER.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Concord Presbytery, (Official): This Presbytery met at Bethphage church, Cabarrus county, N. C., September 11th, 1894, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. Jno. M. Rose, Jr., from Jude, verse 3.

Rev. R. P. Pell, was chosen moderator and Rev. J. A. Ramsay and Ruling Elder S. C. Raukin, temporary clerks.

The pastoral relation of Rev. D. Munroe with the Newton church was dissolved at his own request.

Rev. D. T. Towles, of Mecklenburg and Rev. B. F. Wilson, of Enoree Presbytery were present and were invited to sit as corresponding members.

The Presbytery heard Bro. Towles in regard to his work as Synodical Colporteur and "resolved that he be heartily commended to our people in the work which he represents."

Morganton was chosen as the place for the next regular meeting of Presbytery, on Tuesday before the 4th Sabbath of April, 1895, at 7.30 p. m.

The matter of amending the Book of Church Order in regard to ordination in Foreign fields was consented to and advised.

The question of "Licensure and Ordination" was referred to a committee to report at the next regular meeting of Presbytery.

The Presbyterial Sermon, on the Observance of the Sabbath, was preached by Rev. A. T. Graham.

Rev. R. W. Boyd was heard in the interest of the Orphans' Home. The following resolutions were adopted in reference to this cause:

Resolved 1st. That the pastors be urged to present the matter of an additional building for the boys to their congregations as soon as possible and that an effort be made by the sessions to draw out the gifts of the people.

2d. That the session be asked to select some one in each congregation to secure subscribers to the little paper, "Our Fatherless Ones."

The First Presbyterian church, Concord, N. C., presented a call for the services of Rev. W. C. Alexander, of Orange Presbytery. Candidate T. W. Lingle, was examined on his Literary Course and the examination was sustained as satisfactory.

The following extract is from the report of the Committee of Education: "It is with sincere grief we report that one of our candidates, by no means the least promising, has recently been called, as we trust, to a higher service for the Master in Heaven. After successfully finishing his course in college last June, Hugh K. Parks returned to his father's home where in a few days he died. May the Head of the Church call others to take his place."

We ask Presbytery to permit us to grant aid to such of these candidates as may need it; and urge upon Presbytery the importance of raising our quota of $700, to the Assembly's Treasury for this cause."

Mr. Walter E. Furr, was taken under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry, making thirteen candidates now under care of this Presbytery.

Presbytery directed that all collections taken during August be forwarded at once to the Treasurer.

The Home Mission Committee was authorized to ask the churches in the Presbytery for a special contribution of five cents per member to liquidate a pressing debt due the Church Erection Work. Presbytery adjourned to meet during Synod at Greensboro.

W. R. MCLELLAND,
Stated Clerk.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Enoree Presbytery: Held its fall sessions at Elam Springs, the famous watering place in Spartanburg county, S. C., Sept. 11th to 18th. Rev. Dr. T. M. McConnell, of Greenville was moderator, and Rev. H. W. Burwell, of Fairview, assistant clerk. Fourteen ministers and about thirty elders were in attendance. The reports from the churches were generally encouraging. Six young men were received as candidates for the ministry, and according to a rule of Presbytery, notice was served by two others of their intention to apply. One of these received, Mr. S. C. Todd, of Laurens, was afterwards licensed to preach, as an extraordinary case. Licentiates J. E. Milner and D. M. Fulton and candidate S. R. Fowler, were dismissed to the care of other Presbyteries. And Licentiate C. E. Robertson was ordained to the full work of the ministry, to become pastor of Limestone and Spartan Mills churches, for which he is soon to be installed.

The overture sent down by the Assembly for a change in the Form of Government with regard to the ordination of evangelists in the foreign field, was unanimously adopted. That concerning Licensure and Ordination was referred to a committee who are to report upon it at the spring meeting, to be held at Mt. Tabor church, Greers, S. C.

The meeting was a very earnest, busy and pleasant—the business being finished in two days. L.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Presbytery of Pee Dee: Met at Blenheim, S. C., September 13th, with five ministers and seven elders in attendance. At the request of Rev. J. G. Richards, the last moderator present, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. H. M. Brearly, from Eph. 5: 14.

Rev. S. E. Bishop, was elected moderator and Maj. M. McR. McLauchlin, of Cheraw, temporary clerk. The committee appointed at last meeting to organize a church at Dillon, reported that at present the way is not clear and asked for an extension of time. Rev. S. E. Bishop, reported that owing to failing health he had been obliged to resign his charge, but that he was now able to resume work and desired a field of labor. The pastoral relations existing between Rev. W. G. F. Wallace and the Carolina and Kentyre churches were formally dissolved and a letter of dismission granted him to the Presbytery of St. Johns, Mr. Wallace had already gone to his new field. The consideration of the change proposed in the form of Licensure and Ordination was postponed to the spring meeting of Presbytery. After a rising vote of thanks to the hospitable people of Bleuheim the Presbytery adjourned to meet at Carolina church on Thursday, before the full moon in April, at 8 p. m.

A. H. MCARN,
Stated Clerk.

Upper Missouri: Commended the Bible Cause to the churches. Overtured Synod against the proposed change in the boundary line between this Presbytery and Lafayette. Committed the Licensure question for report in the spring.

Montgomery Presbytery: Rocky Mount, where the Presbytery met this fall is on the Southern edge of Montgomery's territory, and difficult of access to many of the delegates; yet the attendance of ministers and elders was very good. The whole meeting was characterized by hearty interest in the business of the church; and was made more enjoyable by excellent preaching.

Rev. T. W. McCorkle opened the session with an earnest sermon from the text, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" After which Rev. L. W. Irwin was chosen moderator. A resolution to assign every minister to evangelistic work, which should involve, if practicable, a week's protracted service, evoked much discussion, and though the original motion was lost, a substitute was adopted, which accomplished the purpose aimed at. Mt. Horeb church of Lexington Presbytery presented a call for the services of Rev. John Ruff, and the Presbytery was much exercised to determine its duty in the matter; being very unwilling to part with one of its most useful and most loved pastors. It was decided, however, to cite the Peaks church to show cause why the pastoral relation should not be dissolved.

The free-conversation upon the state of religion was particularly interesting. Every member of the body took part in it; and the reports showed that most of the churches were growing healthily.

Dr. Rawlings preached the doctrinal sermon upon Family Religion and it was ordered that the sermon be published for distribution among the churches of the Presbytery.

Rev. J. M. Holladay, the useful pastor of the church where we were meeting, informed Presbytery of his desire to accept a call to the Blacksburg church and the matter was under consideration when your correspondent left. Montgomery Presbytery generally throws life and spirituality into its meetings and this session at Rocky Mount was better than usual.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Abingdon Presbytery: Met in Tazewell, Va., Sept. 11th, and was opened with a sermon by the Rev. J. E. Wool. Rev. G. W. Painter, missionary to China, was elected moderator. Rev. P. D. Stephenson, D. D., was dismissed to Winchester Presbytery, and Rev. B. A. Pendleton, to East Hanover. Candidate J. H. Heuderlite was received from Enoree Presbytery. Rev. Jonas Barclay, of Mecklenburg, was introduced as a corresponding member.

Licentiate J. B. Morton was called to the pastorate of the Bruner Creek church and order taken for his ordination and installation, the first Sabbath in Oct. next.

Rev. G. W. Painter and Rev. I. S. Anderson were elected principal and alternate to the next General Assembly.

Thursday evening was devoted to the cause of Foreign Missions. In connection with the report of the committee, Rev. G. W. Painter, our returned missionary, delivered an interesting lecture on the mission work in China, to a large and appreciative audience. The commission of Home Missions reported encouraging work in our bounds during the summer months.

Presbytery extended its heartfelt sympathy to the Rev. T. P. Barclay in his sore bereavement and great sorrow.

A committee was appointed to arrange for the visitation of Bro. Painter to our vacant churches with a view of awakening in them a higher appreciation of the importance of the work in the foreign field.

The greater part of Friday was given up to the discussion of matters pertaining to the Sabbath-school within our bounds. A pastoral letter was sent down to the churches to be read from the various pulpits.

The Second church, of Bristol, was chosen as the place for the next meeting, and the time fixed for the Tuesday before the first Wednesday in May, 1895.

The committee on the Minutes of the General Assembly, reported, recommending that paragraph 40 of the Book of Church Order be answered as recommended by the Assembly, fenced, however, with proper restrictions. Final action was deferred to the spring meeting and the Rev. Messrs. Jones and Gray were appointed to frame a suitable response.

Touching the licensure and ordination of probationers for the ministry, a committee was appointed consisting of Rev. I. N. Naff, Rev. Alfred Jones, Rev. P. H. Irvin and Hon. I Hudson and Hon. F. B. Hutton to report at the spring meeting.

An adjourned meeting was ordered for Saturday before the first Sabbath in October next, with a view of receiving the Rev. Mr. Wharton and taking the necessary steps, if the way be clear, for his installation over the Sinking Spring church.

Thanks of Presbytery were tendered the church and citizens of Tazewell for their abundant hospitality during its sessions.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the Maple Grove church on Saturday before the first Sabbath in October, at 11 a. m.

I. N. NAFF,
Stated Clerk.

Presbytery of Louisville: Rev. E. H. Amis, moderator. Licentiate F. H. Kean was ordained and order taken for his installation at Taylorsville on the fourth Sabbath of September and at Jeffersonville, the second Sabbath of November. The overture on Evangelism in Foreign fields was committed to Rev. Messrs. Clyce and Muller and Mr. S. Caye, Jr., and that on Licensure and Ordination to Rev. Messrs. Converse, Lyons and Hunter and Mr. Escott—both to be reported at spring meeting.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson I.

Oct. 7th.—Jesus at Nazareth.

Luke iv. 16–30. Commit vss. 16–19.

Golden Text. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh.—Heb. xii. 25.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The beginning of the Galilean ministry is distinctly marked in all four gospels: Matt., iv. 12–17; Mark i. 14, 15; Luke iv. 14, 15; John iv. 1–3, 43–45. Read these passages carefully. The only question is whether the return mentioned in John is the same as that mentioned in the other gospels. The view that it was not, but was earlier, is advocated in the article we published last week. Read that paragraph carefully. That view is mentioned by many of our best scholars. It supposes a period of quiet and a return of the disciples to their homes. Then Jesus goes up to the Passover—the feast of John v. 1, and hearing of the imprisonment of John returns to Galilee and opens the Galilean ministry. We prefer, on the other hand the view that it is the same return in all four gospels. The imprisonment of John, then, comes between John iii. 23, 24, and iv. 1, and the return mentioned in the latter verse was not because Jesus did not wish to be a party to a rivalry the Pharisees were exciting (as involved in the former view) but because his increasing success was liable to bring upon him the same fate. The events that we are about to study occurred between this date—which was four months before harvest—and the Passover. The Sabbath question seemed to arise at the Passover, John v. 16, and to follow him back into Galilee before the harvest, which began at the Passover, was completed, Matt. xii. 1; Luke vi. 1. The meaning of the expression in Luke "second Sabbath after the first" is in doubt, but it probably indicates a date soon after the Passover Sabbath. This enables us to place the Passover of John v. after the visit to Nazareth, the call of the four, the first preaching tour, and the beginning of opposition in Galilee.

One other point remains to be settled. The visit to Nazareth now mentioned must not be confounded with a later visit recorded in Matt. xiii. 53-58; Mark vi. 1–6. Yet it was not the very beginning of his Galilean ministry for allusion is made to works at Capernaum, Luke iv. 23. He had healed the nobleman's son (John iv. 46) and done other preaching and healing but had not taken up his residence there, Luke iv. 31; Matt. iv. 13.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson:

1. The scene—the famous preacher for the first time in his own home, standing to read, the roll of the book, sitting to expound, the eager interest of the people, the gracious manner of the speaker, vss. 16, 17, 20, 22.
2. The text. Messiah's programme and mission, vss. 18, 19, compare Is. lxi 1, 2.
3. The sermon begun and interrupted, vss 21, 22.
4. The warning. Privilege is not salvation vss. 23–27.
5. The rejection, vss. 28, 29.
6. The departure, vs. 30.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation.

Vs. 16. As his custom was. Jesus honored the religious services of His day. They were defective but instead of despising them He improved them.

Stood up. Not only the reader, but the congregation stood for the reading of God's word—compare Neh. viii. 4, 5.

Vs. 17. The book of....Esaias. The book was in the form of a roll. Esaias is the Greek form of Isaiah This may have been the lesson for the day, thought that is not certain. Even if it was we cannot argue from it certainly as to the date, for the Jewish lectionaries extant may not be so ancient as this.

Vss. 18, 19. The passage varies from the O. T. form. Our Lord doubtless read from the Hebrew, but Luke writing in Greek took the passage from the Septuagint. The clause "to set at liberty them that are bruised" is from Is. lviii. 6 which was also before the Lord's eye as He read.

Anointed me. The word Messiah is in Hebrew "the Anointed." Mr. Drummond happily terms this passage, "The Programme of Christianity." It is the mission of Christ and His gospel to heal the sorrows of earth by healing its sin.

Vs. 20. Closed the book, by rolling it up. The Minister, i. e., the attendant; and sat down, the attitude of an authorized teacher. Paul, a stranger, when called on to speak in the synagogue, stood in his place, instead of sitting on the platform, Acts xiii. 16. He seems, from the Gentiles, to have adopted the habit of standing always, but Christ sat, Matt. vi. 1; xiii. 1.

Vs. 21. This day. When Christ comes to us, the kingdom that He inaugurates, with all its blessings, comes. How we should hasten that kingdom in the world!

Vs. 21. The gracious words. The preceding verse was evidently only the beginning—"he began to say"—and was followed by an exposition of the blessings of the kingdom that was so tender and comforting as to win the hearts of His hearers, until the note of discord was struck in the last words of the verse that gave expression to the petty jealousy of narrow minds, that at last turned the scale against Him.

Vs. 23. Physician, heal thyself. A proverbial expression something to the same effect as, "charity begins at home." If He is the great Healer and wonder-worker of which they have heard, why does He not do something for His own place.

Vs. 24. Proverb is answered with proverb, and He shows that the barrier is in their own hearts. Compare the statement of His subsequent visit Matt. xiii. 58.

Vss. 25–27. Read the O. T. [illegible] Kings xvii, and 2 Kings v. Elias is Elijah; Sarepta, Zarephath; Eliseus, Elisha. The incidents show that proximity and privilege do not bring blessing unless improved. Divine sovereignty in the bestowment of grace is also implied.

Vss. 28, 29. For a similar effect of a similar utterance by Paul see Acts xxii. 21–23. The precipice spoken of has been noted by all travellers

Vs. 30. The miraculous power that because of their unbelief He could not bestow in blessing, He displays in His escape from them. Other passages show that He led a "charmed life" until His hour was come, John yiii. 20, 59; x. 39. And at the last He tells Pilate that even then He could have no power against Him except it were given him of God, John xix. 11.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson, embodying, as far as you can, these explanations.

Fifth Step. Illustrate Christ's "Programme" from the recorded events of His life:

1. The gospel preached to the poor.
2. Healing the broken-hearted.
3. Delivering the captives (of Satan).
4. Giving sight to the blind—(a) physically, (b) spiritually.

Sixth Step. Lay to heart the sin and danger of rejecting Christ: Ponder (better commit to memory) the hymn

"Behold a stranger at the door."

What can we do to carry out Christ's programme in the world?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

After fixing the place of the lesson in the history get from the scholars the story, adding such touches as will make it vivid. Call for incidents under the Fifth Step and have them looked up and read in the class (having previously prepared yourself with a list). Press home the points of the Sixth Step, and the importance of committing oneself (1) To receive Christ. (2) To serve Him by carrying out his plans.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS 100—SEP. 13.

Note. Minute details or events closely and necessarily associated are placed under one head. The value of the whole is 12, and one-half is taken off for each event omitted or placed in the wrong order. We omit references as the events are easily found from the titles. Three periods of our Lord's life are covered.

PART I. Thirty years of Private Life.

1. Annunciation to Zacharias.
2. Annunciation to Mary.
3. Visit of Mary to Elizabeth.
4. Birth and circumsion of John.*
5. Appearance of angel to Joseph.*
6. Birth of Jesus at Bethlehem.
7. Vision and visit of the Shepherds.
8. Circumsion of Christ.
9. Presentation in the Temple.
10. Visit of the Wise men.
11. Flight into Egypt.
12. Slaughter of the innocents.
13. Return and settlement at Nazareth.
14. Boyhood and visit to Jerusalem.

PART II. Opening events of ministry.

15. The ministry of John.
16. Baptism of Jesus.
17. Temptation in the wilderness.
18. Testimony of John.
19. First disciples.
20. First miracle.

PART III. Early Judean Ministry.

21. First Passover and cleansing of the Temple.
22. Visit of Nicodemus.
23. Preaching and baptizing in Judea and John's last testimony.
24. Departing into Galilee He gives the gospel to the Samaritans.

*The relative order of these two events cannot be fixed with certainty.

Correct answers have been received as follows—the number is the value earned on question 100.

Several gave the events only down to the departure into Galilee mentioned in John i. 43. Had they taken in the fact that this was a review of the whole quarter they could not have made that mistake.

Chesapeake: Rev. A. B. Carington, moderator. A call from the First [illegible] ville, was placed in the hands of Rev. T. H. Rice, Jr., and declined. The Assembly's overture on ordination in the Foreign field was adopted; that on Licensure declined.

South Carolina: Questions sent down from the Assembly docketed for spring session.

Lafayette: Adopted the proposed amendment anent Licensure and expressed a willingness to go even further in modifying the requirements for licensure. Expressed dissatisfaction with the Assembly's action in the "Sadie Means Case." Appointed an ad interim committee to consider the action of the Assembly respecting Young People's Associations.

Presbytery of Potosi: Recommends formation of Ladies' Missionary Societies in the churches. Authorizes employment of a local evangelist till next meeting. Overtnre respecting Licensure and Ordination was rejected by an almost unanimous voie. Synod was overtured:

1. Requesting that Synod's Home Mission Committee be instructed to maintain the evangelistic work as in the past, through Synodical and Presbyterial Evangelists, and that if local evangelists are employed it shall not be through the curtailment of the work as first inaugurated.

2. That Synod's Committee be requested to place one evangelist under the direction of the Home Mission Committee of Potosi Presbytery for at least half his time.

Sabbath School Convention.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

According to a recommendation of Agent of Sabbath-schools, offered at spring meeting of Orange Presbytery, there was held today from 10 a. m., till late hours in the evening, a Sabbath-school Convention. Rev. W. S. Campbell, was made moderator with A. T. Whitsett clerk. The programme which was a very full one was taken up. The first order was oral reports from schools. Thirty-two Sabbath-schools were reported, twelve of which were Mission Sabbath-schools. Seven of the Mission Sabbath-schools are in Stokes county, in Bro. Miller's field of work. Some thirty or thirty-two churches did not send up any report, among them, some of the large or strong churches. All the reports were good that were sent in and showed a grand work being done. The different topic were well handled and all seemed to be benefited by the warm talks from some of our best Sabbath-school men and it is hoped great and lasting good was done.

A. T. WHITSETT,
Secretary.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rev. Dr. Frank L. Reid, President of Greensboro Female College, and for many years editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate died at his home in Greensboro at 5 o'clock on last Monday. He was in his 43rd year. Dr. Reid had been very successful in his editorial work and was very much beloved by those who knew him.

The Seaboard Air Line it is said broke the record last Friday by running a train from Portsmouth to Raleigh 180 miles in 195 minutes.

Judge Victor C. Barringer, formerly of Charlotte but who has resided in Egypt for the last twenty years as a judge of the International Court of Appeals, representing the United States in that capacity, has returned to this country. He does not know where he will make his home.

Monroe Enquirer: The sorghum crop in this county will be remarkably large. Cane is being ground now, and molasses makers are busy.

Mount Airy News: A gentleman estimates that in the last few weeks as many as fifty cows have died within a radius of ten miles of Mount Airy. The disease seems to be some kind of distemper, the exact nature of which is not known.

Raleigh Visitor: The Mills Wagon Company's Factory is now running on full time. Orders for wagons are now pouring in. It is decided to increase the force, as it is necessary to turn out nearly ten wagons a day to keep up with the demand. From 35 to 40 employes are to be put at work.

Rocky Mount Argonaut: Mr. W. H. York, of Hilliardstone? planted 50 acres of tobacco this year. For this fifty acres an agent of D. Y. Cooper, of Henderson, offered him $7,500, tobacco to be taken as it lay in the pack house. Mr. York wisely refused the offer, as he proposes to get $10,000 for the same tobacco in Rocky Mount.

Greensboro Patriot: Mr Daniel Dennis, living on Horsepen creek, near Guilford Battle Ground, found a big land terrapin in 1870 near the site of the old Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley stockade. He cut his name on the terrapin, and since that time he has seen it twice, the first time in 1892, when he again cut his name on its shell, and the last time on September 11th, when it was found by Miss Mary Dennis. During those twenty-four years it has not increased in size or weight, as eye-witnesses can testify.

FOREIGN.

Da Gama is still closely watching events in Brazil, ready to take a hand at revolution as occasion will admit.

Cholera still prevails alarmingly in Russia. Two hundred and forty-five cases the first fortnight of September, with ninety-six deaths at St. Petersburg.

DOMESTIC.

The most disastrous fire in the history of Portland, Ore., occurred last Sunday. Property to the amount of $1,500,000 was destroyed, including railroad and steamer docks, and an electric light plant.

On last Sunday, Abbeville, Ga., was awakened and alarmed by the shrieking of mill whistles, the discharging of firearms and the creaking of timber. The floods had broken a boom at Russell's shingle mill and some thousands of feet of Cypress lumber was turned loose and went crashing down the stream. The lumber was worth $500.

Judge Ariel S. Thurston, at one time chief justice of the Supreme Court of New York who had held many positions of trust and was very wealthy broke his neck by falling down stairs. He was eighty-five years of age, very vigorous for his age and of perfectly sound mind. He died at Elmira.

A fire in the yard of the Queen and Crescent Railway Company of New Orleans damaged property to the extent of $20,000.

The Grand View hotel Bayview avenue at Atlantic Highlands, N. J., was destroyed by fire on last Saturday. It cost $100,000 ten years ago.

News comes from Madrid of the ordination of a Church of England bishop in Spain on last Sunday. Dr. Plunkett, of Dublin, consecrated the Rev. Senor Cabrera as the first protestant bishop of Mandrid. It is expected that the elevation of Senor Cabrera to the bishopric will cause a sensation in the Catholic world.

Near Red Springs, Sept. 20th, 1894, in his 37th year, Mr. W. R. McCALL, formerly a deacon in Dumbarton church of Pee Dee Presbytery, South Carolina. Only a few months ago he cast his lot with the Presbyterians here. His life was an exemplary one. He was the saw mill operator of whom mention was made in the Red Springs "Scotch Scion," (and copied in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN) as assembling all hands and commencing business every morning with public prayer. He died as he lived a trusting servant, leaving a wife and four children to the mercy of God. J. FOR THE FAMILY.

THE CHAPTER ABOUT THE LITTLE LAD'S MOTHER.

(Proverbs xxxi.)

"Mother, the chapter was all about you!"
Spoke the dear little lad, with eyes so blue,
And gleams of golden sunshine on his hair,
Running breathlessly to his mother's chair.
That chapter the teacher read us to-day,
She smiled when she finished it, why, Paul?"
I told her, because you excel them all.

"I know you do, mother, your words are wise,
The law of kindness shines out in your eyes;
You stretch out your hand each day to the poor,
With something to eat, or to wear, I'm sure.
And you look well after your household ways,
Your husband—dear father—gives you great praise;
I hear him tell auntie he couldn't have found
Another such wife in the whole world 'round.

"Your children are proud to rise up and call
You blessed, for you're the best mother of all,
You never do wrong, you always are good;
That is the reason why I understood
The chapter so well, told teacher I knew
That she had been reading all about you."
Yes, blessed that mother, whose child could pay
Tribute to her in such beautiful way.

In the Temple Ahov Salem, Thatford avenue, Brooklyn, was witnessed, on the Jewish Sabbath, 10th inst., a ceremony which, as a rule, does not take place oftener in this country, at least, than once in half a century. The ceremony under the Mosaic law consisted of the releasing of Betsy Rikish from her obligations to her brother-in-law, Israel Silberstien of Belmont avenue, near Christopher street.

With a view to this release, Betsy Rikish came from the government of Lomza, in the interior of Russia, two months ago, and, after serving the prescribed probation by living under the roof of Abraham Goldleaf and having her bonds cut by Rabbi Wistinetsky, will now return to Russia, there to marry a rich railroad contractor.

According to the Mosaic law, when a married man dies without leaving issue to inherit his name and property, if he has a brother surviving, his widow has a right to go to him, and become his wife. If he refuses, certain penalties are attached, and if she neglects to make the offer she cannot marry again.

Since Israel Silverstein came to this country his brother Abraham died in Misnitz, Russia, and, as the family is an ancient rabbinical one and strictly orthodox, Mrs. Rikish felt bound in conscience to go through the ordeal, for an ordeal it is.

According to the law of this State and country Israel Siberstein could not marry his sister-in-law Betsy.

At 2 o'clock all the parties concerned, with their friends, assembled in the temple, the widow Rikish in bridal array, with four deacons and two witnesses, who were prepared to testify that the woman's husband was dead.

A very important part of the testimony was a shoe, which rested beside the talmud and scroll of the law of the pulpit. The shoe was made of calfskin, and had for ties two ribbons made of parchment, knotted in eleven places.

Brother-in-law Silberstein had one of his feet bare and this, having been washed by the rabbi, was, so to speak, handed over to the sexton, who pared the nails and wiped it over with a holy towel. After this the rabbi, Wistinetsky, resuming possession of the foot, put the shoe on it and said:

"Are you willing to give this woman Chlitza?"

"I am," replied Silberstein.

"Why do you give this woman Chlitza?"

"Because she desires it."

"Woman, why do you want Chlitza?"

"Rabbi, I want to get married, and Chlitza gives me freedom," was the answer.

"Son of Israel," said the rabbi, turning to Silberstein, "give the visible sign of your acquiescence."

Silberstein took the shoe off his foot and handed it to the sexton, who placed it on the left foot of the applicant for Chlitza, or freedom.

"The shoe belongs to you," said the rabbi, "what will you do with it?"

"I shall do this, rabbi," replied Mrs. Rikish, briskly, kneeling on the floor, lifting her skirts six inches and proceeding unassisted to untie the eleven knots in the shoe string with the forefinger and thumb of her left hand.

The proceedings were watched with interest, as it was known that a Rothschild's chlitza was prevented in the last century by the failure of the applicant to untie the knots, which, however, so says tradition, were tied hard on purpose.

But the word fail is not in the lexicon of Mrs. Betsy Rikish of Lomza. With deft fingers she untied knot after knot, and when the eleventh knot was unraveled she stood boldly on her feet. "Now," she cried, throwing the slipper at her brother-in-law, striking him with it in the breast, "I am free."

"You are free," said Silberstein, bowing and praying.

"You are free," echoed the four judges or deacons.

"Woman of faith, you are free," said the rabbi, "and may the God of Abraham bless you." [illegible] and a feast, and the unique ceremony came to an end.—Boston Herald.

Things Useful.

A Use for Watermelon Rinds.—A writer in Harper's Bazar gives the following directions for preparing watermelon rinds, so that a nice sweet pickle is made from them: "Peel the rinds with a sharp knife that will take off the green skin evenly. Trim off, also, every trace of the pink flesh of the fruit, because it is too juicy to make a firm, crisp pickle. Then cut the strips of rind into small pieces, two or three inches long, and, placing them in a large earthen dish, sprinkle them lightly and evenly with salt. Cover the dish and let it stand over night. In the morning drain off the water that will have formed, rinse the rinds in cold water, and cook them in a steamer until a broom-splint will readily pierce them. Cooking the rinds by steam is an easy method, as they are less liable to burn than when cooked in the spiced vinegar. When the rinds are tender, take them out carefully with a skimmer and put them into a stone jar. Take good cider vinegar for the basis of the pickle. Allow a pound of sugar to a pint of vinegar, and add also half an ounce of stick cinnamon broken into inch pieces, and a half teaspoonful each of whole cloves and blades of mace. The whole amount of vinegar, sugar and spices used must of course depend on the quantity of rinds to be pickled, but a quart of vinegar is usually sufficient for the rinds of a medium-sized melon. Boil the vinegar, sugar and spices together vigorously half an hour, skimming off the froth, and pour the pickle boiling hot over the rinds. Press the rinds down under the pickle by means of an earthen plate or saucer, fasten the cover on, and tie a cloth over the whole. These pickles will be ready for use in two weeks."

A BAD TEMPER and a bad liver—you'll always find joined together. Make a note of this, and see if it isn't true.

Now, why not give your naturally sunny disposition a chance? Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets will do it for you. They correct your disordered liver, clear up your system, and make life look different to you. They do it in a pleasant way, too. They're the smallest, the easiest to take, and the most natural remedy.

Keep a vial of these tiny Pellets in your vest-pocket. They'll give you a permanent cure for Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Indigestion, Sick or Bilious Headaches, and every derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels.

The makers are so sure you'll be satisfied that they'll agree, if you're not, to return the money.

For twenty-five years these Pellets have sold on their merit. Why buy other pills, when P. P. P. are "guaranteed"?

There's nothing likely to be "just as good."

LITTLE MAIDENS.

How should little maidens grow
When they're ten or over?
In the sunshine and the air,
Wholesome, simple, fresh, and fair
As the bonnie pinks below,
And the happy clover.

How should little maidens speak
When they're ten or over?
As the birds do, and the bees,
Singing through the flowers and trees,
Till each mortal fain would seek
The merry-hearted rover.

How about her eyes and ears,
At this stage of growing?
Like the clear, unclouded skies,
Not too angry, nor too wise,
So that all she sees and hears
May be worth the knowing.

And the little maiden's heart?
Ah! for that we're praying,
That it strong and pure may grow;
God, who loveth children so,
Keep her from all guile apart,
Through life's mazes straying!

Early Sweetings.

O mamma, the early sweetings are ripe; grandpa said so. May I eat some? Please say yes," coaxed Marie.

Now Marie was quite sure that mamma would not say "yes," because she had been very ill, and mamma had brought her to grandpa's farm to see what pure air and sweet fresh milk could do for her. Marie was very much better, and able to run about again, but she still had to be very careful about what she ate.

"Marie, dear, you know that you must not touch an apple for a long time yet," answered mamma. "I am sorry for you, but you must wait until I tell you that it safe for you before you taste any fruit whatever."

Marie went out the house very slowly, and wandered off to the barnyard. The chickens were not about as they usually were. Old mother hen had taken them off on a hunt for grasshoppers. The cows were in the orchard lying in the shade of the trees, chewing their cuds and thinking lazily how warm it was, or so Marie thought they said.

From the barnyard gate Marie could see right over to the early sweeting tree. "What a nice seat the branches make!" she said to herself. "It's hot here, and there's nothing to play with. I'm going down to sit in the tree. I needn't eat any of the apples; of course I wouldn't."

While Marie was thinking this she had been going as fast as she could to the tree. "I wonder if any apples have fallen," she continued.

"Sure as I live, here are two. Those old cows sha'n't have them. My, how good they smell! I don't believe one would hurt me a bit. I heard grandpa say that apples were healthy food. Anyhow, one bite can't hurt me." And in went the pearly teeth, right through the skin into the sweet, juicy apple.

Suddenly, Marie stamped her foot, and threw both apples as far as she could throw.

"Get thee behind me, Satan," she said aloud, and ran out of the orchard.

"Theee! I'll not go into that orchard again till mamma says I may." And she kept her word.—Our Little Ones.

A LITTLE BARE-FOOTED TRAMP.

A True Story.

BY ELIZABETH P. ALLAN.

Robert Ellis, a six-year-old neighbor of mine, took off his blue sailor suit one night, put on his long white gown, said his prayers, and went to bed as usual in his own brass cot, in the little room next to his mother's.

But a queer thing happened to him in the night, as queer—it seemed to him when he waked up in the morning—as any thing they tell in wonder-books and fairy tales.

For instead of waking up in his brass cot, in the little blue papered and blue curtained room, he was in a wide, old-fashioned bed, with white dimity hangings: the room was four times as big as his own, and there were no curtains at all at the windows.

Perhaps that was one thing that waked him up so early, for the September sun was pouring into the room, as if had come to see what that strange boy was doing there.

And instead of the electric cars buzzing under his window, and the tramp, tramp of heeled shoes going by, he found himself listening to strange cluckings and quackings and cooings and bleatings, such as he had never heard before.

What had happened to him? He fairly squeezed his little memory to find out, and gradually a dim picture rose before him of being taken up out of bed, and hastily dressed and kissed and put in a dark carriage at the door, and jolted away forever and ever and ever, until he knew nothing more.

All this was like a confused dream; but one thing stood out clearly, and that was Aunt Jennie's saying as she kissed him at the carriage door: "Your Mother says be a good boy Rob, and ask God to bless Gracie and make her well."

Maybe Gracie was sick, and they thought he would make a noise and disturb her. But why should they send him away in the night, as if he were a dreadfully bad boy, without even letting him kiss mother good-by?

Besides he wouldn't have made a noise, if they had told him Gracie was sick; and about this time several big, hot tears rolled down on the great ruffled pillows of his new bed, and Rob felt so lonely and miserable, and his feelings were so hurt that the bright sunshine might have turned black for all he cared.

Suddenly he started up in bed, as if somebody had called him. In fact a new idea was calling to him very loudly indeed, and he was in a great hurry to answer it. But the first thing was to get dressed, and this old-fashioned bed was so very high, that he didn't see how he was going to get out of it at all.

Fortunately there was a chair near the bedside, and he slipped down on it, and so to the floor, His blue suit was on the chair, and though he was not much used to dressing himself, he got into it pretty quickly, leaving his gown in a little white heap on the floor.

But he couldn't find his shoes and stockings, nor his hat, and he never in the world could lift that big water pitcher out of the basin.

"Never mind about shoes and stockings," Rob said to himself, "and never mind about my hat; as for washing my face, Bridget says tramps never wash their faces, and I can wash mine tomorrow."

He managed to turn the brass knob of the door, and stole down the wide, slippery stairs. His little, bare feet made no noise, and besides it was quite early, and nobody was awake in the big house except the servants.

The housemaid had opened the doors and windows, and swept the matting, then she had gone back to the kitchen to sit and chat with cook, while she "waited for the dust to settle,"

Nobody saw Rob slip out of the door, down the winding walk, and through the iron gate. An hour or two later, when everybody in the big house was on their heads with fright about him, a scared child was found who had met him on the road.

"He ast me wich was the way to Staunton," said the child, "an' I tole him ef he jist kept right on, that was the way."

Sure enough, Rob "kept right on," and by the help of some other friendly guides got safely to his father's door. His face was almost blistered with the sun, his poor, little feet were quite blistered with his tramp, and he was worn out with fright and distress and aching in his bones.

And then, after all his hard time, he had to be put in a carriage and sent right back to the country!

For little Gracie had scarlet fever, and as soon as the doctor had found it out, although it was midnight, he had made them send Rob out to a friend's country house, to keep him from taking the disease.

His mother could not see him, because she had had Gracie in her arms, but she had sent him the message about being a good boy and praying for Gracie.

"If you had only obeyed that message, Rob," said Aunt Jennie gravely, as they rode back to Woodside, "how much trouble and pain and anxiety you would have saved us all; you might have known your mother knew best."

Rob began to sob and cry at this, when suddenly Aunt Jennie put her arm around him, and drew him close to her.

"Never mind, little man," she said. "You've got to learn that lesson like the rest of us; we all know that our Heavenly Father knows best for us, and yet we sometimes fight against His plans, and try to run away from them. There! don't cry any more; you and I should try to remember that mother knows best, and that God knows best, and then everything will go well with us both."—Presbyterian.

DR. JAMES M. RAWLINGS, - EDITOR.
JOHN MCLAURIN, BUSINESS MANAGER.

SALUTATORY.

Permit me, in beginning the editorial work, to express my appreciation of the very cordial greeting given me by many persons in the Synod of North Carolina, and especially by the Presbyteries of Albemarle and Orange. As one grows older, it becomes a more serious matter to change one's residence, and sunder the friendships and associations of a lifetime. Feeling this keenly, and a little saddened at leaving the Synod of Virginia; this affectionate welcome is very grateful. Brethren, with all my heart, I respond to your kind salutation, and assure you that I shall labor hard to realize the pleasant expectations of usefulness that you have expressed with regard to my work. It is too early for the new editor to have formed any definite plans for the management of the paper. He is a novice, and for sometime will have his hands full learning, under Mr. MCLAURIN, the details of his new business. There are, however, two things that it would be well to say now.

1. The Synod has recognized this paper as "an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged," and it is the desire and purpose of the present editor, as it was of the former, to subserve the interests of the Synod in every way, and to this end we welcome to our paper the discussion of all questions affecting the polity and welfare of our Church. In this issue there is an able and comprehensive discussion of the Assembly's recommendation with regard to licensure, and an article on "the proposed removal of Union Seminary," is left over for next week. We are thankful for all these communications and hope that this paper will continue to be the arena for the discussion of important questions.

2. Some great editors, like Dr. BROWN and Dr. JETER, (of the Baptist church,) have been the expounders of the church's polity and the formers of its opinions—our aspirations, (to say nothing of our gifts), lie not that way. Rather do I yearn after excellence in pastoral work and desire to make the paper a helper in the spiritual life of every reader. Hindered by paralysis from preaching in the pulpit, I turn to the religious paper, as a means of continuing to preach the blessed gospel.

Years ago, I held protracted services in a little country church where the only light was from one little lamp, placed upon the pulpit. With the light right in the speaker's eyes, the congregation was unseen. The preacher knew that the people were there: believed that they were listening; and hoped that they were receiving a blessing. But it was impossible to know how the message was received; so he preached "by faith and not by sight." In like manner, in the editorial work, I miss the faces that have always answered to my preaching, and feel some loss in not perceiving whether anyone is interested in what I say. God grant that I may some day learn that unseen readers are giving heed to the truth, and are revived and taught by what I write.

JAS. M. RAWLINGS.

THE PROPOSED LAW FOR LICENSURE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Much has already been written about the proposed change in our law. This is an indication of the importance of the question. That the discussion has not become wearisome is an evidence of the interest felt in it by preachers and people. In this brief article to appear with others, the writer will not attempt to repeat arguments already presented with much force in favor of the change, but will simply suggest two statements.

1. No mere love of change has influenced those who for some years have advocated a change in our law. In a recent article in the Central Presbyterian this charge is made with much earnestness by one, whose words must always be heard with respect by his old pupils. Dr. Dabney thinks a madness for change has attacked many. But we claim to be conservative and loyal to the traditions as well as the law of the Church. We are loyal to the old yet not unwilling to adopt the new, when we are satisfied the new is better. He will not claim that the Old Book of Order is better than the new.

The exceeding great cry that has come from our vacant churches, the pressing demand in every Presbytery for more preachers, the impossibility of conserving the results of our evangelistic work, by manning the new and important points opened for us—these calls have started the inquiry, "What can we do to meet the necessities?" "What can we do to bring us more preachers?"

It is not that we must have them at any cost or of any fitness. We want more men, but we want them of more fitness than those of us now in the field possess. We want to open the way as wide as possible for their entrance on the work and, without lowering our standard, seek to thoroughly furnish them. We know many have been lost to our ministry by the difficulty of sustaining themselves during the long course of preparation.

It will not do to say if they had the right spirit and faith they would not be turned aside by difficulties; for we know some such at least, who have made earnest and self-denying ministers in other denominations.

It is true the Church needs to pray for more laborers in the great field; that Christians need with true faith to dedicate the children to this work. All agree that if the ministry is not God-given, better not have any. Yet it is also true that the Church must use the best means in her power to further her prayers. It is our earnest conviction that making licensure easy, and then offering opportunities for labor that will enable the probationers for the holy ministry to be largely self-sustaining, will further our prayers for more men without lowering the grade. This brings us to our second statement.

2. The proposed change does not lower our standard. This charge is honestly and earnestly made against the change. "It is not Presbyterianism to license men who have not been thoroughly trained." "This may be Methodism." It is not Presbyterianism to send out young men who do not know whether they are preaching heresy or truth. A young fellow with only the training of one year "is not fit to preach." Yet this is what every young fellow in every seminary we have in our Southern Church is doing every year, with the tacit if not avowed approval of his Presbytery. This practice has not lowered the grade of our ministry, nor been productive of evil in any way. By the unanimous action of all our Presbyteries as far as the writer knows, this has been judged a wise and helpful custom. We fail to see how licensing a man as a probationer and sending him out to do under the law what we are now doing without law, can lead to disregard of the law. How can the probationer say, "It is a matter of indifference whether I am thoroughly furhished for the ministry or not," when there stand before him the high requirements of the examination before ordination? One careful and faithful examination will hold our standard higher than two carelessly undergone. By our law and custom "extraordinary cases" are passed into our ministry with the most perfunctory examination. Under the new law they will be required to study under approved teachers before ordination. The standard is higher for them, and just as high as before for those who can take the full course of seminary training.

If we could be convinced that this change would lead to a lowering of our standard, nothing could induce us to accept it. There never was a time when higher scholarship, and more aptness to teach the Holy Scriptures was necessary. Never a time when the best opportunities for ripe scholarship needed more to be offered by the church, than now. The writer, who offered to the Assembly the suggestion to change the sessions to terms of six months, did so with the full belief that it would give us men more highly trained. Let each seminary have a special post graduate course during a part of the six months of vacation, for all who could take it. What would be the effect of that in ten years in elevating our scholarship? It is true all could not avail themselves of it. It would be a sinful waste of time for some to undertake it. The Holy Spirit divides to each as He will. He does not give the same qualifications to all. He calls some to be acceptable pastors and successful preachers, who could not make special attainments in learning. But to others such a course for special study, would afford the very opportunity needed to enable them to start in a line of study that would soon lift them to positions of influence and power. The Scotch Church has not found the six months session an injury to her scholarship. Instead of these proposed changes lowering our standard, they will help to meet the need so imperative now for higher scholarship, and will at the same time encourage more laborers to enter the field white for the harvest. This we confidently expect.

J. W. ROSEBORO.

EARLY LICENSURE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

1. For several years our seminary students have been spending their vacations preaching. In this way they supply vacant churches and mission points, make trial of their gifts, learn by experience what the active work of the ministry requires of them, and return to the Seminary with a more intelligent appreciation of, and a keener appetite for, the instruction there offered. I was a student-preacher myself, and for several years I have had unusual opportunities for studying the field work of student-preachers and for noting the reflex influence of such work upon the students so engaged. The result of my combined experience and observation is the decided conviction that student-preaching is an unqualified blessing both to the students and to the church at large.

2. But this preaching of students before licensure is contrary to our Book of Church Order. Our Book requires a candidate to be licensed prior to, and in order to, the trial of his gifts, and makes the examinations for licensure the same as those for ordination, examinations which no student is prepared to stand till the completion of his entire three years' study at the Seminary. There are therefore three, and only three, possible courses open to wit:

1st. To leave both our Book and our practice unchanged, and thus encourage lawlessness.

2nd. To conform our practice to our Book, by putting a stop to student-preaching and to all the benefits to students and Church at large which do accompany or flow from it.

3rd. To conform our Book to our practice, by changing the conditions of licensure so as to secure an earlier day for it, thus allowing our students to make lawful trial and exercise of their gifts during the course of their three years' preparation, instead of only at the end of it.

The proposed revision recommends this third course. It requires that the candidate for licensure be examined on the studies of his college curriculum, including Latin, Greek, philosophy, logic, rhetoric, ethics, the sciences, &c., and also on the system of doctrine contained in the Confession of Faith and the Shorter Catechism, and on his knowledge of the English Bible. Moreover a lecture or exposition of several verses of Scripture, and a sermon are required of him. This change of its conditions will enable a faithful student to obtain licensure after one year's study at the Seminary. According to the proposed revision the license so obtained is valid for only three years. This prevents the student from resting in his licensure and shirking the further studies necessary to ordination. Moreover the license is revocable at any time by Presbytery. This keeps him on his good behavior.

3. How will the proposed change affect our educational standard for the ministry? The practical effect of early licensure will be to lay the stress upon the final trials for ordination and thus to raise our educational standard. At present the examination for licensure are perfunctory, because the examiners know that in a few months or weeks, or perhaps days, the whole field is to be gone over again in the trials for ordination, when any defect of thoroughness may be remedied. The examinations for ordination are usually equally superficial, for the reason that the Presbytery has but recently examined the candidate on the same subjects and pronounced the result satisfactory. So that the practical tendency of our present system, as every observant Presbyter knows, is to make the trials for licensure a farce and those for ordination a mere formality. In the interests of a higher standard for the Presbyterian ministry I heartily favor the proposed revision.

The repeated charge that the revision will prove radical and revolutionary in its effects I see no sufficient ground for. It simply squares our Book, not with an untried and dangerous theory, but with our practice, a practice of ten years standing, the results of which even without the safeguards that the revision would erect, have been found by experience to be good and not evil. Prognostications of revolution and ruin we should ponder with care, but with equanimity, remembering that in history we read of not one single important improvement in human affairs against which the same cry was not raised.

EGBERT W. SMITH.

PREMATURE LICENSURE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It is unfortunate, to say the least, that the Assembly should ask the Presbyteries to join in a vote to change the constitution of the Church in order to correct certain evils in the practice of the Church. When it is proposed to change the constitution of the Church the issue should be distinct and unencumbered. The change should be considered on its merits and made only to rectify what is wrong in the law. There is danger in the present instance that the debate will run largely upon "evils" specified, and that attention will be withdrawn from the fact that a change is preferred in the constitution of the Church.

1. In view of this danger let us first consider whether the law on the subject of licensure is wrong. Does it need any change? Does it not express the true doctrine as to the nature and object of licensure? So far as this discussion is concerned, the question is limited by the proposed amendments to two points. The first is whether the standard of qualifications should be the same for licensure as for ordination. This is the case in the constitution as it now stands. The effect of the amendments, if adopted, will be to retain the present standard for ordination and to introduce a much lower one for licensure. The only question in the case is whether the requirements for licensure should be substantially the same as for ordination. The framers of our constitution said yes. It is fair to presume that they acted deliberately and had good reasons for their action. No one can read the books that go to make up the constitution of our Church without being impressed with the superior quality and wisdom of their authors. They doubtless intended to express by the high standard of qualification they adopted, their estimate of the dignity of the Christian ministry and the necessity of thorough training on the part of those who desire the office. And, so far as the question now at issue is concerned, they intended to make the constitution say that licensure and ordination are equally serious and important acts. This is manifestly the doctrine that underlies the identity of qualifications required. And we confess to the fact that we still think our fathers had the true doctrine on the subject. Ordination is a more complete investiture with the privileges and responsibilities of the office of the ministry; but so far as preaching the gospel is concerned they express the same thing. In each case authority to preach is conferred and the Church assumes responsibility for the utterances of the preacher. The second point at issue is, as to what should be taught in our Book as to the object of licensure. The Book as it now stands makes the object of licensure to be to authorize the licentiate to make trial of his gifts before the Church, that the people of God may determine whether or not he possesses requisite ministerial qualifications. The only question pending before Presbytery after licensure is whether the licentiate shall be invested with the full responsibilities of the ministry: and this is to be determined by the voice of the Church. In order that the Church may have the case fairly before it the licensure takes place at the end of the prescribed course of study, not near the commencement of the course. The point to be settled by the Church is whether the licentiate can preach the gospel, not whether he has qualities worth training. For this provision the amendments propose to make our Book say that licensure is in order to further training for the ministry. And here again we confess that we still think our fathers had the true doctrine. When the State licenses lawyers or doctors it gives authority to go to pleading law or practicing medicine. It is not deemed necessary to have a license until the time comes to go to work. And the further consideration obtains in the case of preachers, that they act on the call of God, made known in part through the voice of the Church.

2. Let us now look at the amendments as a remedy for the "evils" specified. What are the "evils" we are asked to remove by changing the constitution? They are: First. "A great tendency in the Church towards an increase of preaching by unlicensed men." Second. "A tendency in the Church to slight either the the examination for licensure, or the examination for ordination, or both, and a consequent tendency toward lowering of the standard of ministerial qualification."

We will embrace all we have to say on the amendments as a remedy for these evils in the single remark, that for the purposes specified they are unnecessary. The law of the Church, as we have it, is sufficient for the restraining of unlicensed preaching and upholding the standards of ministerial qualification.

Unlicensed preaching obtains in two forms in the view of the amendments: First. There are men traversing the country, and holding great meetings, who have no authority from the Church to preach. They are admirers of Mr. Moody, whose example is doing so much to break down the order of the Church. It is proposed to add a new clause to our Book covering the case of such men. But it will be useless. Such men know that their course is contrary to to the constitution as we have it. More law will not affect at all their course. They neither desire nor intend to receive license from our courts or the courts of any other church. To do so would identify them with some one denomination and so break up the union feature of their meetings. The other form of unlicensed preaching, in the view of the movers of the amendments, is that done by Seminary students. The Church has always made the distinction

CHISELLED.

A sunbeam, on its work of love intent,
Paused to impress a rough, uneven stone,
A shapeless mass, just from the quarry thrown;
And conscious of its power, heaven lent,
Essayed by light, and warmth to break the spell.
The earth, with impulse quick, obeys the call,
And yields, with lavish hand her treasures, all
The fairest thoughts that in her bosom dwell,
Exchanging in her life, the dark, for bright.
Not so the stone. Encased in grey cold gloom,
It lives apart, as silent as the tomb,
And darker grows, as from excess of light.

The form of beauty prisoned in the stone,
An artist's eye discerns. To loose the chain,
And free the bright ideal of his brain,
Patient he labors, day by day alone.
His chisel sharp—a surgeon's skillful knife,—
With steady hand he guides the hammer's blow
Until the quivering marble seems aglow
With loveliness and grace,—the gift of life.

So, blessed Master, spare no blow of Thine
That's best for us, no stroke of Thy sharp steel.
Our hearts, as cold as marble, cannot feel
The days of sunshine, warmth of love divine.
Conform us to Thy will, that we may stand
In faultless beauty, made anew by Thee,
In more than Eden's spotless purity,
Perfect, before Thee, chiselled by Thy hand.

INK SPOTS.

"Patriotism" said Dr. Johnson "is the last refuge of a scoundrel." One is inclined to think philanthropy is the last refuge of a crank.

"American Literature" in twelve large volumes, edited by Steadman and Miss Hutchinson. Yes! The American is much more pronounced in these volumes than the Literature; a good deal more of the one than the other.

Men who are propagating errors in religion, have a great horror of texts of Scripture—quote a text on them, they immediately begin to shuffle, talk about independent texts not of value, must take scope and whole tone of the Bible; so no doubt, a rat caught in a trap, if he could talk, would protest against any such curtailing of a gentleman's liberty, free air and open space, being the thing for a gentleman. A good deal of this is illustrated in Farrar's "Eternal Hope," repudiating the belief in eternal punishment; pin him down to a clear direct statement, and he begins to talk about mere separate texts and, as if one good, clear statement of a truth was not enough to confirm it if given by Inspiration.

Lord Brougham said: "I acquired my diction by hard labor, constant reading of old English authors. Swift and Addison I had by heart; then studying and translating Cicero and Demosthenes." Did any body ever acquire a rich style and full and varied diction in any other way? One whose mind is turned to this subject, can but notice how poor and thin is the language of so many, even good speakers and preachers. They too often seem satisfied with the commonest words for diction, and the most struggling style in general. Macaulay was right in saying the first rule of all writing to which all others must be subordinate, is—the "words used by speaker or writer must be such as most fully and precisely convey his meaning to the great body of readers or hearers." yet all this is compatible with great splendor of diction and general brilliance of style, as Macaulay illustrates most fully in his speeches and essays.

With all our schools and colleges and so-called culture at large, it is striking, how rare is good taste among men. "Not one educated man in one hundred knows good literature when he sees it." This only comes by constant reading of the best authors and the criticism of the best critics—a man may be educated and have good talents, yet not have good taste. "Just now parvenu science crass, boorish and overbearing as the parvenu generally is, has got the upper hand in education." He is the best teacher of English literature who creates a love of what is best in prose and poetry and educates the taste to detect it wherever found.

Canon Farror is a man of culture and scholarship, but he often wrecks and drowns himself in his wordy sea of sweetness. Sugary words run away with him. He never knows when to put a stop to his everlasting flow of treacle; the page, the book, the reader is overflowed and sticky with his sweetness long drawn out.

It was said of Isaac Taylor, "that he was a man of small inventive powers, but very great diffusive ones. And that such men possess great mastery of language, but are apt to be overmastered by it. Such men ought to read Tacitus and Bishop Butler. For a speaker, I know no better model than Webster's speeches. Here and there he may be too ponderous, but in the main, he has strength without hardness, and beauty without weakness, though it is a severe beauty, just a faint trace of the vine over the oak, or gleam of lightning on the dark cloud. Power of expression, power of argument, impassioned declamation, imagination, heroic recollection, pathetic apostrophe are all to be found in his best speeches.

Franklin in his Autobiography says: "He was disputatious in his youth, a very bad habit, making people often exceedingly disagreeable, besides souring and spoiling conversation. Persons of good sense, I have since observed, rarely fall into it, except lawyers, university men, and generally men of all sorts who have been educated and bred in Edinburgh. This last word, reminds of Macaulay saying of Athens: "Her temples have been given up to the successive depredations of Romans, Turks, and Scotchmen.

Franklin says his father frequently repeated a proverb of Solomon by way of encouraging industry: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business he shall stand before kings." He then adds: "I did not think this would ever be my case, yet I have stood before fire, and even had the honor of sitting down to dinner with one."

Is it not rather curious that rejectors of the Bible as a revelation from God should yet admit that Christian people are the best they meet. "Do men gather figs from thistles," says Carlyle: "As to the people I see, the best class of all are the religious, certain of them have taken kindly to me, in spite of my contradictions toward them. It teaches me again that the best of this class is the best one will find in any class. Ambitious, vain, political, literary and fashionable are to be avoided in comparison." Surely that must be the truth which when really taken in and lived upon, makes better people than aught else.

That is a telling thing on Leigh Hunt, who in the "Examiner" criticized Carlyle sharply, and especially was "afflicted with Carlyle's eulogy of thrift;" yet sent the next day to borrow two sovereigns of that same Carlyle. So worldly men often ridicule the saints and their religion, yet when they are about to die send for a clergyman to pray for them.

Carlyle on Macaulay: "Niagara of eloquent commonplace talk. Essentially commonplace man, all that was in him, now gone to tongue, a squat, thickset, low-browed, short grizzled little man of fifty. These be thy gods, oh Israel." How though if Macaulay had sketched Carlyle with that ever-going tongue of his in that broad, provincial Scotch Annandale accent?

"It is curious to watch the conceit of a generous and clever lad; there is something almost touching in that early exhibition of simplicity and folly."

* * *

Life has its tragedy, as well as its comedy. Nay the tragedy often lies in what seems the comedy.

* * *

"If Thomas Wharton had written nothing else but his epigram on "Sleep" that alone would perpetuate his fame, at least among scholars." So writes a distinguished author.

The epigram is very beautiful:

Somne veni; et quamquam certissima mortis imago es.
Consortem cupio te tamen esse tori.
Huc ades, haud abiture cito; nam sic sine vita vivere quam suave est—Sic sine morte mori.

* * *

"The joy of heaven is mainly a moral, a spiritual joy; and of the greatest happiness lies in the enjoyment of what we most love, then the best definition of heavenly happiness is, that it consists in the enjoyment of righteousness by those whose nature it is to love righteousness supremely."

He has spiritual discernment who has been made to see that he is a great sinner, and at the same time that Christ has become to him a very great Saviour. He sees great depths, and great heights. He sees how near down he once was to Hell, and how far up he now is toward Heaven.

"At the Day of Judgment will be two wonderful sights which the world never saw.

I. A great congregation of saints in which there will not be so much as one hypocrite. There was Cain in Adam's family,—a cursed Ham in Noah's, a treacherous Judas in Christ's own family; but in that company, there will be none but sealed ones, members of Christ. This is a sight reserved for that day.

II. All the godly upon one side. There shall be no more division, no more separate standing among those who belong to Christ. One fold as well as one Shepherd." E. H. H.

PROCEEDINGS OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

(OFFICIAL.)

The 249th Session of Orange Presbytery was held at Burlington, N. C., Sept., 11th–14th, 1894, and in the absence of the Moderator, Rev. M. McG. Shields, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., on John 21: 58.

(A Sabbath-school Convention, ordered by the Presbytery was held during the day of the 11th, and was enjoyed by all the members of the Presbytery.)

Present: Eighteen ministers and nineteen ruling elders.

Officers: Rev. R. W. Culbertson, moderator, and Rev. W. S. Campbell and Rev. R. E. C. Lawson, temporary clerks.

Candidates: Samuel H. Hines and Clement Rogers were examined, and taken under the care of the Presbytery.

Licentiate: J. D. Currie was received on certificate from Fayetteville Presbytery.

Calls: From Chapel Hill and New Hope churches for pastoral services of Mr. J. D. Currie were placed in his hands. From Hillsboro, Fairfield and Little River churches for services of Licentiate H. S. Bradshaw, of Holston Presbytery; and from Mebane and Bethlehem churches for services of Licentiate H. C. Kegley, of Harmony Presbytery, were retained by the Presbytery until an adjourned meeting, to be held at Chapel Hill the 28th of this month, when these brethren will be received, ordained and installed if the way be clear. A call from Leaksville church for the pastoral services of Rev. C. W. Robinson was placed in his hands and declined.

Resignation: Rev. W. C. Alexander tendered his resignation of the pastorate of Mt. Airy church. Rev. A. Currie was granted permission to labor outside our bounds for one year, and Rev. C. W. Maxwell for six months.

Memorial: A memorial paper in reference to the death of Rev. J. L. Currie was offered by Rev. Dr. J. H. Smith and ordered to be published.

Davidson College: And also "The High School" at Mebane, N. C., were heartily endorsed, and commended to our people. "We believe that the best method of helping worthy young men and women is to support our Church schools, and thus cheapen education, rather than to directly support or assist in supporting the students themselves."

Special attention is called to the honest debt we owe to the trustees of the "High School," and we lay it upon the heart and conscience of our sessions and people to liquidate this debt as soon as possible.

Missions: The report of both Home and Foreign Missions is encouraging. A popular meeting for each was held during the sessions of Presbytery, and stirring addresses were made. Rev. C. Miller, Evangelist in Stokes county, gave an intensely interesting report of his work. He reports another new church organized at Asbury, and hopeful prospects at other points. A collection of about $30 was realized at each of these popular meetings.

The report of Foreign Missions shows an increase of collections over last year of $851. The following churches deserve special mention for their liberality:—Chapel Hill, $57; Buffalo, $57; Alamance, $68; Hawfields, $78; Cross Roads, $98; Dan River, $105; Graham, $316; Greensboro, $341; Durham, $663, and First church, Winston, $1,006.

The following churches are reported as non-contributors:—Ashboro, Gilead, Holloway, Mt. Airy, Worthville, Elim, Bethesda, Calah, Eno, Little River, Oak Forest, Wentworth and Yanceyville.

Colored Work: The outlook is hopeful, and we recommend that the Synod establish an Industrial School at North Wilkesboro in connection with the work of Rev. L. G. Walker, colored evangelist. Rev. A. L. Phillips addressed the Presbytery in behalf of the colored work.

Education for the Ministry: The report is elaborate and carefully compiled, and shows that we now have fourteen candidates for the ministry; and nearly all of them are vigorously prosecuting their studies and stand remarkably well in their respective classes. A number of them have done good work in Home Mission fields during the summer.

Publication and Colportage: The Rev. R. W. Culbertson was elected Agent, vice Rev. A. Currie, resigned.

Trustees: Mr. George W. Watts was elected trustee of Davidson College to fill the unexpired term of Rev. J. L. Currie, deceased.

Overtures: The amendment, recommended by the Assembly, of the Book of Church Order, par. 40, touching the ordination of ministers in the foreign field, was adopted.

The recommendations of the Assembly in reference to Ordination and Licensure were referred to a committee of five to report at the spring meeting.

The action of the Assembly touching Young People's Societies was commended to the churches and pastors.

The N. C. PRESBYTERIAN: The Presbytery heartily endorsed the N. C. P., and "enjoins upon all its ministers to call attention from the pulpit, and through other agencies, to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, and to make special efforts at this time, to increase in all our congregations, the circulation of a paper so useful and so indispensable for Church and religious information in all our families."

The next stated meeting will be held at Reidsville, N. C., April 23d, 1895.

Signed:

D. I. CRAIG,
Stated Clerk.

Taking Out the Tangles.

Strong and eager and full of purposes as many of our young people are these stirring days, there comes, we find, to the best of them at times an almost overpowering sense of their own weakness. Then it is that the wise ones turn for strength to the One whose hand is ever extended to give help in just such hours of need.

Not long since we saw two little lads well-nigh in despair over a kite-string that they had succeeded in getting into a seemingly hopeless tangle.

"Let's give it up and take it to mother," cried one at last; "she can always get tangles out that are too much for us."

And as we saw the skilled fingers of the parent patiently extricating the close-drawn knots, we thought, how illustrative that is of the way the heavenly Parent undoes the perplexities of daily life for those who care to seek his aid!

Few of us can pass through a single day without encountering some difficulty that seems beyond overcoming. Then if we but feel fully the force of those words of the One mighty to help, "I am with you," how comforting is the sense of rest that sweeps over us!

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

The Police Power.

The police power, in the broadest acceptation of the term, means the general power of a government to preserve and promote the public welfare, even at the expense of private rights. The police power of a State embraces the whole system of internal regulation by which the State seeks to preserve public order and prevent offenses, and also to secure to every citizen the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as it is consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others. It extends to the protection of the life, limbs, health and comfort of all persons, and to the protection of all property within the State. It is difficult, if not impossible, to define the exact scope of the term, and the Supreme Court of the United States has declined to attempt it. In the United States the police power belongs to the States, and can be exercised by Congress only over the territories and the District of Columbia, this being one of the powers which was reserved to the States in making the grant of powers to the United States when the States ratified the constitution. The police power of a State is a legislative function, and is almost as broad as the power of legislation itself, but it is a power distinct from and does not include either the right of eminent domain or the power of taxation. In the exercise of its police power a State may regulate or destroy entirely the use and value of property, and it need make no compensation therefor. Under the power of eminent domain, however, the property itself may be taken for public use, but compensation must be made for it. Eminent domain applies where property is taken for the advancement of some public interest, while the police power applies usually to the care and preservation of public health and morals. The State cannot discriminate in the exercise of its power of taxation, but must operate on all alike, but in the exercise of its police power it need consider only what is best for the public good. The purposes of the power of a State are to preserve the public health and morals, and to promote the general welfare. In the furtherance of these purposes it may regulate or forbid the exercise of trades or occupations, or any uses of property which may possibly prove injurious to the community's health. Subjects which will serve as illustrations of the matters upon which it may operate in this connection are: slaughter-houses, the adulteration of foods, the pollution of water courses, the regulation and location of burying grounds, the prohibition of the sale of oleomargarine, and the requiring of persons practicing professions, as medicine, law, etc., to obtain a license therefor, the suppression of lotteries and prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, the prohibition of polygamous marriages, and the statutes providing for the observance of Sunday. The State may also regulate the charges of ferrymen, common carriers, etc., and also any business affected with a public interest. The police power covers also those statutes which regulate the rights of persons of different races or colors in places of public resort, as theaters, inns, and carriages of common carriers. There are many other subjects upon which the police power may operate, but the above subjects will serve as illustrations. The ordinary method of exercising the police power is by the imposition of taxes or penalties for the purpose of discouraging the occupations deemed injurious, but it may with equal propriety entirely or partially prohibit the business against which it is directed. In determining whether or not a statute is within the protection of the police power, the constitutions of the State and of the United States must be considered, for, as the constitution limits the power of legislation, it correspondingly limits the police power whenever that comes in conflict with an express constitutional provision.

The way to cure our prejudices is this: That every man should let alone those that he complains of in others and examine his own.—Locke.

IN MEMORIAM.

REV. JAMES LAUCHLIN CURRIE.

[The following was adopted by Orange Presbytery at its stated meeting at Burlington, N. C., Sept. 11th, 1894, and the stated clerk was directed to send a copy to the bereaved family and also to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN with the request for its publication:]

The Presbytery meets in a church whose pulpit is covered with the mourning tokens of a beloved pastor's recent death, and among a congregation sorely bereaved and saddened by such a providence. It is hard to realize that but a little over only two months ago, James L. Currie, the pastor of this church was alive and active and in that pulpit, and looking forward with a pleasing hope and expectation to our assembling in this house of worship with him and with his attached charge, and to-day he is not here, for God has taken him to be "with Christ"—to be "absent from the body and present (or at home) with the Lord."

The Presbytery does heartily and sorrowfully unite in tender sympathy with the churches of Burlington, Stony Creek, and Springwood, so suddenly bereaved, and would express their cordial concurrence with the resolutions adopted by the Burlington session, in which we are sure all his congregations and all who knew Bro. Currie, will in heartiest agreement unite that "in the death of Rev. James L. Currie, the congregations bereaved lose a tried and faithful pastor, the Church at large a wise and conservative Presbyter, his aged father loses the earthly stay and prop of his declining years, his widow a loving husband, his children, (six in number,) a kind and watchful father, and society one of its brightest ornaments." To each and all of these the Presbytery does hereby express its tenderest sympathy, and commend them to "the Father of mercies and to the God of all comfort," who assures us that "all his paths are mercy and truth to them that keep his covenant," "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt understand hereafter," and, "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth him that fear Him, for he knoweth our frame, He remembereth that we are dust."

James Lauchlin Currie was born in Orange county, N. C., June 17th, 1849, and departed this life July 17th, 1894, aged 45 years and 1 month. He spent three years at Hampden Sidney College, Va., and was graduated in the summer of 1872. He prosecuted his studies for the ministry in our Theological Seminary at Hampden Sidney, and was afterwards licensed by the Presbytery of Orange in April, 1875, and on Wednesday, the 15th of the same month of April, and of the same year (1875,) he was married to Miss Violet Womack, of Prince Edward county, Va. From 1875 to 1883 he was pastor of Fairfield, Eno, and Little River churches, and at different intervals and changes of fields of pastoral labor, during the last ten years he has served several other churches as pastor in the same Central section of this Presbytery, among which are Chapel Hill, New Hope, Griers, Stony Creek, Hillsboro, Springwood and Burlington. At the time of his death he was pastor of Burlington, Stony Creek, and Springwood, and had been such for several years.

The members of Presbytery will easily recall the warm and clinging attachment of several of these congregations, and how tenaciously they opposed any effort to remove him from them whenever any such suggestion or effort was made. God however has called him, and sundered the relation suddenly and unexpectedly to all of us, and in the very prime of life, and to us the voice of this Providence speaks—"Be ye also ready"—and while we would record our sense of our great loss, we would humbly recognize the will of our Sovereign Lord and Saviour, and would again express our heartfelt sympathy for our widowed sister and her fatherless sons, for our dear and aged brother in the loss, for a while, of his only and noble son, and we earnestly pray that all these bereaved and sorrowing hearts may seek and find consolation and strength in Him who is promised and sent as "the Holy Ghost the Comforter."

Do The Best You Can.

BY KNOXONIAN.

Long years ago it was our happy privilege to enjoy the friendship of a good old lady who had a peculiar way of saying good-bye. She was a ripe saint of God, a stalwart Presbyterian of the best type, a devoted mother, a bright, cheery, hopeful woman whose presence blest and brightened her home and helped on the congregation of which for more than a quarter of a century she had been a useful and influential member. Parting from her pastor she always said in kindly, encouraging tones, "Good-bye. Do the best you can."

The voice that used to utter these words has long been silenced in death, but we hear it still. It has come back many a time and it always comes when most needed. If pressed with work and at a loss to know what should be done first, that gentle, encouraging voice often whispered, "Do the best you can." Brought face to face with difficult duty and conscious of inability to perform it aright, the voice rarely if ever failed to say, "Do the best you can."

If a man does the best he can, what more can he do? What more should any body expect him to do? If a minister preaches as well as he can, he certainly cannot preach any better. If your doctor does all he can for you, what more do you expect from him? Doctors cannot keep people alive when their time has come. If your lawyer does all he can for you, you have no right to complain. Perhaps your case was so bad that even Blackstone could have done nothing for you. If your tailor has done the best he can, you should not complain of a misfit. Your anatomy may be so peculiary constructed that no artist on earth could make your figure look well. Boot-men are often cruelly blamed when they have done not only the best they can, but the best possible. A boot that fits must sometimes be of a peculiar shape.

There are circumstances, however, in which a man should scarcely be allowed to defend himself by saying he is doing the best he can. If he blows and brags about his work and tries to make you believe he can do things better than anybody else and then does his work poorly, it is not for him to say he is doing the best he can. He led you to believe he could do things better than he can and by so doing put himself out of court.

If a minister by himself, or through his friends leads a vacant congregation to believe that he is an extraordinary sort of preacher and pastor that has done wonderful things in some far away place and if he turns out a very ordinary kind of man who does work barely up to the average, he has no right to say that he is doing as well as he can. He professed to have done better than he can, and he should be held to his own estimate of himself or to the estimate given by his friends.

If a quack pretends to be able to cure everything and if it is found as it usually is found, that he can do nothing but bleed the pocket of his patient, he should not be allowed to say he is doing the best he can. He should not have pretended to do what he knew he was not able to do.

People who push themselves into positions of prominence and fail, cannot be allowed to excuse themselves by saying, they are doing the best they can.

If a man schemes to get a chance to make a speech, perches himself on the most conspicuous place on the platform, puts on excruciating airs and then says nothing in a few broken-backed sentences, he should not be allowed to plead that he did the best he could. The plea may be true, in fact, but nobody asked him to do anything. He pushed himself and he should be allowed to take all the results of the pushing.

People who scheme to turn others out of positions and then do poorly in the positions themselves, should never be allowed to excuse indifferent work by saying, we are doing the best we can. A man who plots to displace a neighbor in order that he may get the neighbor's place should not complain of criticism however severe. Severe criticism is the right thing for him.

Circumstances like these are, however, exceptional. In all cases in which people are regularly and properly assigned to their work, the plea that a man is doing the best he can should evidently have much force. It always has much force with fair men of judicial minds. The first question, the main question about any minister should be: "Is he doing the best he can? Under all the conditions and limitations of his position; with the amount of help he has and the means and opportunities he enjoys, is he doing all that could reasonably be expected of him?" That is the question Mr. D. J. Macdonnell, or Principal Caven, or Principal Grant, or Dr. Reid, or Dr. Laing, or Dr. Gregg, or Dr. MacLaren, or Dr. Cochrane. or any influential Presbyter with a judicial mind would ask. Alas! it is not the question always asked even by Presbyterians. Some people, supposed Presbyterians, would shout "Down with him, he doesn't draw." Others would cry, "Out with him, he does not bring in the money." A third party would say, "He should resign, because if he doesn't Matilda Ann Smith, and Jemima Jones will leave the choir and then what?" And some would even say, "He must go because old twenty per cent. has stopped his subscription." The Master would ask, "Is this servant of mine doing the best he can?"

Brother are you doing the best you can? If before God and conscience you can say "yes," then go on with your work and leave the results to the Master. Let the growlers growl, and the croakers croak, and the critics snarl, and the whiners whine, and pugilists fight; let the men who have patent modes for turning sinners instantly into full-grown Abrahams, try their patents; let the shouters shout, and the rounders go around, and the men who puff themselves puff until the long-suffering editor turns pale, go you on quietly with your Master's work, and the Master will take care of you and yours. Do the best you can and all will be well in the end.

But, brother, be reasonably sure you are doing the best you can.—Canada Presbyterian.

Our Opportunities.

We must be mindful to use our opportunities. We are not merely to employ them, but to use them, wisely, faithfully, patiently, lovingly, in the fear of God, and with a real affection for our fellowmen. Use implies thought, consecration, labor. Esther not merely employed but used her opportunity when she went in unto the king with a plea for her imperilled people. Naaman used his opportunity when he yielded to the entreaties of his servants and turned back to plunge seven times in Jordan. Paul used his opportunities constantly and grandly as when, before the raging mob at Jerusalem, he spoke of Jesus and the Resurrection; or in the presence of Felix so reasoned of "righteousness, temper- and judgment to come," that the careless worldling trembled; or, while awaiting the fall of the executioner's sword, he dwelt at Rome in his own hired house and taught to his willing hearers "the things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ."

Our opportunities are constant. Our power to use them aright cannot be denied. If, then, our desire to use them faithfully and successfully be only as constant, we will do grand work for Christ and our fellow-men. And doing this work according to our opportunities and abilities, whether the world applaud us or not, we will have no cause to mourn because of our unfaithfulness, nor to grieve over misspent or neglected opportunities.—Rev. A. DeW. Mason.

"Believe Also in Me."

There is no journey in life but has its clouded days; and there are some days in which our eyes are so blinded with tears that we find it hard to see our way or even read God's promises. Those days that have a bright sunrise followed by sudden thunder-claps and bursts of unlooked for sorrows are the ones that test certain of our graces the most severely. Yet the law of spiritual eyesight very closely resembles the law of physical optics. When we come suddenly out of the daylight into a room even moderately darkened, we can discern nothing; but the pupil of our eye gradually enlarges, until unseen objects become visible. Even so the pupil of the eye of faith has the blessed faculty of enlarging in dark hours of bereavement, so that we discover that our loving Father's hand is holding the cup of trial, and by and by the gloom becomes luminous with glory. The fourteenth chapter of John never falls with such music upon our ears as when we catch its sweet strains amid the pauses of some terrific storm. "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. I will not leave you comfortless."—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

Temptations Return.

Never count a temptation so triumphed over, so beaten off, that it will never assault you any more. Satan has been called Beelzebub, or the god of flies, some tell us, because he will not take a repulse, because he comes back again and again, because it is impossible so to drive him away that he will not return. Consider the Lord of Glory himself. When the Tempter, thrice encountered and thrice defeated in the wilderness, left him, it was only, as we are expressly told, "for a season." There were other hours and powers of darkness still to come, when the Prince of this world should make further proof in the garden whether there was not something which he could claim for his own, even in that Lord who had so foiled and baffled him in the desert. And shall we think that when he departs from us it is more than for a season? Never, so long as you bear about these sinful bodies, count any corruption to be so dead in you that you are perfectly safe from it henceforth, that it can never stir or trouble you again. How much that seems dead, by a sad experience will be shown to have been only sleeping; like snakes, which, frozen in winter, lose for a while their power to harm, appear as though there were no life in them, but brought to the warmth, can hiss and sting again. How many an old corruption is perhaps at this present moment thus torpid and inactive in us, which yet only waits the returning warmth of a suitable temptation to revive in all its malignant strength anew.

Eyes.

It happened not long ago to a friend of mine who has been very short-sighted all her life, to have her eyes "measured" for glasses which have given her a new sense of the wonderful world she lives in. The first time she went to church after the new glasses had revealed to her the manner of place the world was, she felt embarrassed at seeing so much and so clearly. Walking through the aisle to her pew, she beheld for the first time, though she had heard him preach for years, the clear cut, keen and benevolent face of her pastor. She saw the choir, too, a fine-looking set of young people, and observed with pleasure the thoughtful faces of the elders and deacons.

The new glasses had introduced her to a new world, simply by revealing to her what had always been there. No change had been wrought in the world, and her environment remained what it had long been. But all was altered for her. Revelation had been granted, and she could almost say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see!"

Something like this happens when one who has never realised the loving kindness of God suddenly awakens to a sense of it.

The spirit's vision was dim. Enlightenment being granted, there came a new comprehension of God's meanings, a new insight, a new and wonderful charm about all that surrounded the life. The groping step was changed to wing-like fleetness. The blind saw.

But God's dear love has been there all the while.—Aunt Marjory, in Christian Intelligencer.

Are we Epistles?

The epistleship of Christians is not enough thought of. Paul calls the Corinthians—and, by implication, all true believers—epistles of Christ. Does it not mean that, as an ordinary letter is an index of its writer's character, a miniature of his mind, disclosing his sentiments and portraying his feelings, so we are to be copies of Chirst, with his mind in us, manifesting itself to the world by means of us? It would seem so. But how far do we carry out this idea? How correct an image of Christ, or of Christ's conception as to what a man ought to be, do the people who see us from day to day get? He sends us out to represent him, and to convey his messages to men. Of what immense importance is it that we should not misrepresent, should not so blot the message as to disfigure it and make it undecipherable. While we cannot be exactly apostles of Christ, we certainly should be his epistles.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the fol lowing changes of address :

Rev. W. C. Alexander, from Mt. Airy, N. C., to Concord, N. C.

Rev. E. McNair, from Stewartsville, Mo., to Lawson, Mo.

NORTH CAROLINA.

First Church, Wilmington :—On Sunday night Rev. Geo. H. Cornelson, Jr., preached his farewell sermon to the congregation of Immanuel chapel. During the few months in which he has labored among them he has won all hearts by the directness of his gospel message, his unaffected modesty, his painstaking labors, and his zealous leadership. His sermon was in Ex. xiv. 15—unquestioning obedience to God in the face of obstacles and a forward movement against sin in our own hearts and in the world, After the sermon Dr. Hoge read the following minutes adopted by the session of the church :

In view of the fact that Rev. Geo. H. Cornelson, Jr., a licentiate of the Charleston Presbytery, who has ministered to our chapel congregation for the past four months, is about to leave us and return to his studies in Columbia Seminary, the session desires to place on record its high appreciation of earnest and effective preaching of the gospel, his devoted and sympathetic ministrations to the sick and destitute, and his abundant and wisely directed labors in all departments of the work of the church. It assures him that our continued interest and prayers will follow him, and it expresses the hope which—it is assured—voices the united sentiment of the congregation, that the way may be opened for his return to us on the completion of his studies.

Banner's Elk :—Rev. R. P. Pell writes : On last Sabbath five more members were received into the church at Banner's Elk, making twenty-nine in all who united with us as the result of our recent meeting.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Burgaw :—Rev. G. W. McMillan writes from Burgaw, under date of Sept. 24th. : Since our meeting closed we have received into the Presbyterian churches around here members as follows : Burgaw twenty-one, Hopewell five, Keith four and Pike one. There are yet more who will join us that have not done so now.

Elkin :—On the 23rd we received by examination two persons into communion with the Main Street church and also baptized one of them. Steps were also taken to organize a society of Willing Workers in connection with the church.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Haywood :—A meeting of six days was held at Haywood in last month. Rev. K. A. McLeod preached morning and night for three days. The members were greatly revived and two were added to the church, making four additions in the last six months.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Marks Creek Church :—A meeting of six days was held at Marks Creek church in August. Rev. W. B. Arrowood preached morning and night for four days. The congregations were large and the church greatly revived; five additions, and two applicants for membership who were prevented from meeting with the session the following meeting. Seven have joined this church in the last six months.

Bethany Presbyterian Church :—After the sermon Sunday night, J.Eugene Morrow, the oldest son of the pastor, made profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and was received into the church. I thank God for his conversion. This makes a membership of twenty-one. There was a general out-pouring of the Holy Ghost upon the members. We all felt the power of the Holy Spirit. We need a church. We have been renting a hall for over three years. Can we not go down and out of a hall room, and into a church ? I think we can, and the good Presbyterians throughout North Carolina are going to help us buy a lot and build us church. I feel that you are. The blessed Lord says, "Ask and it shall be given unto you," therefore, ladies and gentlemen of the Presbyterian Church, I make this appeal to you for help, and I know that you will help me. I have a promise of $50 from a Northern gentleman, Rev. Dr. Knight, as soon as I get a lot paid for. I ask you, dear friends, to help us pay for a lot, so that I may get his check right away for the church; we would like to have it up by spring. I think there are Southern ladies and gentlemen who will do as much for us colored people as our Northern brethren and sisters. I have preached that doctrine to my people; I thank them for all that they have done for us and for whatever they may do; but I can go to you with good grace for help because I belong to your church. Eight hundred or a thousand dollars will pay for a lot and build the church. If I had the money in hand now, I might get a small lot for $250. We are going to do all we can ourselves. I am opposed to festivals and fairs, and I preach against them, but my members say, "Everybody else has them, and please suffer us to have them too. We are poor people," they say. That is all true. We are poor, but I believe that God will open the hearts of the rich towards us when they see our need. I ask your prayers, encouragement, sympathy and money. I hope all who read this letter will give us a piece of money. Please send all money to Rev. Dr. R. A. Campbell or J. S. Morrow, Asheville, N. C. J. S. M.

Rev. A. K. Pool and His Service :—At Sharon, Wadeville, Mt. Carmel, Ellerbe Springs and Pee Dee churches. The writer was glad to be able to put the churches above named in correspondence with Rev. A. K. Pool, at the end of the spring session at Union Theological Seminary, and in a short time he was preaching to these congregations and there can be no doubt but that his labor was not only most faithful, but satisfactory and abundantly fruitful.

The writer assisted him in a meeting at Ellerbe Springs, to which church twenty-six persons were added on profession of faith ; and also held one service each at Mt. Carmel and Pee Dee churches, receiving eleven members at Mt. Carmel and two at Pee Dee, and besides these, there were additions at Sharon, and all the churches were greatly edified, strengthened and built up. Bro. Pool was ably assisted by Rev. Carson Brown, (another seminary student), at his meeting at Mt. Carmel.

These people were all very much attached to Bro. Pool, and well they might be for he not only labored most faithfully in proclaiming "the Word," but visited a great deal and also worked up an interest in singing and Sunday-school everywhere he went, and when he left the field to return to the Seminary, had the churches unanimously to ask for the services of Rev. Lacy L. Little and Bro. L. accepted, so the churches are now all supplied, and are in good shape for the winter's work. In the face of such facts and many more that might be added concerning Bro. Pool's help with singing at other meetings, and other similar facts which can be obtained from the reports of the summer services of other candidates for the ministry, how can any one be opposed to the revision concerning licensure ? Let us move the Seminary to Richmond where our candidates can do mission work, and let us license them and help them every way we can. God blesses their preaching and a good way to learn how to preach, is to preach. W. B.

An Adjourned Meeting of Orange Presbytery :—Was held at Chapel Hill, on September 28th and 29th. The pastoral relation between Rev. R. E. C. Lawson and the Alamance church was dissolved. The pastoral relation between Rev. W. C. Alexander and the Mount Airy church was dissolved. He was granted a letter of dismission to Concord Presbytery. Licentiates D. J. Currie and H. S. Bradshaw were examined with a view to ordination. These examinations being quite satisfactory, Presbytery solemnly ordained them to the gospel ministry. Installation services were conducted on Sunday, September 30th, as follows :

Rev. D. J. Currie, at Chapel Hill, 11 a. m.—Dr. J. Henry Smith.

Rev. D. J. Currie, at New Hope, 3.30 p. m.—Rev. D. I. Craig.

Rev. H. S. Bradshaw, at Fairfield, 11 a. m.—Rev. S. O. Hall.

Rev. H. S. Bradshaw, at Hillboro, 7.30. p. m.—Rev. D. I. Craig and Rev. S. O. Hall.

S. O. HALL, Clerk pro tem.

Rev. W. C. Alexander :—Has accepted a call to the church at Concord.

Rev. Dr. C. M. Payne :—Has received a most cordial welcome from the members of the Washington church ; who have fixed up the manse and filled up the pantry and woodhouse, besides giving him large and attentive congregations.

VIRGINIA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Cove Church :—This church has recently amended its call to its pastor, Rev. Daniel Blain, by asking him to preach three Sabbaths each month instead of two as formerly. Mr. Blain will accede to the wishes of the church and the new arrangement will go into effect in November.

Rev. F. McMurray :—Who broke his leg some months ago, is recovering; and is now able to walk about the house with the help of crutches.

Waddell Church, West Hanover Presbytery : Received eight members at its last communion; being the fruits of a meeting held by Rev. Geo. L, Bitzer, of Leesburg.

Capon Church, Winchester Presbytery :—Has had a protracted service conducted by Rev. L. A. McLean. There were fifteen members added to the church.

Additional Items from Montgomery Presbytery :—Culled from report of Rev. P. B. Price, which reached us too late for last week's paper.

The pastoral relations of Rev. J. M. Holladay with the churches of Rocky Mount and Piedmont were dissolved that he might accept the calls of Blacksburg and Roanoke churches, in the same Presbytery.

A Legacy: Mrs. S. A. Paine, an excellent Christian lady of Covington, Va., who died this summer, left to the trustees $1,000, the interest of which is to be devoted to the education of candidates for the ministry, under care of this Presbytery.

Overtures of the General Assembly on "ordination in the Foreign Field by a single Evangelist; and on a change of the law touching licensure, were rejected by a unanimous vote.

The action touching unlicensed and unauthorized evangelists and preachers was approved ; also the raising of $15,000 for Colored Evangelization.

Jenning's Creek was enrolled as the 58th church on the roll of Presbytery.

Rev. P. B. Price, for more than seventeen years stated clerk, resigned this office, and Rev. T. W. Hooper, D. D., was elected in his place.

The meeting in behalf of Foreign Missions derived increase of interest from the presence of Rev. R. B. Grinnan, of Japan, and his two interesting lectures.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Greenbrier Presbytery :—Overtures the Synod to set off the Presbytery of Kanawha by a vote of 22 to 8. The new Presbytery will start with seven ministers, twenty churches, and about 1,500 communicants.

MISSOURI.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

Items from Synod :—Rev. J. W. Roseborough writes : I held meetings recently as follows in the Synod of Missouri : At Burnham, eight days with thirteen additions, twenty-nine on profession. At Lebanon, organized a church of sixteen members, aided by Dr. Boude. Eleven were from a dissolved United Presbyterian church, and three on profession, and two from Presbyterian church at Springfield. At Crocker, preached a week and eleven joined, six of whom came from Congregational church, and four on profession. At Concord, preached seven days, ten professions with five added to our church.

between duties performed by private Christians and the same duties as performed by the authorized public representatives of the Church. It has always been agreed in our Church that our private members may read the Scriptures and talk over religious subjects on suitable occasions. No one thinks of calling it preaching. The private members have not adopted the Confession of Faith nor the Book of Church Order. The Church is not held responsible for what they may teach. Now if the case of seminary students is in any respects different from that of the private member, it is still under the control of the Presbyteries. They can suppress vacation work wholly, if need be, or regulate it as they think best. In fact this is no new question. The singular fact is that it is only recently that there has been any trouble discovered in connection with the matter.

But it is time to notice the second evil. A remedy is offered for a tendency to lower the standard. There are two remarks to be made here. First. The double examination contemplates, as will be seen from Art. III., under the head of Ordination, a change of Presbytery between licensure and ordination. One examination is as good as two if both are held by the same body, but if a different Presbytery ordains, it ought to have the privilege of a thorough trial as to whether the course of study has been mastered. Second. The claim that the present standard for licensure tends to lower the qualifications for the ministry is a new form of criticism in this connection. The cry has rung through the Church that our standard is too high ; that many who ought to preach were kept out of the ministry by it. But the Church has always feared that those who called for a lower standard for licensure were either seeking to lower the general standard or unconsciously paving the way for it.

W. T. HALL.

THE REQUIREMENTS FOR LICENSURE AND FOR ORDINATION SHOULD BE THE SAME.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The General Assembly has recommended and sent down to the Presbyteries for their approval some fifteen or twenty changes in our organic law concerning licensure and ordination. The most of them are mere transpositions of phrases, multiplication of adjectives, etc. However, some of them are radical and far-reaching, as the lowering of the standard for Licensure and the issuing of three-year licenses. The reasons assigned for these changes are various, as :

(1.) "Unlicensed preaching is an evil—it is against law. Now these changes will prevent lawless preaching." How ? By improving the crude and immature preaching ? "Oh, no." How, then ? "Why, by licensing it ;" i. e., by making this crude preaching which was lawless before (and, perhaps, full of error), and for which the man who uttered it alone was responsible, the authoritative teaching of Presbyterianism ! What an anomalous remedy ! Surely, the right cure for this evil is to enforce the present law of the Church.

(2). Again, it is urged : "Our candidates will then have the practical training in preaching that is so desirable." Is it ? I much fear that a greater mistake cannot be made by a young man than to attempt seminary work and preaching together. Both will be poorly done. The testimony of Phillips Brooks here is worth pondering. Said he : "I never shall forget my first experience of a Divinity-school. I had come from a college where men studied hard, but said nothing about faith. I had never been at a prayer-meeting in my life. The first place I was taken to at the Seminary was a prayer-meeting ; and never shall I lose the impression of the devoutness with which those men prayed and exhorted one another. Their whole souls seemed exalted and their natures were on fire. I sat bewildered and ashamed, and went away depressed. On the next day, I met some of those same men at a Greek recitation. It would be little to say of some of the devoutest of them that they had not learned their lessons. Their whole way showed that they had never learned their lessons—that they had not got hold of the first principles of hard, faithful, conscientious study. The boiler had no connection with the engine. The devotion did not touch the work which then and there was the work, and the only work, for them to do. By and by I found something of where the steam did escape to. A sort of amateur premature preaching was much in vogue among us. We were in haste to be at what we called our work. A feeble twilight of the coming ministry, we lived in. The people in the neighborhood dubbed us 'parsonettes.' O my fellow-students, the special study of theology and of all that pertains to it, that is what the preacher must be doing always ; but he never can do it afterwards as he can in the blessed days of quietness in Arabia after Christ has called him and before the apostles have laid their hands on him. In many respects, an ignorant clergy, however pious it may be, is worse than none at all. The more the empty head glows and burns, the more hollow and thin and dry it grows." (Italics mine). This witness is true. The students who do the least preaching while in the seminary do the most faithful work on their studies—and conversely.

I now proceed to the very heart of this matter : Has the Church a right to make different standards for Licensure and Ordination ?

The power of the Church is solely ministerial and declarative. Should she in an evil hour, by a mere regulation of her own devising, lower the standard of Licensure, would she not come perilcusly near usurping the legislative power of Christ the King, making a new law for her guidance instead of declaring Christ's law as already contained in the Scriptures ? Let us see. (1). The ordinary and perpetual officers whom Christ hath appointed in his Church are teaching elders, ruling elders, and deacons. (2). He hath also in the Scriptures defined the functions of these officers and (3). He hath given the qualifications which fit a man for these offices. Let us take the teaching elder. What is the thing for which the King appoints him in the Church ? Is it not to preach the Gospel ? And what are the Divinely prescribed qualifications for this work ? (1) Piety, (2) Soundness in the faith. (3) Ability and gifts natural and acquired to discharge the duties of the office. Some of these are "adjusted knowledge" (επιγνωσις), a knowledge of Divinity in its adjustments, relations, etc. ; (2) "Aptness to teach" (διδαστικος) intellectual acumen, a trained mind, one with knowledge digested, analyzed, synthetized, ready for use. Our Book has drawn from the Bible the qualifications which fit a man for a teaching elder and, as it now stands, it rightly requires the same qualifications for licensure as for ordination, because the qualifications and the functions go together in the Bible, and "what God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." The new law proposes to put them asunder. It proposes to have the Church license a man, i. e., authoritatively to endow him with the functions of a teaching-elder in preaching the Gospel, when admittedly he has not the qualifications the Bible requires of one in that office. If we make a difference, (as the proposed amendments do,) between the requirements for licensure and ordination, and if the function of preaching the Gospel always presupposes certain Scriptural qualifications, then the dilemma confronts us ! Either the proposed qualifications for ordination are higher than the Bible requires, or those for Licensure are lower. The Church would be exercising legislative power if she raised them higher than does the Bible, or if she dropped them lower. Let her beware how she usurps the crown rights of the King and instead of simply declaring his revealed law on the subject of ministerial qualifications—the qualifications of one authorized to preach the Gospel—makes by legislative enactment those qualifications lower than the Bible requires.

It may be asked : "Why license at all then ? Why not ordain at once ?" Because the evidence authenticating a call to the ministry as Divine has three essential elements : (1) The man's inward testimony of a good conscience : (2) The approbation of the people, shown by election ; (3) The judgment of the court according to the Word of Christ. Now, when a man is licensed only two elements of evidence are known (1) the inward testimony of the man's conscience (2) the judgment of the court according to its present light, i. e. as to his Biblical qualifications. Hence he is licensed to try his gifts before the people to see if they will approve by calling him. When they do, all three elements in proof of God's call are complete and the Presbytery must immediately take steps to ordain him. (Book of Church Order par. 117). As the Book now stands, any man who can stand examination for Licensure can also stand the examination for Ordination. This is right, consistent, Scriptural. Sad will be the day when the Church presumes to make a difference where Christ the King has made none.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson II.

Oct. 14th.—The Draught of Fishes.

Luke v. 1-11. Commit vss. 4-6.

Golden Text. Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men. Mark i. 17.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. TIME. The events of the lesson preceded in time those of Luke iv. 33-44, as seen by comparing with Mark i. 16-39. Mark always follows the chronological order, and Luke iv. 38 compared with Mark i. 29 presupposes the call of the four.

PLACE. The lesson brings us for the first time to the shores of the sea of Galilee, also called Gennesaret and Tiberias, that is so intimately associated with our Lord's life and work. It is an oval body of fresh water ten or twelve miles long, receiving the Jordan at its northern end and emptying through it at the southern end. Its surface lies 600 feet below the level of the Mediterranean and about 700 feet above the level of the Dead Sea. Its shores were inhabited by a teeming population in our Lord's day as evinced by the numerous ruins still seen. The exact spot is supposed to be a bay with a sandy beach near to Tell Hum—generally accepted as the site of ancient Capernaum.

PARALLEL ACCOUNTS. The call of the disciples mentioned by John (and previously studied) was the call to personal discipleship; this is the call to official duty. Matthew and Mark relate the call, Matt. iv. 18-22; Mark i. 16-20, but omit the draught of fishes. The apparent inconsistencies are that they represent Simon and Andrew as casting a net and John and James as mending a net in the boat, while Luke speaks of them all as having left the boats and washing the nets. The explanation is simple: Luke describes them as they were before the sermon and draught of fishes; the others at the time of the call. It is easy to make a combined narrative. The italicised words are from Luke's account: As Jesus was walking one morning by the sea of Galilee, the people pressed upon Him to hear the word so that seeing two boats from which the fishermen had gone out to wash their nets, he gets into Simon's and teaches the people, and then commands them to go out into deep water for a draught. Simon and Andrew cast the net into the sea, and having enclosed a great multitude of fishes so that the nets began to break and they called their partners to help them, Jesus calls them to become fishers of men. When they have brought the boat to land they forsake all and follow Jesus. Jesus then comes to James and John who were mending the nets broken from the draught of fishes, and calls them. They too leaving their father Zebedee with the hired servants forsake all and follow Jesus.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: the multitude by the sea, vs. 1; the fishermen washing their nets, vs. 2; the sermon from the boat, vs. 3; the command of the Master, vs. 4; the obedience of faith, vs. 5; the reward of obedience, vs. 6; the toil and responsibility due to success, vs. 7; the self-revealing effect on man of the presence of the Divine, vss. 8, 9; the call and the promise, vs. 10; the call obeyed, vs. 11.

Third Step. Take up any points requiring explanation and study them with your helps:

Vs. 1. Gennesaret. See above.

Vs. 2. Ships. Boats is the proper rendering, as in the R. V.

Vs. 3. Which was Simon's. Note the previous acquaintance implied; see John i. 41, 42.

Prayed him. When He is seeking a favor he asks: when He is about to confer blessing He commands, vs. 4.

Vs. 4. Into the deep. He was now near the shore.

Vs. 5. Toiled all night. The time for catching fish. Nevertheless, it was against all his knowledge of the fishing business, but Christ's word was enough.

Vs. 6. A great multitude. There was a school of fishes there against all human expectation. Whether Jesus knew it by Divine knowledge, or brought it there by Divine power, is of no consequence.

Broke. The tense of the original is properly rendered, began to break, like began to sink in the next verse.

Vs. 8. Depart—for I am a sinful man compare Job xlii. 5, 6. Dr. McLaren says: "The apostle was wholly right in the estimate of his own character, and in his instinctive feeling of the contrast between it and Christ's. But he had not yet fathomed the depth of Christ's love, nor learned the transforming power of His presence. He was not less, but more, penitent when on the same shore he saw the same Lord standing in another morning twilight, and repeating this miracle; but his penitence then sent him floundering through the water to get as near his Lord as he could."

Vs. 10. From henceforth thou shalt catch men. Explaining the meaning and motive of the miracle. See Fifth Step.

Vs. 11. Forsook all. Peter once made this a matter of boast and wanted to know his reward. Matt. xix. 27. Our Lord tells him that the rewards are abundant enough, vss. 28, 29, but that the mercenary spirit spoils it all, making the last first and the first last, xix 30—xx. 16. Mr. Moody suggests that one reason for the miracle was to give them something to give up. He did not want them to go to preaching because fishing had played out.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson, embodying briefly the explanatory points, and including the account in Mark and Matthew. See First Step.

Fifth Step. Take up the topic of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

Christ's Fishermen.

1. "Launch out into the deep," vs. 4; Matt. xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; Acts i. 8; xxii. 21.
2. The night of fruitless toil, vs. 5.
   Christ's personal ministry to the Jews, John xii. 37. 38.
   His last visit to the Samaritans, Luke ix 51-53.
   Paul's testimony to the Jews, Acts xxii. 17-20; xiii. 38-45.
3. The command obeyed in faith, "at thy word," vs. 5.
   Peter preaching in Jerusalem, Acts ii. 14, 36.
   Philip preaching in Samaria, Acts viii. 5.
   The gospel given to the Gentiles, Acts xi. 19, 20; xiii. 2.
4. The reward of obedience, "a great multitude," vs. 6.
   At Jerusalem, Acts ii. 41, 47; iv. 4; v. 14; vi. 7.
   In Samaria, Acts viii. 6.
   Among the Gentiles, Acts xi. 21-26; xiv. 27; xv. 3.
5. The straining of the net, vs. 6, Acts vi. 1; xv. 1.
6. Mending the net, Mark i. 19; Acts vi. 2-8; xv. 23-31.

Sixth Step. A careful study of the Bible reading above will give us the practical lesson of the passage: that the best time and the best place for the Lord's work is His time and His place. We are not to be guided by worldly prudence but by His command. We venture out into the deep not on the basis of human calculations but relying on His promise. Many a church that thought itself hardly strong enough to live, has grown and prospered when it undertook to do something for others. The first argument for Foreign Missions is that it is Christ's Word; the second that those who have taken Him at His word have had the seal of success set upon their faith and obedience Teachers and Christian workers may note that all ingatherings, bring new toil, new problems and new responsibilities to those who are called upon to train, and the churches that have to assimilate, the new converts. Note points 5 and 6 in the Bible Reading.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Get the combined narrative fixed firmly in the minds of the scholars, drawing it out by questions. Question as to the previous acquaintance of these men with Jesus. What miracles they had seen before. Take up the Bible Reading and get fixed a clear idea of the relation of this miracle to their future work. Show its bearing on Foreign Missions, and impress Peter's example of implicit obedience. Ask if their own hearts are prepared to come into the presence of the Holy One. How may we be prepared?

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS 100—SEPT. 20.

101. John, ii. 13—iv. 1.
   The other evangelists give the events of the "Last Week" which was spent in Judea, and a few other Judean incidents, but the "Judean Ministry" which covered the eight months after the first Passover is narrated only by John.
102. Luke, ix. 51—xvii, but containing some events that happened in a visit during this time to Judea. John mentions the sojourn in Perea, x. 40-42; Matthew and Mark narrate incidents that occurred in the last journey to Jerusalem through Perea. But the only account of the ministry there is found in the above section of Luke.
103. Matthew, i. 23; ii. 5, 6, 15, 17, 18, 23, etc.

Correct answers have been received as follows:

At his home in Greensboro, N. C., on September 23d, 1894, in the 86th year of his age, Mr. SAMUEL HARVEY. He had been a member of Westminster Presbyterian church nearly seven years. He was a great sufferer the last few weeks before his departure. May God comfort the aged wife, and the four surviving children. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

On September 9th, WOODMAN, aged 4 years 9 months and nine days. Son of Frank P. and Florence Sidbury, near Rocky Point, N. C. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

In Washington, N. C., September the 14th, 1894. WILLIAM FOWLE SATTERTHWAITE, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. H. Satterthwaite, in the 21st year of his age

Of a noble and attractive person, disposition and manner, this dear young man made friends everywhere. "None knew him but to love him." A devoted, tender-hearted son, a kind, thoughtful brother, and a true faithful friend, he adorned the walks of this life whilst, as an humble, earnest Christian, he lived for the life to come. A child of the covenant, in early boyhood he gave his heart to Jesus and joined the Presbyterian church. He loved his Saviour, was faithful to his church, and lived his religion. His long illness was endured with a courage and submission that was wonderful, and when the end came, without a fear he met death, and calmly, peacefully entered into "the rest that remaineth." The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." PASTOR.

IN MEMORIAM

NEILL GRAHAM.

North Carolina has lost an honorable and an honored son; her citizenship a bright and promising member; his business associates an esteemed and valued assistant and friend; his parents a dutiful and loved boy; and his family circle a link strong in the chain of affection which binds them each to the other.

In Duplin county, on the ninth day of September, A. D., 1894, death, which seems by preference to linger for its victims in the pathway of our noblest and best, has saddened our hearts and clothed his community in mourning by removing from the scenes and surroundings of this lower existence

NEILL GRAHAM.

The mystery of life is equalled only by the greater mystery of death. Humanity lives only to die. Not only are aged men "garnered into the fold," but often are young men stricken down in the prime of a vigorous and healthy manhood. Moreover, every hour some world dies unnoticed in the firmament; some sun smoulders to embers and ashes on the hearth stone of infinite space, and the mighty maze of systems sweeps ceaselessly onward in its voyage of doom to remorseless and unsparing destruction. Thus, early in life has the curtain of the eternal future been lifted for Neill Graham to pass under. He has given up the toils, the cares and the trials of this lower existence to enter, as we believe, upon that holy rest and the unending joys of a happier and better world yond the grave.

"His was each mild, each amiable art,
The gentlest manners, the feeling heart,
Fair, simple truth, benevolence to all,
A generous warmth that glowed at friendship's call."

Aged only twenty-four years, reared in the performance of rugged duties on a farm; unaided by wealth; deprived of a classical education; he entered the service of the Atlantic Coast Line four years ago. Acute in perception, studious in habit, genial in disposition, generous in his impulses, of indomitable energy and industry, he had in the few short years of his service so impressed his personality upon his superiors and his associates, that his chief conceded that he was not regarded as a subordinate, but was treated as an advisor, companion and friend.

Not only was fidelity to the interests of his employers a distinguishing trait in his character; but he possessed the happy faculty of winning friends with a rapidly extending acquaintance, until the radiant beams of his genius were unlimited by State lines, and the utterance was true of a distinguished journalist in attendance upon his obsequies that "his friends were only limited by the number brought within the charmed circle of his acquaintance."

Telegrams of sympathy may pour in; expressions of tender regard and deep sympathy may be uttered; the cold, damp clay may be softened and brightened and beautified by banks of flowers, offered by admiring friends, who appreciated his many excellencies of character; chiefs in transportation, editors, physicians, ministers, merchants and the multitude may assemble around his bier, and pay the tribute to departed worth; groups of loving hands may gather to perform the last offices on earth. But in this gloomy and starless night of our grief, beside an open grave, in the presence of death, with the echoing sod veiling forever a loved and loving face; the reflected rays from an upright, bright and honored life shall remain a consolation to friends, a legacy to kindred, a solace to parents and a worthy example to rising manhood.

How Editors are Treated in China

Nineteen hundred editors of a Pekin paper are said to have been beheaded. Some would shudder at such slaughter, who are heedless of the fact that Consumption is ready to fasten its fatal hold on themselves. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the efficient remedy for weak lungs, spitting of blood, shortness of breath, bronchitis, asthma, severe coughs, and kindred affections.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—I will say this to you, that consumption is hereditary in my wife's family; some have already died with the disease. My wife has a sister, Mrs. F. A. Cleary, that was taken with consumption. She used your "Golden Medical Discovery," and, to the surprise of her many friends, she got well. My wife has also had hemorrhages from the lungs, and her sister insisted on her using the "Golden Medical Discovery." I consented to her using it, and it cured her. She has had no symptoms of consumption for the past six years.

Yours very truly,

LOST: THE SUMMER.

Where has the summer gone?
She was just here a minute ago,
With roses and daisies
To whisper her praises—
And every one loved her so!

Has any one seen her about?
She must have gone off in the night!
And she took the best flowers
And the happiest hours,
And asked no one's leave for her flight.

Have you noticed her steps in the grass?
The garden looks red where she went;
By the side of the hedge
There's a golden-rod edge,
And the rose-vines are withered and bent.

Don't you fear she is sorry she went?
It seems but a minute since May!
I'm scarcely half through
What I wanted to do;
If she only had waited a day!

Do you think she will ever come back?
I shall watch every day at the gate
For the robins and clover,
Saying over and over:
"I know she will come, if I wait!"

A PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER'S WORK FOR POOR BOYS.

The question of free night public schools has for some time been urged on the school board of this city. But now Miss Kate Kelly, principal of McDonogh No. 1, comes forward and announces that she will form free night classes at the Laurel School, corner of Philip and Laurel streets, for all poor boys who have to work in the day time and are thus debarred from the privilege of attending the public schools. Miss Kelly, who has assumed this labor purely out of her sympathy for struggling youth, will devote two nights in the week to the work of teaching the boys, especially drilling them in mathematics, reading, penmanship and spelling. She has done ex cellent work in her district, and a monument to her efforts in McDonogh No. 1 is the handsome library which she founded, giving an entertainment for that purpose on the school grounds last year which netted nearly $400 with which to start the fund. To a question of a friend, "How is it possible for you to enter without compensation into this free night school work, when you have already so many duties, teaching all day?" Miss Kelley sweetly replied, "My dear, we can find time for many things if we only make up our minds to do so. Now I have made up my mind to help poor boys to get an education, and I am going to do it." Her answer strikes the keynote to many other good works for which women conld find time if they only had the will to do so.—N. O. Picayune.

HOW SHE BECAME AN ASTRONOMER.

In response to a question as to how she became an astronomer. Mrs. Huggins, of England, says that at ten years she saved up her money to buy a dark lantern and a little book on astronomy. With these she went out alone under the open sky and from that day on she has been a devoted student of the celestial orbs. And reading this story of the lantern brought back to mind an occurrence in the old Third district in the writer's childhood: An old teacher, long since passed away, kept a school near her home; she was devoted to the study of astronomy and often compelled her pupils to come at night to her little school room to study the heavenly bodies. One night when she thought they knew enough to give a public display of their knowledge, she came out into the old Champs Elysees, where there is a broad view of the heavens, with her troops of girls behind her, and her faithful old servant, Sylvestre, carrying a lighted lantern. The night was bright and starry, and the street gamins gathered around to hear the astronomy class. Presently, the old lady, growing important, while the street was highly amused, said in a stern way, "Sylvestre, hold your lantern up higher so that the young ladies may see the stars." The night was so beautiful and bright, the command so absurd, that the laughing crowd of boys immediately caught on to the ridiculous aspect of the scene. "Hold up your lantern so that we may see the stars" became the by-word of the evening, and there were no more public lessons in astronomy in the old street after that night.—N. O. Picayune.

A salt poultice, moistened with vinegar, is one of the best things in the world to relieve pain from the sting of a bee or a wasp. A paste of common earth and water is good also.

Things Useful.

A delicious tartare sauce.—One-half pint French mayonnaise, one-half cup best cider vinegar, one table-spoonful capers chopped fine, six small cucumber pickles chopped fine, a little garlic or onions chopped fine. Mix all together.

Pineapple Beignets.—Pineapples are now plentiful in the market, and many delightful desserts may be made from this delicious fruit. Pineapple beignets are one of the tempting uses to which the fruit may be put. Buy a fine, ripe pineapple and cut into pieces the size of a silver quarter dollar and a quarter of an inch thick. Sweeten with powdered sugar; then dip in batter and fry in boiling fat until they are quite crisp and of a golden yellow color. Take them up in a strainer and put them in a hot baking tin, sprinkle with confectioners' sugar and set in a hot oven to glaze. When they look bright and glossy, dish on white paper and serve.

Marlboro Pudding.—Pare, core and stew until soft six large, tart apples. Pippins are the best and you only want half a teacupful of water to stew them in, the less the better. Mash them through a fine colander or fruit press; add a quarter pound of the best butter and six large tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar. Mix well and set aside to get cold. Grate two milk biscuits or the same quantity of stale bread, also the yellow peel of a large lemon and squeeze the juice. Beat six eggs very light, and, when the apple is very cold, stir in the eggs, lemon and grated biscuit. Add a wineglass of rose-water and a grated nutmeg. Line some saucers with puff paste. Fill them with the mixture, put a border of puff paste around the edge and bake about forty-five minutes. When cold grate loaf sugar over them and ornament in fanciful designs with thin strips of citron.

DOCTORS ENDORSE IT.

An Eminent Physician of Arkansas, tells of some Remarkable Cures of Consumption.

MRS. ROGERS.

Stamps, La Fayette Co., Ark.
DR. R. V. PIERCE:
Dear Sir—I will say this to you, that Consumption is hereditary in my wife's family; some have already died with the disease. My wife has a sister, Mrs. E. A. Cleary, that was taken with consumption. She used your "Golden Medical Discovery," and, to the surprise of her many friends, she got well. My wife has also had hemorrhages from the lungs, and her sister insisted on her using the "Golden Medical Discovery." I consented to her using it, and it relieved her. She has had no symptoms of consumption for the past six years. People having this disease can take no better remedy.
Yours very truly,
W. C. Rogers M. D.

MY NEIGHBOR'S BOY.

He seems to be several boys in one,
So much is he constantly everywhere!
And the mischievous things that boy has done
No mind can remember, nor mouth declare.
He fills the whole of his share of space
With his strong, straight form and his merry face.

He is very cowardly, very brave,
He is kind and cruel, is good and bad,
A brute and a hero! Who will save
The best from the worst of my neighbor's lad?
The mean and the noble strive to-day—
Which of the powers will have its way?

The world is needing his strength and skill,
He will make hearts happy or make them ache.
What power is in him for good or ill!
Which of life's paths will his swift feet take?
Will he rise, and draw others up with him,
Or the light that is in him burn low and dim?

But what is my neighbor's boy to me
More than a nuisance? My neighbor's boy,
Though I have some fears for what he may be,
Is a source of solicitude, hope and joy,
And a constant pleasure, because I pray
That the best that is in him will rule some day.

He passes me by with a smile and a nod.
He knows I have hope of him—guesses, too,
That I whisper his name when I ask of God
That men may be righteous, his will to do.
And I think that many would have more joy
If they loved and prayed for a neighbor's boy!

Cornie Baker's New Dress.

"Are you going to have two puffs on your skirt, or only one?" This question Mrs. Baker called out from the sewing-room, as her young daughter flitted by.

"Why, two, of course."

"It is a good deal of work," Mrs. Baker said, and she sighed.

"I know that; but when one has a nice dress, why, one wants it made nicely."

From the sewing-room came the sound of Miss Wheeler's voice, singing softly—

"Heavenly Father, I would wear
Angel garments, white and fair."

"Miss Wheeler," called Cornie, "you think it ought to be made with two puffs, don't you?"

"I don't know. I haven't thought about it. Do you want me to think?"

Cornie came and stood in the door and looked at her, in a surprised sort of way. "Don't you think about your sewing when you are doing it?" she asked.

"Well, not more than I have to, in order to do it well. It would be hard work to think about clothes all the time, you know. But about the puffs, that's the way most people think they must have them."

They went into the front room. Mrs. Baker and Cornie talked it over, and all the time came that humming voice from the other room—

"Take away my cloak of pride,
And the worthless rags 'twould hide."

"She has rather a sweet voice," Cornie said. "Mother, I believe I shall have to get some more silk for this sash; it isn't heavy enough. I want it to wear over my white dress, you know, and it ought to be rich for that. Susie Grahame thinks she has the very grandest suit in town, but I suppose there can be things made to look as well as hers." And Miss Wheeler sang—

"Let me wear the white robes here,
Even on earth, my Father dear,
Holding fast Thy hand, and so
Through the world unspotted go."

Cornie shivered a little. "How she does harp on that hymn," she said nervously: "I wish she wouldn't; I'm tired of it."

"Can't you let the poor thing sing?" her mother said: "it's all the comfort she has."

"She might sing something besides that one hymn," Cornie said. But she didn't; she seemed to delight in that, and she sang it over and over, especially those two lines—

"Let me wear the white robes here,
Even on earth, my Father dear."

At last Cornie went and stood in the door again. "Do you like that hymn better than any other in the world," she asked, "that you sing it so much?"

Miss Wheeler looked up brightly. She had an old, rather faded face, but a wonderfully pleasant mouth and smiling eyes. "Oh," she said, "I didn't realize that I was singing loud enough to be heard. Yes, I do like the hymn wonderfully well; I sing it a great deal. It is natural that I should, you know, as it is all about dresses, and I have so much to do with dresses."

Cornie laughed a little. "Not much to do with that kind of dress, I should say. The sort that you have to sew on is mostly the 'worthless rags,' I should think. You see you have sung it so much that I have caught some of the words."

"It was this white dress of yours that made me think of it to-day," the little seamstress said. "It is so pretty, and I was thinking how much I liked white, and then, naturally, that made me think of my own white dress, and I began singing about it before I thought."

"It is not so much like mine," Cornie said, with a little sigh. "Mine is all 'spotted' up with the world, even before it is made. I wish the world wasn't so full of dress, Miss Wheeler. Sometimes I am tired of it, and I should think you would hate it."

"I like dress ever so much," Miss Wheeler said, softly. "I am never tired of thinking about it. 'Clean linen pure and white.' I always did like white linen."

Cornie stood looking at her in silent wonder for a few minutes, then she went away, out of the dress-bestrewn rooms, down stairs to the parlour, and turning over the leaves of the hymn book on the piano, she found the words:

"Heavenly Father, I would wear
Angel garments, white and fair,"

and read them carefully through. Upstairs in the sewing-room Miss Wheeler stopped her singing, and sewed away steadily, with a little shadow on her face. "That's just like me," she murmured at last. "I am always singing, but I never seem ready to speak a word for Jesus; why couldn't I have asked how she was getting on with her other white dress that the hymn tells about? The poor lamb may need a word of comfort that even I could speak."

"Cornie Baker," some of the girls said to her months afterwards, "how came you to take such a sudden and decided stand; be so different, you know, from what you were before? You have been a Christian this long time, but not such a one as you are now."

Cornie was still for a minute, then she looked up with eager, smiling eyes—"I found my help in the sewing-room among my new dresses," she said brightly. "What a quiet place to find help in!" one of them said. Cornie told them the story of the little seamstress, and her hymn about dress, that she sung over and over, speaking her name with a tender voice and a tear in her eye. But the little seamstress knew nothing about it. —The Pansy.

Where the Shine Comes From.

"Well grandma," said a little boy, resting his elbow on the old lady's armchair, "what have you been doing here at the window all day by yourself?"

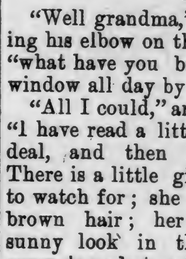
"All I could," answered dear grandma. "I have read a little and prayed a great deal, and then looked out at people. There is a little girl that I have learned to watch for; she has a wealth of sunny brown hair; her eyes have the same sunny look in them, and I wondered every day what makes her look so bright. Ah, here she comes now."

"Who, that girl with the brown apron on?" cried the boy. "Why, I know that girl; that's Susie Moore, and she has an awful hard time, grandma."

"Has she, indeed?" said grandma.

"Then, wouldn't you like to know where she gets all that brightness from?"

"I'll ask her," said Arthur promptly, and, to grandma's surprise, he raised the window, and called, "Susie, Susie, come up here a minute, grandma wants to see you."



The little girl seemed surprised, but she turned at once and came in.

Arthur met her at the door, and said: "Susie, grandma would like to know what makes you so bright all the time."

"Why, I have to," said Susie, "you see papa's been sick a long time, and mamma is tired out with nursing, and baby's cross with her teeth, and if I didn't be bright who would be?"

And grandma put her arm around the little girl, and said: "You could not have a better reason for shining. Keep on shining, dear little sunbeam."—Exchange.

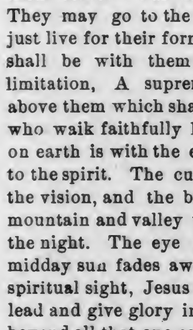
WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]



Washington, D.C., Sept. 26th, 1894.

That a blind minister should take the marvels of the eye for a theme upon which to preach an instructive and interesting sermon might at first glance seem a little odd, but I can testify that a large congregation enjoyed such a sermon, preached at the New York Avenue Presbyterian church, by Rev. W. H, Milburn, the blind Chaplain of the U. S. Senate; and a part of it is quoted below:

"Sight is a matter of constant education and training. Each man sees according to his power of perception. The astronomer views the heavens with the stars and their surroundings, which are never the same. The real estate dealer looks for lots and houses favorably located. The poet and the artist see the beauties of their respective professions. It is most important for every man to see himself. We see others according to our own standard of character. If we are given to back-biting, calumny, hardness of heart, and other evils we shall look for those things in other people. On the other hand we can tell people's power of sight by their character and action. Beds of coal, valuable beyond comparison, have lain unworked for centuries because no one had the trained sight to detect the evidence of their existence. Watts saw the steam engine in the steam which issued out of the tea kettles throat. The eye gets its quality and power of seeing from the brain, the heart, and the soul. Continued darkness diminishes and eventually destroys the sight. Mules kept in a deep coal mine in the subterranean passages grow blind. * * * Christ said to Nicodemus that a man must be born again before he could see the kingdom of heaven. Out of this birth comes the spiritual vision. The natural man and the animal seeth not the things of the spirit. The apostle says that eye hath not seen nor ear heard the things that God has prepared for them that love Him. This spiritual vision demands renuciation of the world, and humility, subjection to Christ. It enables one to see new wonders and new growth, and adds space after space to the possessors sphere. This is the eye of faith which opens to us a new heaven and a new earth, and gives us the companionship of those who are reverent and pure. Death then ceases. Our friends never leave us. They may go to the happy clime, where the just live for their former faith, and where we shall be with them when freed of earthly limitation, A supreme intelligence is shed above them which shall also beam upon those who walk faithfully here. If the walk here on earth is with the evil, darkness will come to the spirit. The curtains will fall before the vision, and the beauties of the world, of mountain and valley will be swallowed up in the night. The eye becomes blind, and the midday sun fades away. If we have lost our spiritual sight, Jesus will take the hand and lead and give glory in exceeding abundance beyond all that one can ask or think."

An interesting place to spend a Sunday afternoon is in the Chinese Sunday-school conducted by the Metropolitan M. E. Church. There are thirty-one scholars in this Sunday-school, twenty-seven adults and four children, and the number of teachers is almost the same, each of the adults having a teacher all to himself, and the four children are in the "infant class," with one teacher. More orderly or better behaved scholars it would be difficult to find. Mrs. Collins, once a missionary to China, acts as translator for the Sunday-school, although most of the scholars can understand English fairly well. Mrs. Collins says the Chinese all prefer elderly teachers because they say that the young ladies who sometimes act as teachers are inclined to be frivolous. The scholars in this school are very generous. They purchase all of their school supplies, and not long ago they contributed $50 toward the support of Christian missionaries in China. Four of them are members of the church. T.

New Series Presbyterian Sabbath-School Papers.

Greatly Enlarged, Much Improved, New Features.

Beginning with the Fourth Quarter, the Presbyterian Committee of Publication are pleased to announce that their Sabbath-School Papers will be greatly enlarged, and so much improved that no publications of like character will be more helpful in themselves or handsome in appearance—their desire being to make them in all respects so superior that it will be to the advantage of all the Schools of the Southern Presbyterian Church to use them. They have added another Quarterly to their list of publications, and no doubt the Teachers of the Infant Class will welcome it—the PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

Notwithstanding the enlargement, the terms of subscription will remain the same as heretofore, enabling them to say that they are the cheapest publications published for the Sunday Schools of any denomination. Samples sent on application.

REMINISCENCES OF DR. SHEPPERSON.

On the 20th of last August, Rev. John G. Shepperson, D. D., died in Langdon Missouri, whither he had gone to reside with some of his kindred. He was a remarkable man, endued with unusual capacity for abstract thought, and with rare power of presenting his thought so clearly that it could be apprehended by others. Sometimes, however, he was singularly unobservant of all that occurred around him. The following instance of this was told by Capt. Johns, of Appomattox, who was at one time an elder in the First church of Lynchburg. Dr. Shepperson was assisting Dr. Ramsey in protracted services, when some of the ladies determined to present him with a new suit of clothes. Accordingly Dr. Ramsey and Capt. Johns took him to a clothing store that he might try on the clothes. Nothing was said about the purpose of the visit as it was desired to give the Doctor a pleasant surprise. The old gentleman went with them as a little child would do, meekly followed to the back-room of the store, took off his old clothes, when requested to do so, and put on the new garments as they were handed to him. Not a question did he ask, but as soon as fully dressed, hurried back to Dr. Ramsey; and without a glance at his new clothes or a single remark about them resumed the conversation which had been interrupted, and with the remark, "Now, Brother Ramsey, as I was saying," plunged into the discussion of new and old school matters.

The first time I saw the Doctor, he was preaching in the Third church, of Richmond. Seeing in the papers that he was to preach, his reputation for eloquence and eccentricities induced me to walk over to Church Hill to hear him.

His appearance was impressive. A spare man, with long, slender neck, he seemed taller than he was—and his countenance was dignified, powerful, and sweet. The opening sentence of his sermon was delivered with much solemnity, but suddenly he squatted, till he almost sat upon his heels; and after remaining thus a moment, with his chin just above the desk, shot up again like a "Jack in the box" without having paused in speaking. Naturally, the audience was startled, and some thoughtless persons laughed aloud. Yet, such was the innate dignity of the man and such his power over his hearers, that in a few minutes he had regained the attention of the congregation, which he held unbroken till the close of his discourse.

Many amusing stories are told about his gaucherie. Major Carr told me that once when Dr. S., was preaching in Richmond, he dropped the Bandana which he so constantly displayed, and missing that useful article, yet too absorbed in his sermon to stop, he began reaching down with his long arms feeling for it on the floor. After several abortive attempts, he touched the edge of a rug, or loose piece of carpet, which he pulled at until it came up, and after one grand flourish, proceeded to wipe his face.

He was a man of great dignity and yet he often did things that might be considered undignified. Only a few years ago, when nearly eighty years of age, he declaimed John Gilpin in the chapel of Union Seminary, and leaning forward, with knees half bent and elbows flapping behind, gave a vivid representation of an unskilful rider on a running horse. This was his contribution to an impromptu entertainment given by the students at the close of the session. But these little eccentricties of character and manner are recalled with tender reverence, because of his goodness and sense—and those who knew him best, though they sometimes laughed at his oddities, revered and loved him most.

Some six or seven years ago, I rode out to see him, while he was sick at the house of Capt. Irving, in Campbell county. The old gentleman's circumstances seemed to me rather desolate, for, though kind friends were glad to minister to his needs, he had neither wife nor child to lean upon, and was singularly incapable of caring for himself. Consequently, when before leaving I knelt beside the bed to pray with him, I asked the Lord to keep his servant from suffering and want in his old age. But, as I spake the words, the dear old man reached out and touched me, saying, "Don't say that. If my Father has more chastisement for me, I want it. I dare not ask to be exempted from that which I may most need." He was incapable of cant or dissimulation, and these words show that he had attained to the exalted state of Paul who "rejoiced in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh experience and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, which is given unto us." In his last sermon before going to Missouri, he bore this testimony, which was recorded for us by Rev. E. W. McCorkle, of Clifton Forge. "I am now," said he, "an old man, and have been preaching the gospel for fifty-two years. The goodness of my Heavenly Father to me has been wonderful. I have no regrets, except for my own faults. I have no fears whatever of this life, or of the life to come."

A MIRAGE THEORY.

Buffalo, August 17.—Buffalonians who lifted their eyes towards the northern sky between 10 and 11 o'clock this morning saw there a beautiful and wonderfully perfect mirage. It was the city of Toronto, with its harbor and the little island which lies in Lake Ontario a short distance to the south. Toronto is fifty-six miles north of Buffalo, but those who first witnessed the phenomenon were able to count the church spires in the Canadian city. The phenomenon is classed by natural scientists as a mirage of the third order, the objects looming up far above their real level, and not inverted, as is the cases with mirages of the first and second class, but appearing like a perfect landscape far away in the sky. The mirage showed the entire breadth of Lake Ontario, a projection east of the mirrored Toronto being easily recognized as Charlotte, a suburb of Rochester. In a direct line between this point and Toronto Bay a large side-wheel steamer could be seen making her way. The vessel was the Norseman. Far to the north of this steamer were seen two dark objects surrounded by smoke, and standing out from the glassy surface of the water. They were two large steamers of the New York Central line, plying beetween Lewiston and Toronto. A sailboat, apparently a yacht, was the most distinct of all the objects. Her mainsail was set, and she was lying close to the wind. She was seen to turn and careen with the west wind, and then suddenly disappear, as though nature had removed a slide for her magic lantern.

In the same way the whole great scene began slowly to dissolve, a bank of black clouds sweeping along and obliterating the picture, to the disappointment of thousands who had swarmed to the tops of the highest buildings. Experts who used fine glasses in viewing the mirage say they were able to discover the outlines of all the streets of Toronto, and declared that a better view of the city could not be had without approaching within ten miles of it.

A careful examination of a map of the country pictured in the sky showed that the mirage was without the slightest distortion. The gradual rise of the city as it slopes back from the water was distinct, and the perspective had a natural appearance. Twenty thousand people saw the rare spectacle.

The above extract from one of the daily papers is of special interest because of the light it sheds upon the nature of the miracle, when the sun stood still at the command of Joshua.

Scientists and scholars have taken for granted that the only way in which this could have occuried, was by the earth ceasing to revolve upon its axis. And the credibility of the record has, accordingly, been attacked upon two grounds: Firstly, that the stopping of the earth's motion would have caused the oceans to rest upon the lands, topple the mountains upon the plains, and produce "universal smash." Secondly, that such an occurrence would have affected the whole world; prolonging the day for one hemisphere, and prolonging the night for the other. And such a wonderful occurrence, it is urged, would have been noticed and recorded by the astronomers of Babylon and Egypt, and incorporated in the legends of many nations.

The first of these cavils has little force. For God who created the universe and hung the earth upon nothing, could, by the exercise of the same wisdom and power, stop the earth so gently that there would not be the least disturbance. The second objection, however, has more in it, and leads me to believe that the sun and the moon standing still was a local phenomenon—probably caused by a mirage, such as is described above.

This mirage or looming is a not uncommon phenomenon resulting from the settling of the air into different strata, so that the upper stratum acts as a mirror. This is of frequent occurrence in the deserts and at some places on the seashore, and may be produced in other places by favorable conditions. It was repeatedly observed this last summer (according to the Lynchburg News) from Court Street, Lynchburg; and the encyclopædias give the record of many such appearances.

Now it seems probable that the standing still of the sun and the moon was produced, not by making the earth cease its revolution; but by a mirage which prolonged the shining of the sun and moon long enough for the victorious Israelites to pursue and destroy their foes; and yet would not be observed in other localities.

For some time we have been expecting and hoping to see a notice that Dr. Beattie's articles on Higher Criticism were to be published in book-form. These articles which have appeared in the Christian Observer, are so valuable that they should be preserved in a more convenient shape.

See on fourth page the card of Rev. R. E. Boyd about our Orphanage.

Read the report of our secretary on the fourth page. God's blessing rests on the labors of our missionaries; the Holy Spirit moves upon the hearts of men and women, making them willing to give themselves to the work, but the church needs to be roused to give more liberally. Remember the last words of our Saviour, and for His sake, rouse your hearts to do His will. "If a man love me," says the Saviour, "he will keep my words."

REMOVAL OF UNION SEMINARY.

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 29th, 1894.

Messrs. Editors:—May I venture a brief expression, through your columns, upon the question recently raised, of removing Union Seminary to the city of Richmond? So far as I have seen, the communications upon the subject in the religious press have been exclusively from clergymen. Their views are, assuredly, entitled to superior consideration; and I feel that a layman should with some hesitation presume to express an opinion, since, perhaps, in such case as this, he cannot claim as at all applicable the proverb that "the lookers-on at a play see more of it than the actors."

The prime consideration is the expediency of removing a costly and well-equipped plant; not an original question of the most eligible location. It will take a hundred thousand dollars to remove it. Neither the Synods of Virginia and North Carolina, nor the city of Richmond are going to raise the necessary money; and so, to employ a current phrase, we are by this discussion "confronted with a theory, not a condition." In this view it is much to be deplored that the question has been agitated, since its only effect will be to create a feeling of unrest. and, to some extent, discontent. But even if it were an original question, I cannot believe that its location in Richmond would be desirable. The only ground of contention for such location that I have seen is the specious plea that it would afford the students a field in which to exercise their opening powers as preachers—in which to try their prentice hand; a gymnasium in which to develop their theological muscles. It seems to me the principal development would be in the chest—the lung power; a premature and dangerous development, for while, on the one hand, the sermonets of these unfledged preachers would not benefit their hearers, on the other hand, the virus of vain ambitions and emulations so saturates our poor human nature at its best, that this exposure of immature youths to the seducements of pulpit oratory would work a positive injury to them as useful pastors, to say nothing of the baneful deflection from the exacting studies that should engage their sole attention. The best preparation that these "seminarians" can make for effective life-work in the ministry, is not to practice declamation, but by thorough mental and moral discipline and drill to make themselves ripe scholars, master our system of theology, and deepen their devotion and consecration to the noble work to which they have dedicated their lives. And so I believe the vaunted advantages of a city to the students would prove a delusion and a snare.

And, in like manner, I cannot but think the allurements of a city to extraneous occupations and diversions would impair the efficiency of the professors. When was it ever soberly contended that the distractions of a thronging populace, rather than the uninterrupted opportunities of retirement and seclusion, were propitious for deep, sedate studies? All or nearly all, of the serious thtnking of the world has been done remote from the busy haunts of men. The best political thought the history of the world can show was done by Jefferson and Mason and Madison, and the fathers of our federative system, in the retirement of their country homes. It has always been the case. It was certainly so in the Jewish church. The "Sons of the Prophets" were the theological students of that day, and their seminaries or "colleges" were not in Jerusalem, but at the sequestered hamlets of Bethel and Ramah and Jericho and Gilgal.

When did this idea of the superior eligibility of cities for theological seminaries spring up? Not with the wise founders of Presbyterianism in this country who placed their "College of the Prophets" at the hamlet of Princeton rather than in New York or Philadelphia; and certainly a comparison of Union Seminary in New York, where such men as Briggs are disseminating agnosticism and infidelity, with the nursery of sound doctrine where the Alexanders and Hodges lived and labored, does not discredit the views of these founders of our first seminaries.

For such academical and professional studies as require a large field for experiment and practice it may be intelligently contended that city colleges are the best. Medical colleges, for instance, have superior clinical advantages in populous communities. But for a theological seminary there can be no better situation than Hampden Sidney. It is no small consideration that the academical college of Hampden Sidney is there located. That this institution has always been a liberal feeder to the seminary is largely due the fact that the latter has been also there as an object lesson. And, then, the seminary is already there with its ample and pleasing structures, and spacious grounds, and admirably selected library of fifteen thousand volumes. And then, too, there surely is something—some little—in its long and eminent record of usefulness and honor to endow and endear it in our love and veneration. Without being sentimentalists, we may at least make a show of resistance to the utilitarianism of the times, and refuse to strip ourselves of the last shred of reasonable and just sentiment. That young man would seem to possess a callous temperament who would feel no enticement to studies, to devotion, to duty, in the halls that were hallowed by such men as Archibald Alexander and John H. Rice, and such worthy successors as Sampson and Dabney and Peck, and their scholarly and consecrated associates. And besides this, Prince Edward and Charlotte were, next to Hanover, the earliest seat of Presbyterianism south of the Potomac and east of the Blue Ridge; and Hampden Sidney is the very heart of that early life of our Church. There should be, must be, much in such a presence to quicken the sensibilities and activities of the student. It is there, if anywhere, that the young theologian may feel the sentiment of the most elegant of Roman writers who in describing the vivid emotions excited by a view of the residences of those we are accustomed to revere, exclaims, "whichever way we turn we set our foot upon some dear historic spot." The saying of Dr. Johnson is as true as it is trite that "the man is little to be envied whose patriotism would not gain force upon the plains of Marathon, or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Iona."

I sincerely hope, sir, that you will signalize your accession to the editorial tripod by an earnest protest against the removal of the seminary. L. S. M.

INK SPOTS.

"To die is gain." How, and what, to the believer, is the gain? "In exemption; he shall not see evil any more. In residence; exchanges his clay hamlet for the 'building of God, a house not made with hands.' In fellowship: joins 'the spirits of just men made perfect.' In knowledge: he now 'sees through a glass darkly; then face to face.' In holiness; will be presented faultless before the throne. In pleasure; faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy."

Lucretius alone of all ancient poets wrote as if he had a mission. Juvenal had indignation and scorn, but has not the earnestness of Lucretius. He has not the fervor of a reformer, or fanatical propagandist. He was dominated by his belief in matter as the only power in nature, and has the force of a man striving to bring the world to hold that, which glowed in his own bosom with white heat. He had the imperious arrogance and pride of Milton, and the high disdain of Dante. He holds a brief against the immortality of the soul, and the existence and government of any supernatural power over man; all things with him are only forms of matter, yet he burns and thrills with ardor as if he was fighting for humanity against cruel foes. The Demon of Materialism inspired him, yea seven devils have entered into him. His expostulations and pathetic exclamations over the blindness and folly of men struggling for that power and riches which can not bring peace; wandering in paths of error, or entangled in degrading superstitions, or cowering under imaginary fears, or sinking into sensuality and crime, have almost the tone of an Hebrew prophet. A sublime fervor sweeps him along in a rapt earnestness, that carries all before it. No man ever portrayed as he has the misery of sensual passion in excess, sated, yet insatiable, wearied, burnt out in its own fires, yet kindling the dying coals with exhausted breath. E. H. H.

THE ECHO.

See that group of children playing
By the water, near the rock—
Hark! what is the echo saying?
How their tunes it seems to mock.

Round and round in glee they play,
In a merry, pleasant game—
Hark! what does the echo say?
When they speak, it says the same.

When they speak in gentle notes,
Gentle notes the echo wakes;
But if angry words they speak,
Angry tones the echo takes.

From the echo in the rock,
Let us now a lesson learn,
Human echoes also mock,
And our words and tones return,

If we wish to hear kind words,
Kind words we must always say;
Let no other e'er be heard,
Lovely children in your play.

If 'tis true that answering echoes,
In our playmates' hearts are found,
Let us never make them give us,
Any but a pleasant sound.

O, what peace in every nursery,
If the little echoes there
All had pleasant words to answer,
All had pleasant tones to share.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

During the recent forest fires in Minnesota, there was a heroic engineer by the name of Root, whose engine was pulling a train loaded with passengers. With the forests blazing on every side, and the track impassable in front, he started to make a backward run of seven miles to a small lake which he knew to be the only place of safety. The train was soon on fire. Many of the passengers' clothes were burning. The engineer in his exposed position was literally roasting. But he stood to his post till he brought his passengers to the lake, in whose waters they quenched their burning garments and found refuge from the encircling hell of fire. Then he fell helpless and half dying having received almost fatal injuries, whose marks he will carry to his grave.

Would to God that we Christians had that man's tremendous sense of personal responsibility, responsibility for our fellow passengers to eternity. God has made us our brothers' keepers. He has entrusted them to our care. What sacrifices of time and energy and means are we making to bring them to the waters of life, where alone they can quench the flames of sin that else will destroy them forever? How many have you brought? How many have you tried to bring? How many are you now praying for and seeking after? May God impress us all with these two solemn facts: first, that every Christian is a God-appointed engineer on the train of human life to bring his fellow passengers to the waters of salvation; and second, that for any engineer to shirk duty means nothing less than the burning of immortal souls, for which God will hold him to a strict account.

In a very special sense every parent is an engineer. The train he is running is freighted with both the temporal and the eternal destinies of those to whom he has given life. To every parent that reads these lines I put the question, where are you running that train? By firm Christian discipline, by careful instruction, by daily family worship, by a consistently holy example, are you carrying your children towards Christ, the only fountain of safety and true blessedness? Or are you shirking these duties that God has placed upon you, saying that your business or your household does not allow you time for these things? If so, may God have mercy upon you and your children. You are an unfaithful engineer. You are like that other unfaithful parent, Eli, the High Priest, a good man but a bad father, attentive to his regular business but neglectful of the Godly training of his children; a neglect whose end was that those children were lost, and that father died of a broken neck, the emblem of a broken heart.

In parents' breasts God has planted a marvellous love for their children, a love that is stronger than death. After those forest fires in the Northwest had sufficiently died down, the searching parties would sometimes come upon an indescribably pathetic sight, a mother and her children lying together in death, the mother's form stretched above her little ones, in a last ineffectual effort to shield them from the pitiless flames. O, wonderful love that God has put into parents' bosoms, making their hearts a reflection, though faint and feeble, of that infinite heart of His! Were this love as bravely and devotedly exercised to protect its objects from the flames of sin as it is to guard them from temporal hurt, how different this world would be!

Spurious Revivalism.

In genuine revivals I believe with all my heart; I was the subject of one; I have labored in them with all my might; I have seen churches gloriously upbuilt by them. But I regard this revival machinery, with all of Sam Jones' apparatus, etc., as an unspeakable curse to American Protestantism. This curse in the South, and abolition and practical politics in the North, have so debauched and degraded Protestantism in the United States, that, if we take in the whole membership, we get an average as low as that of Popery in the United States (not as low as Popery in Brazil). "Our manna has bred worms and stinks."

A leading secular citizen of Charlotte, Va., once asked a famous presiding elder, Parson Skidmore, if he was blind to the enormous percentage of spurious conversions under the campmeeting system. (Mr. Skidmore was known as the shrewdest business man in the county.)

He replied, "Of course we are not blinded to it."

"Why then do you continue to use these methods?"

Skidmore answered, "For a very sound practical reason, sir; because out of these revivals we get a certain small percentage of sound, stable church members, and the multitudes who go back are no worse off than they were before."

The old lawyer asked me what I thought of that. I replied that Mr. Skidmore made two utter mistakes. That his churches were not indebted to the spurious system for the gain of the few sound members; for their conversion was due wholly to the influence of family religion and didactic preaching; and the only result of the hurrah meeting had been to hurry them into the church more hastily and less healthily; even as the half-ripe fruit is harvested earlier by shaking the trees violently, but is less sound than if suffered to ripen on the trees.

It is a frightful error to say that the spurious converts after they go back are just where they were at first. They are miserably hardened; they have grieved the Holy Spirit, they have defiled and weakened their own consciences by the breach of a most solemn vow, and wounded pride makes nine-tenths of them infidels.

If you inquire as to the infidel young men found in our colleges, I could safely aver that every man of them, when brought to the candid truth, would ascribe his own infidelity to his passing through the flint mill of a spurious revival. Ernest Renan, Herbert Spencer and Bob Ingersoll only came along after to fix them up with sham pretexts.

Here is a danger which will supervene in our recent evangelistic movements. If we do not watch we shall be reaping a poisonous harvest. There are powerful motives for using the spurious measures, latent in the spirit of every preacher, in every denomination, except a very few old, experienced, and deeply sanctified ones. These motives are: 1. Well-meaning zeal overturning prudence. 2. Instinctive love of excitement, just as natural to the preachers as to the populace, and perhaps the most powerful of all the irrational instincts of man: witness his love for theatricals, passionate fictions, hangings and fights; anything from a dog-fight up to a duel. 3. The preacher's own unhallowed ambition to boast big results. Just as surely as courting will go on between young men and maidens, whether vulgar or genteel, as long as they are human, just so surely this temptation is going to beset our ministers. Hence it is, I feel that we older men ought to be building the barriers now, by widely discussing these dangers.—Dr. Dabney, in the Christian Observer.

Marriage with Unbelievers.

Ruskin was a man of great ability and mental power, but he wrote many bitter things about Christianity. For instance, in Fors III., p. 17, he wrote concerning the vicarious atonement of Christ:

"There are briefly two, and two only, forms of possible Christian, Pagan, or any other Gospel, or "good message;" one, that men are saved by themselves doing what is right; and the other, that they are saved by believing that somebody else did right instead of them. The first of these gospels is eternally true, and holy; the other, eternally false, damnable and damning."

And again, in Fors II., p. 184, he wrote:

"I have been horribly plagued and misguided by evangelical people, all my life. * * * But my mother was one, and my Scotch aunt; and I have yet so much of the superstition left in me, that I can't help sometimes doing as evangelical people wish,—for all I know it comes to nothing.

The recent biographer of Mr. Ruskin, Mr. Collingwood, gives us this incident of his life, which occurred in 1872. Mr. Collingwood says:

"It was an open secret—his attachment to a lady who had been his pupil, and was now generally understood to be his fiancee. She was far younger than he; but at fifty-three he was not an old man, and the friends who fully knew and understood the affair favored his intentions, and joined in the hope and in auguries for the happiness which he had been so long waiting for and so richly deserved. But now that it came to the point, the lady finally decided that it was impossible. He was not at one with her in religious matters. He could speak lightly of her evangelical creed—it seemed he scoffed in "Fors" at her faith. She could not be unequally yoked with an unbeliever. To her the alternative was plain, the choice terrible, yet, having once seen her path, she turned resolutely away."

Did she not do right? Can the woman who loves and honors her Saviour stand up and promise to love, honor and obey the man who thus scoffs at him?

Say not that it cost her nothing. It cost her life. Three years later, she died. But she died with the consciousness of having been faithful to her Redeemer.—Exchange.

Co-operation of Northern and Southern Baptists in Work Among the Negroes.

The Biblical Recorder does not expect any benefit from the Conference of Northern and Southern Baptists which met at Old Point, Va., to arrange for co-operation in the work of uplifting the colored people, and under the title "HINDRANCES TO CO-OPERATION" writes in the following vigorous manner:

The meeting's object was to make a move toward co-operation between Northern and Southern Baptists in the uplifting of the negro race. That a mighty power is needed for such an exploit cannot be doubted; bus if that power depends on the co-operation of Northern and Southern Baptists—real co-operation—we fear the negroes will have to uplift themselves.

The trouble between Northern and Southern Baptists is not slavery. An exchange says it is time that that institution were forgotten. Had the exchange known what it was talking about the remark would not have been made. Slavery is never mentioned in a spirit of animosity now; and it is the last thing that Southern Baptists would call up to prevent co-operation.

The trouble is not lack of motive to uplift the negro; for Southern Baptists have the same reasons that the North has from a Christian standpoint, and additional reasons worthy of consideration, which the North has not. We have got to get along with the negro. He is here; and in his present state he is not wholesome as a citizen. He has not sufficient appreciation of the duties of citizenship: he is often used for ill by ambition. His prejudices are still easily aroused. And the Southern Baptists realize these things as the North cannot; and they realize that the elevation of the negroes is the sole remedy. If the Christian spirit did not inspire us to seek the moral and religious elevation of the negro, the selfish spirit would.

Why then does not the South join with the North in the maintenance and establishment of institutions for the uplifting of this people? Northerners have taken decisive steps. They have established many institutions not less efficient than young white men enjoy. Surely if the South were disposed to aid in the education of the race, it seems that it ought to aid these institutions already established. But the fact is, it does not; and it has good reasons.

The North has the wrong idea, in our opinion. It wishes to begin educating the negro at the top. It builds him seminaries and universities, when his children are half clad and without books or paper in country schools a dozen weeks in the year. The North takes it that the negro is prepared to pursue the higher studies which he cannot comprehend, a smattering acquaintance with which produces ability to use a limited number of great inappropriate words and an ambition to seem profound. The little learning destroys many a good workman, and drives true conception of human life here and hereafter from his mind. The South sees these things wherever there are young negro men who have attended their colleges or seminaries or universities; and a labored, persistent effort to use great words, an air of conceit, and, withal, manifestations of a vague distrust of their words, is a general characteristic of these men. If, however, they had been given, slowly and thoroughly, a knowledge of reading, writing, arithmetic and geography, instead of abortive ideas of theology, psychology and philosophy, they would be able to do good work, and would not feel called upon to appear learned, nor would they mind hardening their hands like honest men.

The South feels—aye, suffers—these things; and the South is not going to co-operate in giving the negroes university educations, which will intensify their unwholesomeness. The South will instruct them in the word of God, will preach to them and hold institutes, in which they may be instructed; will pay tribute to the support of schools that will benefit them; but further than this it will not go. If this is co-operation, very well.

A Personal Helper.

Jesus lays down the principle of the Divine life, provides an example for imitation, and, what is even more important, supplies the necessary motive and impulse. He exhibits in His life complete harmony of the human and the Divine and teaches us how we may at the same time live in peace with God and in helpful and happy relations with our fellows. He reconciles the demands of time and eternity and in the midst of the doubts and confusions of life shows how we may nourish hope and create a symmetrical character. But Christ's power as a Saviour does not end with the historic and ethical element. In the process of salvation there is possible for every soul the personal communion which Christ gave to His disciples. There was something in the Master that eluded definition. He was greater than anything He ever said or did. And when in personal contact with Him their power to overcome was vastly increased. Under the influence of His spirit, vision grew clearer, will, stronger, hearts, more restful. The same power He gives to His disciples in all times. To the tempted, the lonely, to those who seek for the light, to those who battle with self and with evil, Christ comes as a personal helper and friend. The end of Christ's work is the beginning of all into willing subjection to the moral law, so that the grand consummation will be the complete and beneficent rule of God. The long travail of the world will result in a perfected humanity, man one with Christ, made one with God.—Rev. C. H. Eatan, in the Chautauquan.

The Need for Faith.

In these troubled times we have great need of faith and trust. We need it for the faithful fulfilment of duty, in that state of life to which it hath pleased God to call us. We want faith, clear and strong, in the loving Fatherhood of God, even when the day is darkest, and it seems as if God had forgotten to be gracious. "The path of duty, though trodden with a heavy heart, leads to peace." There is a great and universal moral sickness in the world which is the cause of most of the prevailing troubles, and there is but one remedy, but one Physician. The curse must come from within rather than from without. Faith and love are wanting everywhere. Rich and poor, the high and low, each one by himself and herself, must come to Christ to be healed, to be restored in heart and mind, so as to fulfill the great social law of doing unto others as we would they should do unto us.

Purity of Heart.

The more any believer examines his own heart, the more he will be convinced of this: that faith working by love excludes both inward and outward sin from a soul watching unto prayer; that nevertheless we are even then liable to temptation, particularly to the sin that did easily beset us; that if the living eye of the soul be steadily fixed on God the temptation soon vanishes away; but if not, if we are drawn out of God by our own desires, caught by the bait of present or promised pleasures, then that desire, conceived in us, brings forth sin; and that inward sin having destroyed our faith, it casts us headlong into the snare of the devil, so that we may commit any outward sin whatever. Let us learn to follow that direction of the great Apostle, "Be not high minded, but fear;" let us fear sin more than death or hell. "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." Thou, therefore, O man of God, watch always, that thou mayest always hear the voice of God. Watch, that thou mayest pray without ceasing, at all times and in all places, pouring out thy heart before him; so shalt thou always believe, and always love, and never commit sin. One great means of retaining what God has given, is to labor to bring others into this grace, and to publish it to all mankind.—John Wesley.

Love for Others the Test.

Bishop Brooks truly says: "Not by mere moods may I know whether I am living the life of God, but only by knowing that God is using me to help others." How many there are who seek to settle the question whether they are Christians or not by consulting their feelings! If they cannot discern any particular hostility toward God, and do not feel hateful toward the members of the Church to which they belong, they conclude that they must be pretty fair Christians, whereas they may be very destitute of the life of God. The truth is, a personal possession of the life of God will constrain one to help others, to help them out of pure love for their good without hope of fee or reward. There will be a positive yearning to this. It will not necessarily take the shape of leaving one's own duties and neglecting home obligations; but it will manifest itself in a thousand little opportunities of freehanded assistance where neighborly help is needed, where kind words may be fitly spoken, where expressions of kindly sympathy may find sweet lodging-places. If God really lives in us, we will show it by living in other lives.—Rev. C. H. Wetherbe.

MY KINGDOM.

All things are mine that are, and are to be,
And mine without a fretting care to cumber;
No need have I for sordid lock and key,
No dread of thieves prevents my sweet still slumber.

Around me these, my fair possessions, lie:
Mountain and valley, and full-flowing river;
Above me all the blue deeps of the sky
Are mine to have and hold—a joy forever.

For me the piney woods their balsam keep,
And the wild vine secretes its purple juices;
Yea, the warm earth and the unfathomed deep
Yield their hid treasures for my various uses.

What king hath more? He rules "by right Divine;"
But bannered armies are a doubtful blessing:
The wealth of the whole universe is mine,
"As having nothing, yet all things possessing."

PROUD OF HIS CHURCH.

REV. J. ADDISON SMITH DISCUSSES THE RECORD OF PRESBYTERIANISM.

"The Presbyterian Church and Why She Deserves Well of the World," was the theme of a sermon by Rev. J. Addison Smith at Aisquith Street Presbyterian Church yesterday morning. He said in part:

"Surely we can see why the Presbyterian Church deserves well of the world. She has furnished nearly one-half of the Presidents of the United States—Buchanan, Van Buren, Polk, Pierce, Jackson, Harrison and Cleveland. The Harrison cabinet was strikingly Presbyterian. Surely we can be forgiven the pride we feel in that the old historic church is the mother of Presidents.

"Another minor reason why she deserves well of the world is that others have such words of praise for her. Professor Baldwin, of the Yale Law School, says the Presbyterian Church is the most American Church, and Mr. Gladstone says she develops a 'genuine individuality; the love of law combined with the love of freedom.'

"Still another fact is that 350 years ago, in the Reformation, the leaders all adopted Presbyterian principles, so that at that period the Protestants of Sweden, Denmark, Bohemia, Holland, Germany, Scotland, Switzerland, France, Spain, Italy, and many even in England, were Presbyterian in Church government.

"The Presbyterian Church also deserves well of the world because her form of government is not only Scriptural, but the oldest in the world. The oldest churches of which we have any knowledge were Presbyterian, namely, the Waldensian, the Bohemian, the Syrian in the far East; the Church of ancient Britain and the Culdee Church, at Iona, in Scotland. Bishop Lightfoot admitted that the churches planted by the apostles were Presbyterian.

"Our Church has all through the ages been on the side of civil and religious liberty. When the doctrine of divine right of kings was maintained and the rights of man were denied, the Presbyterian Church of Scotland and Holland maintained these rights and struggled for civil and religious liberty.

"Coming over to the new world the three men who paved the way for American independence were young Presbyterian lawyers of New York—Wm. Smith, Jr., Wm. Livingstone and John M. Scott. They banded together and determined to gain civil and religious liberty for the colonies. They formed the Whig Club of 1752. From this club went forth the first effective call for a general congress, though such a call had been touched upon by Samuel Adams. Bancroft says this was the inception of the Continental Congress.

"One more effort was made by the Presbyterians in the famous Mecklenburg declaration of independence of May 20th, 1775—more than a year before Congress issued its declaration. The Mecklenburg convention was composed of twenty-seven staunch Calvinists, thirteen of whom were ruling elders in the Church, including the president and secretary, and one was a Presbyterian minister. The document was prepared by a ruling elder, a graduate of Princeton, (Ephraim Brevard,) from whose paper Jefferson borrowed largely, as can be seen from the fact that Jefferson in correcting the draft of his paper erased the original words and inserted those from the Mecklenburg document.

"The first ecclesiastical body to declare for American independence against the mother country was the Presbyterian.

"The historic old Church has ever been on the side of education. Presbyterians are to-day only 8½ per cent. of the population of the country, yet they govern 13 per cent. of the colleges and educate 23 per cent of the college students.—Baltimore Sun.

How to Judge Genuine Revivals.

BY C. M. HOWARD, EVANGELIST.

When we read so many "Confessions," I suppose it means so many professions of faith in Christ, or conversions; and I suppose the most think, when they make that confession, they are converted and regenerated.

We have known of little children talked to in this way by an Evangelist: "Do you believe in Christ?" "O yes," is the usual answer. "Well, why not confess Him and join the Church?" "How confess Him?" "Rise up in the Church and He will confess you. If you do not, He will deny you."

A lot of children that were very regular at Sabbath-school and seemed interested and attentive, so that their teacher had hopes of their speedy conversion, were taken through the above described process. Considering themselves now safe, they have left the Sabbath-school, spend their Sabbath visiting, and show no love for the Bible or religion. Yet they are members of the Church. This is the style of some Evangelists.

Why so much made of that word confession? Is the commandment, "Go and tell the people to confess Christ?" I read it, tell them to "repent and believe and follow Christ." Confession is a momentous affair with Jews or heathen, —a strong proof of their sincerity, and should be made very prominent in preaching to them; but a very easy thing in a Christian country, especially in a religious meeting, when it is a signal for kind friends, from all sides, to gather around with congratulations and loving words to manifest their appreciation and commendation. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." We would rather hear how many had confessed and forsaken sin and decided to live a holy life, than to hear of their confessing Christ, which, with many, means no more than this, "I am willing to stand up here, with my young companions, at your request, in the presence of Christ's friends, to show I am not now ashamed of him." But how will it be in the presence of his enemies ready to ridicule or persecute?

MANY REPORTED AS HAVING ACCEPTED CHRIST.

"Accepting" is another favorite word in our meetings. In old times, sinners were told to "turn, repent and believe." That became too hard a requirement. Then the word was "Come to Jesus," but now it is only "Accept Christ." People in this selfish world are ready enough to accept something, but very slow to give up anything. So it is a popular word. "O yes," says the sinner, "I will take Christ and heaven if I can keep my pride, selfishness and idols too." In some meetings the only thing is to "accept," and that without any explanation. "All who will accept Christ, take my hand, and join the church next Sunday."

We have seen scores of young and old, under the excitement of a vast and crowded tabernacle, and the bewitching enchantment of a hundred beautiful damsels, with soft and sweet voices, singing "We are travelling home to heaven above, will you go," or something of that kind, come teeming up to take the preacher's hand in this way.

With many, I fear it meant no more than accepting a ticket to heaven, just as one might accept a paid up life insurance policy, even though he cordially hated the president and all the directors of the institution. Or as a criminal would accept pardon, though he hated the Government, was ready to rebel against it, and never intended to keep its laws. God-haters may accept an unconditional pardon, and still keep on hating holiness. "Accept! Accept!" as if that were the only command to the sinner, in the Bible, when it is not there at all, addressed to any sinner, in any state of mind. But, now, no matter what his state, he is told to "accept Christ." How can he heartily accept Christ till the Holy Spirit has convicted him of his sin and misery, and need of Christ? Did Christ tell the Pharisees, "Thanking God they were not as other men," all they had to do was to accept Christ? No! He said to them, "Ye fools and blind, * * * ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? Was the young Ruler, who thought he had kept all the commandments from his youth up, told to accept Christ, and that that was the only "thing he lacked?" No! "Go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor." Shall a man in willing, wilful rebellion against God, be told that all he has to do is to accept Christ and heaven?

Wheat must go through a sweat in the shock, before it will keep. Joseph's brethren had to fall down before him in deep contrition before he gave them his treasures.

In the inquiry meeting of a large tabernacle, we spoke with a man who said he had no trouble about his soul, or wished to be a Christian. "What did you come here for?" "O I like M——, the evangelist; I came to please him." Very likely that man was told to accept Christ, by other workers, as that was the formula in that meeting.

Yet if explained, as it should be, that a man must accept Christ as his Master and King, as a Saviour from sin, as well as from punishment, it might do. But I have not heard such explanations made in these meetings.

A GREAT NUMBER REPORTED AS HAVING BELIEVED.

In some meetings there is nothing to be done, it would seem, but to believe. One says, "I preach nothing but faith." Another, "The text I always use in saving souls, is, 'He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.'" Nothing is more important than faith; but we must believe in our sin and helplessness, or we cannot rightly believe in Chirst.

The commands in the Bible addressed to inquirers are various, and suited to the state of mind of each inquirer. Yet we often see the sinner, no matter what his state, invariably pointed to texts like this, this being a favorite: "Thy sins are forgiven." "Read that; God speaks that to you; believe it. If you believe, 'He that believeth hath everlasting life.'" As much as to say, believe you are saved, and you are saved. What Universalist could ask more? That text (Luke 7: 48) was addressed to a woman weeping at the feet of Jesus. Not to Pharisees and Sadducees, Nicodemus, the young Ruler, Felix, Elymas, Simon, Agrippa, Herod, Herodias' daughter, or the woman of Samaria, or any unconvicted sinner, such as are, now, often told to receive and believe it.

Another says, "Believe that Jesus is the Son of God and you are saved." This is the teaching of a noted Evangelist in press and pulpit. Most sinners believe this intellectually; or at least will think and say they do. To the Jew familiar with all the teachings of the Scriptures and Temple it meant much; but with most, in these days, it means no more than to believe that David was the son of Jesse, and makes no more impression upon them. A mere intellectual or historical faith—an assent of the understanding—is a dead faith. Devils believe Jesus is the Son of God and have confessed that faith. Yet some seem to insist on this intellectual faith as the only thing necessary. Feeling is denounced. We are repeatedly told, the word "feeling" only occurs twice in the Bible but never in connection with conversion. Said a D. D. Evangelist, "I would not give the snap of my fingers for feeling." What a pity such would not read "Edwards on the Affections" or Hodge's "Way of Life." What is sorrow, joy, love, hope, gratitude, but feeling? Are they to be excluded from religion? Faith dissevered from repentance, is certainly not saving faith.

One Evangelist gave instructions like this: "Do you believe there is a God?" "O yes!" "Well that is faith, get up and profess it, and join the church."

A church member who would do nothing for Christ, and to whom we expressed doubts of her conversion, said, "Thank God I am not saved by works, but by faith." Dead faith like that won't save. If Romanists trust their works to save, is it any worse than to trust a dead faith, without works, or repentance? I trow not. Said another, "I was converted two years ago, but I have never tried to keep the commandments yet."—Christian Observer.

This is Not Our Home.

Among the thoughts that dropped like pearls from the pen of the brilliant and talented journalist, Geo. D. Prentice, the following sublime extract upon man's higher destiny is perhaps the best known and most universally admired. Coming from such a source, we can well appreciate it, for that distinguished man had attained a position among his fellows which would have satisfied almost any earthly ambition. Yet all this could not recompense him for the evils and ills of life, and in the eloquent passage subjoined he portrays most beautifully the restless longings of the human heart for something higher and nobler than earth can afford: "It cannot be that earth is man's only abiding place. It cannot be that our life is a bubble cast up by the ocean of eternity, to float a moment upon its waves and sink into nothingness. Else why these high and glorious aspirations which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, forever wandering unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and the clouds come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off to leave us to muse on their loveliness? Why is it that the stars which hold their festival around the midnight throne are above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And finally, why is it that the bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affections to flow back in Alpine streams upon our hearts? We were born for a higher destiny than earth. There is a realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars will spread out before us like the islands of the ocean, and where the beautiful beings that pass before us like shadows will stay forever in our presence."

Faith and Hope.

These go together. We might call them twins, and yet faith precedes hope, for there can be no real hope without faith. We first believe in a thing and then hope for it.

A friend at a distance writes to us that he will make us a visit. We believe his word, we have faith in it, and we hope in his coming. If, however, we have but little faith in his word, our hope will be little, and expectation of his coming will be small. If, also, we have no faith at all in his word, then we shall have no hope of his coming. To hope that our friend will visit us, when we have no faith in his promise to do so, would be both irrational and foolish. We should make fools of ourselves.

A certain man promises to send us a choice gift. We know that he is a truthful, upright, honest man. We have faith in him and in his promise. This is a ground of our hope that he will do as he has promised. We live in hope, day by day, till the promised gift comes to hand. We believe, therefore we hope. We must have faith in Christ before we can reasonably hope in him. To hope in Christ without any true faith in him is an absurdity. And yet there are those who say that they have a hope in Christ, while at the same time they have no real, practical faith in him. This is irrational, absurd, delusive. One had better not dream that he had hope in Christ, unless he has a hope based on a living, obedient faith in him.

A hope in Christ, not established on the groundwork of a personal, surrendering, trustful faith, is a spurious, dead and damning hope.

To hope that Christ will save you, while you have no true faith in him, is worse than no hope at all, for it is a groundless hope, a deceiving hope, a pernicious hope.

A rationalist may indulge in such a hope, but he is actually irrational in doing so. True reason declares that a safe hope in regard to temporal things is always based upon clear, steady faith in those things.

Common sense teaches us that we must believe in an earthly thing before we can or shall hope to get it. Indeed we instinctively have faith in anything before we hope to receive it.

In regard to human beings and earthly things there are elements of uncertainty. The man who promises us a certain gift, though he be honest, may be forgetful, and so he may neglect to forward us the gift; or, it may be that something, over which he has no control, transpires, and prevents him from fulfilling his promise. In such a case our hope is disappointed. But it is not so with regard to Christ's promises and gifts. Our faith and hope in him and his promises are safely placed and surely rewarded.—Religious Herald.

Hiding Behind the Cross.

2. Cor. iv: 5. One of my elders said in prayer meeting: "As I came along Argyle street, (one of our business streets in Glasgow,) I saw a crowd at a shop door, and had the curiosity to look in. There I saw an auctioneer holding up a grand picture so that all could see it; and when he got it in position, he stayed behind it and said to the crowd, 'Now look at this side of the picture and now at that side,' and so on, describing each part of it. 'Now,' said this good man, 'the whole time I never saw the speaker; it was just the picture he was showing,' and turning to us he said, 'That is the way to work for Christ.'"—Bonar.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met at the Mission Rooms October 3d, at ten o'clock a. m.

After the usual preliminary matters were disposed of, the treasurer read his report for September. The receipts for this month were $3,454.98. This is the smallest September collection, or indeed the smallest collection for any month, for several years past. We are led to believe that our efforts to speak encouragingly about our work have produced the impression that we have all the money we need; whereas, the fact is that we have about $6,000 with which to pay an obligation of $25,000 that is due at this time, and should be immediately forwarded to our missionaries.

We hope the October collection will be taken up with this understanding, that we need all the help that we can possibly get in order to maintain the work that we now have on hand, not to say anything of any advance movement.

A letter was read from Rev. S. I. Woodbridge, of Chinkiang, China, reporting the death of Mrs. Haden, an account of which has already been given to the papers.

Very interesting letters from Miss Charlotte Kemper and Rev. W. M. Thompson, of our Brazilian Mission, were read, informing us that matters were taking such shape in the Brazilian work as would enable us to make a considerable reduction in the expenses of that work for the coming year.

Miss Kemper was authorized to go to Campinas, provided the Lavras Mission deemed it expedient, in order that she might assume general supervision of the girls' school, which it is proposed to establish in our buildings there. It is thought that such a school well be self-supporting probably from the start.

On account of the long protracted illness of his wife, Rev. D. C. Armstrong, Jr., has been compelled to bring her home; and they will probably spend the winter at Salem, Va.

An interesting letter was read from Rev. J. L. Stuart, of Hangchow, China. Mr. Stuart thinks that if the Japanese invade China, the present dynasty will be overthrown by an uprising of the disaffected Chinese. In that case our missionaries in the interior will be subjected to very serious inconvenience, if not to danger; but he thinks that in case of danger arising they will be aware of it in time to find a place of safety.

Interesting letters were read from Revs. H. P. Hawkins and W. H. Sheppard, stating that they had had a safe and prosperous journey; and Mr. Sheppard was at Matadi waiting for an opportunity to proceed up the river. Mr. Hawkins was to be left at Lukungs to take charge of the transport business for the present.

Letters were also read from Mr. Adamson and Rev. D. W. Snyder, containing much interesting information, which will be published in the next issue of "The Missionary."

Our docket being shorter than usual, the Committee concluded its business before twelve o'clock, and most of the brethren proceeded on the three o'clock train on their way to Synod at Johnson City.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Davidson College :—At a meeting of the Board of Trustees, of Davidson College, in Charlotte on October 2d, Dr. Shearer reported eight more students at the college than at this time last year. The collections have been several hundred dollars in excess of what they were last year; the buildings have been improved, new seats put in, and other improvements added.

The Home, Charlotte :—The ladies of the First and Second Presbyterian churches of Charlotte opened, on October 2d, a home for old women and children. The building was donated by Mr. R. B. Alexander to the three Presbyterian churches of Charlotte.

Rev. R. B. Grinnan :—The visit of this beloved servant of Christ to the First and Westminster churches of Greensboro, will be long remembered. Large congregations listened with delight to his missionary addresses on the Sabbath, and on Monday afternoon an audience, representing, all ages and almost all the denominations gathered in the First church to hear him describe and illustrate the social customs and costumes of the Japanese. Mr. Grinnan is a very interesting talker. No one can hear him without being entertained, instructed, and edified.

Henderson :—Rev. Wm. Black, our Synodical evangelist, visited Henderson and for some ten days gave the pastor very valuable aid in a series of services. Bro. Black preached twice daily, and held three services on Sabbath while here. The congregations continued to grow until they could not be seated in our house of worship. The meeting was followed up by communion services held by the pastor on Sept. 30th. There were some seven or eight confessions of faith and reclamations of wanderers from the fold. Several have united with the church and we expect others very soon. Our people were drawn more closely together and many of them manifest an increased spiritual tone. Bro Black's preaching is clear, round, forcible and fearless, and his energy, hopefulness and kindly spirit gives us high hopes of his continued success in the work to which the Synod has called him. W. D. M.

Synod's Orphanage :—Rev. R. W. Boyd, superintendent of the Orphan's Home, Barium Springs, thus addresses the Friends of the Fatherless: "I have just received a statement from Mr. J. Q. Oates, treasurer of the Orphans' Home, Charlotte. Our funds are very, very low. Brethren, will you not help us now? Please mention the matter to your people. I do not ask you to take up a special collection in advance of Thanksgiving, but perhaps some lover of Jesus and His children can, without feeling it burdensome, send forward a contribution that will assist in relieving the present necessity. If money cannot be sent, provisions of any kind will be thankfully received.

Monroe :—Rev. G. E. Chandler has been called to the pastorate of the Monroe church.

Concord :—Rev. W. C. Alexander preached his first sermon as pastor of the First Presbyterian church, on Sunday morning. He preached with much acceptance from 2nd Thessalonians, 3: 1. In the evening the Methodist congregation united in worship with them.

New Berne :—A series of meetings were commenced on Sunday night by Evangelist Gales, of Greensboro, in the Presbyterian church. The meetings are undenominational. All Christians are invited to share in them. Mr. Gales is an Episcopalian, and an earnest, ardent and successful worker.

Warrenton Church :—We ordained and installed two deacons last Sunday at our regular meeting. May the Lord who has led us thus far continue to pour upon us his blessing.

ALABAMA.

Tuscaloosa :—Stillman Instititute is filled with rejoicing because there were eighteen students present at its opening to-day, six of whom are new men. Everybody feels good over it. God's people must come to our help more liberally, because the work is surely growing. We shall need clothing, and will gladly receive boxes. Let some church remember, the wives and children of the married students here. Come, brethren, now is the time to push things. Just help us a little.

A. L. PHILLIPS,
Secretary.

TEXAS.

Rev. W. H. Claggett :—At the recent meeting of Dallas Presbytery, the following resolutions was adopted, and similar action was taken by "Central Texas." We have no knowledge of the matter beyond what is contained in this notice:

WHEREAS, The Rev. W. H. Claggett, who is not even a member of the Synod of Texas, has been visiting churches within our bounds, and has proposed a scheme for a Presbyterian University for Texas; and

WHEREAS, We are fully persuaded that such a movement is ill-advised at the present juncture, since we already have the institutions of Austin College, Daniel Baker College and the School of Theology, each badly in need of all the aid our churches will be able to give them for years to come: Therefore, be it

Resolved 1st. That we overture the Synod of Texas, which convenes in Brownwood, on October 12th, to take such action as may be deemed advisable in the premises." It was

Resolved 2d. That this Presbytery call attention to a time-honored custom and usage, that when a minister of another Presbytery labors a length of time within the bounds of this Presbytery, he obtain leave of the Presbytery so to labor. (See Book of Church Order, chap. 5, sec. 2, page 62. Also sec. 4, page 77.)

Resolved 3d. That this resolution be published in the abstract report of this meeting of Presbytery."

VIRGINIA.

Rev. J. M. Sloan :—Evangelist of Greenbrier Presbytery, was upset while driving and had his shoulder dislocated. We extend to him our sympathy, and hope that he will soon be at work again.

Radford Church :—Has undertaken half the support of Miss Blanche Duncan, one of its members who has just sailed as a missionary to Brazil.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Salem Church :—After the adjournment of Bethel Presbytery. Sept. 14th, Rev. J. H. Thornwell remained to assist the pastor in a communion service, and in the dedication of the church building. Preparatory services were held Friday night and Saturday. Sabbath morning the church was solemnly dedicated to God in a short prayer by the pastor, Rev. G. T. Bourne, after which Dr. Thornwell preached an excellent sermon, and administered the communion to a large number of communicants. The church cost $2,000 of which the Ladies' Aid Society raised one-half.

TENNESSEE.

Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville :—Opened September 12th with 125 students, and the prospects are good for an attendance of at least 150 this year. Fifty-five of these young men are candidates for the ministry.

Pulaski :—The churches of Pulaski have been greatly revived. Eighty-two persons joined the several churches last Sabbath, of whom nineteen united with the Presbyterian church.

Sion Church :—Rev. H. H. Hawes, D. D., has been helping his son, Rev. S. P. Hawes, and the services resulted in the manifest quickening of Christians, besides nine professions of faith in Christ.

"RUSTICUS" ON THE WAY FROM VIRGINIA TO TEXAS.

MY DEAR BRO. :—The patience with which you have read my other letters in years past always encourages me to jot down my impressions for your benefit, whether attending church courts or journeying on the rail.

You have never yet had my experience in travelling and sight-seeing when I went to Texas last Spring on a flying visit.

Though the spring has given way to summer, and autumn in time has superseded summer, it makes no difference, for the facts remain the same. You remember, years ago, when we were younger than we are now, there was a little curly-headed boy at Hampden Sidney, in whom you took a deep interest for his sister's sake.

Through all these years we have never seen him, yet, for the first time in twenty years, our paths crossed on this trip, and he stood before me increased ten-fold, of huge aldermanic proportions. That same sister also was seen with several children, but as to the changes time had produced in her I must say nothing. I made a stay of several days in Birmingham, a city of wonderful growth, but badly afflicted just now with the effects of the boom, which raged there some years ago. During this boom period many churches were built, on which heavy debts now rest. The people, however, are hopeful, and in time no doubt will free themselves from the heavy load. The South Highland church began to build after the collapse of the boom and was therefore more reasonable in its plans. Yet, to a stranger, their present debt seems more than their present small membership can carry.

If faith in God and faith in themselves can lift a debt, that debt will be lifted, for never have such efforts been put forth by any people.

A history of what the ladies of that church have done in their endeavor to pay the interest on the debt would not only fill many columns in a paper, but would open the eyes of many of the Lord's self-indulgent children. One refined lady with her boys took the place of the sexton for three months and then turned over the wages into the treasury. She not only kept the church clean, but she kept the many lamps in order, and lit them for every meeting. One shaved her husband and brought her offering. My informant, however, failed to tell me whether the shaving was ever repeated. One did her light washing at home and brought to the treasurer what she would have paid for it, and another did without a servant for a month and gave that money.

One disguised herself as a beggar and begged from her fellow-members, especially the gentlemen of the church, and then informed them afterwards of what she had done.

The crowning act of self-denial, worthy, some may think, of being placed alongside Sir Philip Sidney and the cup of water at the battle of Zutphen, was that of a lady who went without a new cloak and wore her old one through the winter, that she might bring its price and use it for the debt.

Such a devoted band deserves the beautiful building which they have. It is not large, but it is a gem of its kind, and will always stand as a monument of Presbyterian pluck and self-denial.

I was surprised to find in Birmingham among the preachers a strong sentiment in favor of union with the Northern Church.

Leaving Alabama we were soon rushing through Mississippi, a low, flat, swampy land of poor cattle and pine trees. Of course we saw only the worse part. When we reached Richburg, where Kilrain and Sullivan fought a few years ago, we could easily understand why such a place was selected, when they were seeking a place where no one could find them.

When one reaches Louisiana, if he has a trace of sportsman in him, it is bound to appear. A large lake with wild ducks here and there and boys landing fish, all appeal to the cross of Indian blood that seems to be in most men, making them fond of hunting and fishing.

New Orleans we only saw near the river. The day was warm, and the light showers made the atmosphere very damp and heavy. The ground seemed uncertain beneath the feet as you walked, while from the heated soil a noxious vapor was seen to ascend. Having heard that in the foreign restaurants in that quarter one can frequently get the best of meals, I found one kept by some Spaniards. I have in my life struggled with the heavy biscuits and tough steak of a railroad camp, and I have encouragingly dallied with the enfeebled coffee of a city boarding house, but never in my rich experience have I found a worse meal than those dirty foreigners palmed upon me.

Leaving New Orleans we were soon dashing through the low sugar fields, where water lies near the surface. The houses are all built upon piles with board walks extending in different directions, and the men all wearing high-water pants for convenience' sake. As one goes through new States, how easily he can read what the climate is from these little touches of man's art. The board walks, houses on piles and short pants of Louisiana show the prevalence of water, while in Western Missouri the ropes extended from the house to the kitchen and barn would seem to indicate rather high winds.

Leaving behind the water and the low lands of Eastern Texas, we were soon in the high plateau country of West Texas, on the border of which San Antonio, with her elegant houses, beautiful parks and enterprising people sits as a queen of the West.

The first face that greeted me was that of our old class-mate, Rev. J. Phipps, who was engaged in work at the Westminster church. If words were not so inadequate, I would try to describe the pure air and clear skies of San Antonio. But one could as easily paint the beauties of a rainbow or a sunset. No one should visit San Antonio without seeing the old missions, where in early days the Romish fathers gathered the tame Indians, or as the Spanish put it, "reduced Indians," and still further reduced them. The dirt floors are there and the benches, worn by constant use, and the walls; but poor Lo has vanished.

Coming back I saw in a Mexican settlement a small pony with a rope halter—nothing very attractive—yet what the sound of the bagpipe is to the Scotchman, it was to me. It brought vividly before me scenes from my life, when I was a missionary in the vast region lying from one to two hundred miles west of this place. I could see such a pony with such a rope, the camp fire under the tree, the blanket spread with nothing but the stars of heaven to look at, and the long journeys over prairie and mountain with only the beautiful flowers on earth and the dear Lord in heaven to keep one company. The First Presbyterian church here has no pastor. One is sadly needed, for this city above all others needs the leaven of sound Presbyterian doctrine. The revolution of '48 sent over to Texas a number of educated German gentlemen, many of whom settled in San Antonio and the neighboring towns. They were generally skeptical in their religious views, and as their influence is still felt, there are few places in the Union where you will find scepticism more prevalent than in this city. The women constitute the majority of Christians, though there are many noble, earnest Christian men in our Presbyterian churches there. It was my pleasure to meet Bishop Johnston, the Episcopal bishop of Texas. He comes from good Presbyterian stock, being a nephew of Mr. Frederick Johnston, who in his day was one of the most active elders in the Virginia Synod. The bishop is dwelling much upon church unity and evidently expects his little church to swallow up all the others in due course of time.

Coming back I stopped over one night with our old college mate, a prominent lawyer of Gonzales. As his youngest child had been afflicted with my name, I went by to baptize him. Keep your eye on that boy, and some day you will ask, "What's in a name?"

I ran through the Teche country in the day time, where Longfellow's Evangeline once lived. With that eye for beauty for which I am famous, I looked for some modern Evangeline, but in vain. Either the race has died out, or the modern type has deteriorated. Though I did not see Evangeline, I saw other evidences that I was in a country of the Romish fathers. There were crosses everywhere, on the churches, over their graveyard gates and around their necks. Judging from the sad faces of many there are crosses resting upon their shoulders. God grant that it may be the real cross of Christ, and that they are trying to follow Him. The skies of Texas are clear and the air is pure, the lakes of Louisiana are beautiful and the grass is green, but the mountains and valleys of Southwest Virginia give a rest to the eye and to the soul that no other scenery does.

That I may long look upon them is my earnest prayer. Ever yours in Christ,

RUSTICUS.

AN ADJOURNED MEETING OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

GREENSBORO, N. C., October 2nd, 1894.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—I have just returned from a very interesting adjourned meeting of Orange Presbytery, which convened at Chapel Hill on Friday, Sept. 28th, at 2.30 o'clock p. m., and adjourned at 1 o'clock p. m. on Saturday. There were present Rev. M. Culbertson, of Hawfields and Cross Roads, and Rev. M. Hall, of Westminster, and your correspondent of the First church, Greensboro, with three ruling elders. The main object of this meeting was to examine, ordain and install if the way were clear, three licentiates who had come into our bounds. Two of the licentiates, (D. J. Currie and H. S. Bradshaw), were from South Carolina, and, after presenting their certificates, were received under the care of Orange Presbytery, and their examinations, according to our book, were entered upon. We examined these two on all the special topics enumerated and required of the licentiates who apply for ordination, to-wit: On their acquaintance with experimental religion, on philosophy, theology, ecclesiastical history, the Greek and Hebrew languages, the doctrine of the sacraments, and the principles and rules of the government and discipline of the Church; and each of them preached a sermon before the Presbytery. These several trials were eminently satisfactory to the Presbytery, and on Saturday at 11 o'clock a. m. Presbytery proceeded to ordain them "with prayer and the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery, according to the apostolic example, to the holy offices of the gospel miuistry." Rev. S. O. Hall preached the sermon from St. John i: 42, "And he brought him to Jesus." Bro. Culbertson, the Moderator, presided, recited the proceedings of the Presbytery preparatory to the ordination, pointed out the nature and importance of the ordinance, and prepared the usual questions, and at the close, the two candidates knelt, and all the members of the Presbytery, (three teaching and three ruling elders,) laying on hands, and your correspondent, at the request of the moderator, offered the ordaining prayer.

Mr. H. C. Kegley, who expected and desired also to be examined and ordained and installed pastor of Mebaneville and Bethlehem churches, had been unable to procure his certificate in time for our meeting, and so his case could not be attended to.

The Presbytery at Burlington had appointed several brethren to install their pastors-elect, in their several fields, on the fifth Sabbath of September—if the way were clear.

Your correspondent preached at Chapel Hill on the Sabbath at 11 a. m., and installed Rev. D. J. Currie immediately afterwards, delivering the usual charge to the pastor and to the people. I preached also at 7.30 p. m., and had a large and attentive congregation. I was pleased to learn that our Methodist brethren had suspended their usual Sabbath night service to attend at ours, and a very large number of the students were present, so that the church was compactly filled. I preached at night from Romans xiv. 7, "For none of us liveth to himself."

On my return home on Monday, I learned that Rev. D. I. Craig, preached and installed Mr. Currie at New Hope at 3.30 p. m., and that he had a very large congregation; that Mr. Hall preached at Fairfield and installed H. S. Bradshaw pastor of Fairfield and that Hall and Craig installed him Sabbath night as pastor of Hillsboro church. The weather was disagreeable and rainy all day Friday and Saturday and did not indeed clear off until Sabbath noon—but we all agree that we had a delightful time at Chapel Hill and at the various churches on Sabbath. Some other matters were transacted by Presbytery, among which was the dissolution of the pastoral relations between Mr. Lawson and the Alamance church. I had a specially pleasant time as the guest of Prof. Venable and his charming family—God bless his precious children. I love to visit and preach at Chapel Hill, we have some excellent members there, and they appreciate preaching, and seem so pleased and gratified, that it is always a pleasure to me to visit Chapel Hill and greet the friends there—some of whom I have known and loved for many, many years. One old friend, however, I did indeed miss, as she is missed by all who have been at all familiar with Chapel Hill and our church there, for thirty-five or forty years. I mean the honored and cultivated Mrs. Spencer, whose papers in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN were always read with avidity and delight. She now resides with her daughter in Massachusetts.

Meetings of Synods

The Synod of North Carolina will hold its eighty-first annual session in the First Presbyterian church, Greensboro, N. C., on Tuesday, October 23d, 1894, at 7.30 o'clock p. m.

J. ALSTON RAMSAY,
Stated Clerk.

The Synod of North Carolina convenes in the First Presbyterian church of Greensboro on the 23rd of October and it will be Greensboro's pleasure to give you a hearty welcome, and to provide sufficient entertainment for all of you who can come.

It will greatly aid the Committee of Arrangements if you will at once notify the undersigned of your intention to come, and on what day and by which train you expect to arrive. We desire to send to each minister and elder, before he leaves his home, a card assigning him to a home, so that, upon reaching Greensboro, he can go to his place of entertainment, without confusion or delay.

Yours fraternally,

A. M. SCALES,
Ch'm. Committee of Arrangements.

The Committee of Enrollment will meet in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian church, at 4 o'clock p. m., October 23d, 1894.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson III.

Oct. 21st.—A Sabbath in Capernaum.

Mark i. 21–34. Commit vss. 27, 28.

Golden Text. He taught them as one that had authority and not as the scribes. Mark i. 22.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. This lesson comes in direct connection with the last, the scene and the persons being the same. The time was on the Sabbath after the call. Unless the intervening days had been spent itinerating, our Lord had probably taken up his abode at once at Simon's house. If that was the case the fever of his wife's mother must have been a sudden prostration occurring while they were absent at the Synagogue. If he had not been to the house before the fever may have been of longer duration.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The teaching with authority, vss. 21, 22; the miracle in the synagogue, vss. 23-26; the widespread fame, vss. 27, 28; the miracle in the house, vss. 29–31; in the thick of His labors, vss. 32–34.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 21. They go into Capernaum. The end of the preceding narrative, rather than the beginning of this.

Straightway on the Sabbath. That is on the first Sabbath following.

Entered into the synagogue and taught. See Luke iv. 16, and note in Lesson I. The synagogue is probably the one referred to in Luke vii. 1–5.

Vs. 22. Astonished....authority....scribes. Note the similar effect of the sermon on the Mount, Matt. vii. 28, 29. Noting the characteristics of that discourse, observe the frequency of the expression, "But I say unto you," v. 20, 22, 28, 32, 44; also the formula so familiar in all his discourses, "Verily I say unto you," v. 26. The discourses of the Scribes were a comparison and balancing of what Rabbi This and Rabbi That said on this and that minute point of the law. Jesus' teaching shines by its own light and His revelations of what is beyond our knowledge is received as from One who knows. So this authoritative speaking nevers mars the impression of His wonderful humility, but is conceded by all as what is right and natural.

Vs. 23. A man with an unclean spirit. We must distinguish between the fact of demoniacal possession and its effects. The effects might be the same as madness, epilepsy, dumbness, etc. But the fact that produced these effects was not the ordinary natural cause, nor was it due merely to the general malignity of Satan as the source of evil, nor to the ordinary sin of yielding to Satan's temptations and so coming under his power; but to a special relation established between the man and the demon, by which the will of the demon usurped the place of the man's will in the control of his bodily organs. No other explanation accords with the Scripture facts: that the spirits speak, are spoken to, are commanded to come out, enter into other bodies, etc. To say that Jesus accomodated Himself to the superstitions of the time is to accuse Him of fraud. Dr. Huxley, who ridicules the idea of demoniacal possession, acknowledges that he can bring no scientific fact to disprove its possibility. The fact that there is no evidence of its existence now, only shows how far Christ's triumph has extended. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil," 1 Jno. iii. 8.

Vs. 24. The malignity of sin is shown by the frenzy of hatred and terror in which these evil spirits are thrown by the presence of the Holy One. Sinners if placed in heaven would be as miserable as in hell. They go to "their own place."

Vs. 25. The testimony of evil spirits was always a grief to Jesus. "Non tali auxilio"—not with such aid—would He establish His claims. His empire is over the heart and such testimony could only convince the intellect while the heart was embittered.

Vs. 27. It is noticeable that the Sabbath question was not raised. Simple people are apt to be right by instinct upon a matter of this kind. It took the legalism of Jerusalem to start this question, but once started it followed Him even to Galilee. This is another indication that these events are before the feast of John v. See last lesson, First Step.

Vs. 28. All the region round about Galilee. The proper translation is: "All the region of Galilee round about." The writer is not speaking of the spread of His fame into other countries, but of what took place that day, accounting for the throngs of sufferers at sunset.

Vs. 29. See First Step. It is noticeable that from this time the gospel of Mark which has been up to now a comprehensive summary, becomes minute and circumstantial—abounding in the details an eye-witness would give. This confirms the tradition that Mark wrote under the direction, if not at the dictation, of Simon Peter.

Vs. 30. Sick of a fever. A severe type of malaria abounded in the regions about the Sea of Galilee, which was inevitable in a body of fresh water lying in a basin 600 feet below the sea level. Compare John iv. 46, 52.

Vs. 31. Took her by the hand—a gesture of sympathy and helpfulness, and an aid to her faith, but not necessary to a cure. Compare John iv. 50-53.

And she ministered unto them, showing the completeness of the cure. Romanists seek from this fact to make out that Peter's wife was dead, but it is not said that she ministered alone. If Peter's wife were dead it is so much the worse for the Romish view, as he must have married again after he became an Apostle. See 1 Cor. ix. 5.

Vs. 32. When the sun was set, the Sabbath being then over. Peter's house was probably near the sea (compare Matt. xiii. 1, 2, 36; Mark iv. 1, 34-36, showing that Jesus and His disciples went for a while into the house—probably for the mid-day meal—and returned to the teaching on the shore). The multitudes may have been spread out by the sea and not crowded into a narrow street.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying these explanations.

Fifth Step. Study in the light of God's Word the topic of the Lesson.

The Great Physician.

1. The classes cured—"all that were diseased," vs. 32; "divers diseases," vs. 34.
   The fever-stricken, vs. 30; John iv. 52, 53.
   The lepers, Luke v. 13; xvii. 14.
   (Find cases of the blind, dumb, maimed, etc.)
   Possessed of devils, vss. 25, 26. Prize Questions below.
   The dead, Luke ix 49–55; Luke vii. 14, 15, 22; John xi. 43, 44.
   The heart-sick, Matt. xi. 28; John xiv. 1.
   The sin-sick, Luke vii. 48, 50; Mark ii. 17.
2. The manner of the cure.
   With a word, Matt. viii. 16; Luke vii. 7, 10.
   With a touch, Mark i. 41; Matt. viii. 15.
   By the patient's touch, Luke viii. 44; Mark vi. 56.
   Something done to the patient, Mark viii. 23-25; John ix. 6.
   Something done by the patient, John ix. 7.
3. The Physician's sympathy.
   In prompt response, Mark i. 41.
   In affectionate manner, Mark i. 31.
   In tender and cheering words, Luke vii. 13; viii. 50.
   In overflowing tears, John xi. 35, 38.
   In exhausting labors, Mark iii. 20, 21.

Sixth Step. The practical thought of the lesson is that Jesus is the great Teacher and the great Healer. He alone speaks with authority on the great questions of life and death, sin and holiness, pardon and judgment, heaven and hell; He alone can reveal God. And only His blood applied to our souls can cleanse and heal us from the taint and corruption of sin. Is He our Physician and Teacher?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Draw from the scholars the story of the lesson. Get it impressed upon them as the work of one day; the preaching and miracle in the synagogue in the morning; the miracle in the house and the afternoon of rest and refreshment; the scene at sunset—an open air hospital on the beach with the Physician going among the sufferers with a word or a touch; the praises to God and shouts of joy. Take up as much of the Bible reading as you can, and impress the need that each has of healing—the personal need of a personal Saviour.

Prize Questions.

104. Christ's Programme.
1. The Gospel preached to the poor.
   a. The sermon on the Mount. Note Matt. v. 3 and Luke vi. 20.
   b. Teaching the five thousand, Mark vi. 34.
   Compare also Matt. xi. 5.
2. Healing the broken-hearted.
   a. The widow of Nain, Luke vii. 12–15.
   b. Mary and Martha, John xi. 21, 32, 40–44.
3. Delivering the captives (of Satan.)
   a. The demoniac of Gadara, Mark v. 2–4, 15.
   b. The lunatic child, Mark ix. 17–27.
   (The "woman that was a sinner," Zaccheus, the thief on the cross, are another class of example that might have been given.)
4. Giving sight to the blind.
   a. Physically.
   Blind Bartimeus, Mark x. 46, 51, 52.
   The blind man of Jerusalem, John ix. 8–11.
   b. Spiritually.
   The woman of Samaria, John iv. 25, 26.
   The blind man of Jerusalem, John ix. 34–38.

Note. Of course there may be an almost infinite variety in the answers to this question. We have given a few of the most striking illustrations. Any answers that satisfy the question are credited as correct whether they correspond to ours or not.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

The question of defining the Sabbath-school is to come up in Synod in Greensboro. It was deferred in Tarboro, because there were so few present when the committee brought in its report. The paper that was offered was a "capital" one—so far as it went. But it did not cover the whole question. It said something like this: The Sabbath-school is the Church engaged in the study of the Bible.

The object of the committee evidently was to emphasize the fact that the Sabbath-school is the Church, and all church members should be engaged in it; but the Sabbath-school is more than that. There are always some in it who are not the Church, nor of the Church. A very important work of the Sabbath-school, is to go out and gather in the neglected chil dren, and teach them the Bible. Then, in defining the Sabbath-school, let us emphasize this fact, also. J. E. L. W.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The State of Connecticut is to erect a monument to the soldiers of that State who are buried in the National Cemetery at New Berne. A delegation of Connecticut veterans will attend the dedication.

The Wilmington Savings and Trust Co., is doing most excellent work in providing for deposits of small savings. One dollar deposited is one dollar saved that would otherwise probably be spent. Deposits draw interest and small deposits yield large returns. The October report of this company shows a total deposit $71.582; loans $81,660—Resource $98,815.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Veterans' Association will meet in Raleigh at the Fair grounds on Thursday the 29th day of October. A large attendance is requested, and all old soldiers are invited.

The ladies of the North Carolina Monumental Association are endeavoring to raise the money necessrry to erect a monument to the Confederate dead of this State. The membership fee is only one dollar, and it is hoped that thousands who are not now on the rolls will become members.

Rev. W. C. Norman, ihe pastor of Grace Methodist church, of Wilmington, was elected president of the Greensboro Female College at a meeting of the stockholders on October 2d. [We are gratified to hear of Mr. Norman's election, but are sorry to have him him leave Wilmington—Eds. N. C. P.]

The public schools in Wilmington have enrolled some 2,000 pupils for the coming season—about 250 more than last year.

The Newbern Journal says: The fall crop of Irish potatoes and garden peas are looking fine. There are young peas on the vines and tne young potatoes are forming. The stand is almost equal to what it is in the spring of the year and the growth is vigorous.

"A little farm well tilled,
A little cellar well filled,
A little wife well willed."

What could you wish a man better than that? The last is not the least by any means, but how can a wife be well willed if she be the victim of those distressing maladies that make her life a burden? Let her take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and cure all painful irregularities, uterine disorders, inflammation and ulceration, prolapsus and kindred weaknesses. It is a boon and a blessing to women. Thousands are in the bloom of health through using it, when otherwise they would be under the sod. Are you a sufferer? Use it, or some day we may read—

What a Woman Can Do!

I want my lady friends to know of the new field now open for them. In the past 6 months we have made a profit of $907.02 after paying all expenses. All our sales have been made at home, not having canvassed any. My official duties calling me away most of the time, I left the Dish Washer business in my wife's control with the above results. The business is rapidly increasing, and will continue to grow until every family has a Climax Dish Washer. Not a day passes but what we sell one or two, and some days fifteen or twenty Dish Washers. It's easy selling what everybody wants to buy. You can wash and dry the dishes perfectly in two minutes. For full particulars, address the Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio. Get a sample washer and you can't help but make money. They only cost $5. You may just as well be making $5 a day as to be doing nothing.

SELF-DENIALS.

BY N. N. S.

They seem sometimes to be so small,
Those things we long to do;
As though the giving up were vain;
Yet thus are lives made true.

They seem—ah yes! to earthly sight,
Yet to the Father's eye,
No sacrifice the soul can make,
But helps to sanctify.

The little touch, the potter's hand
The yielding clay doth give,
Shall shape the lines of beauty, till
An image fair shall live.

So now, dear Lord, I yield to Thee
My stubborn, erring will;
Thine image in my heart with love
Shall all my spirit fill.

A Girl Student from Japan.—One of the most industrious students of Radcliffe College, Harvard University, is Miss Shuds Mori, a Japanese girl. Her father is a wealthy banker of Yanagawa, Kiushu, Japan, and all the family are devoted Christians. Miss Mori has come to this country to fit herself by study for missionary work in her native country. "I came over," she says, "with Mr. and Mrs. Davis, who are missionaries to Japan sent out by the Methodist Church. My father was converted and baptized into the Presbyterian Church, and I was educated in Japan in a mission school directed by Congregationalists. I do not think the denomination makes any difference. Mr. Davis was settled about fifty miles from my home, and I went to their home and lived for a little while before I came to this country. My father thought I might better do so to get used to American food and learn to eat with a knife and fork and to wear the American dress, etc. * * * Oh, really, very much I like America, what of it I have seen. And the American girls, they seem so bright to me and so nice, I like them very much."—Banner.

"One of the missionary heroes of the world is Miss Annie Taylor, a Presbyterian missionary to Thibet. Wealthy and cultivated, she decided, in spite of the opposition of her parents, to give herself to missions. She studied medicine, and worked as a nurse in a hospital, to prepare herself for her work. A knowledge of dentistry became also one of her tools. Largely at her own expense, she went to China, assumed native costume, settled on the borders of Thibet, and began to learn the language of that fierce people, among whom Christian missionaries have not yet obtained a foothold. Having thoroughly prepared herself, she made an entrance into the country, and there she has lived for some time. She has been exposed to the most terrible dangers, but the people of Thibet have spared a woman where they would not have spared a man. The chiefs, several times, tried to poison her. She was made a prisoner. She was exposed, unprotected, to rain and snow and intense cold, sometimes sleeping at night in a hole dug in the ground, and yet through thousands of dangers, through famine and death, and what was worse than death, she was safely carried, and has returned to tell us wonderful things of that dark nation, and to make ready a force that shall take Thibet for Christ."

Since this was written, Miss Taylor has awakened a deep interest in Scotland in her mission, and having secured a band of some fifteen laborers, has returned to Thibet, and is probably now in that country, the very last to open its gates to the Gospel. Her fellow laborers will remain on the borders of Thibet until they acquire the language, and then enter in with the glad tidings.—Christian Instructor.

Things Useful.

To pickle yellow tomatoes, select small yellow tomatoes and wipe them clean. Spice sufficient vinegar to cover the tomatoes used, with ground cloves, cinnamon and allspice. Tie the spices in little bags and put them in the vinegar to scald until it tastes strongly of the spices. Put the tomatoes in layers in jars; then pour on the vinegar cold. Let them stand over night or a day; then pour off the vinegar and re-scald it. When it is cool pour again over the tomatoes and cover the jars. Let them stand a few weeks before using.

An excellent remedy for coughs is made as follows: Take a cup of mutton tallow and two great spoonfuls of spirits of turpentine; put into the turpentine all the camphor gum that it will dissolve, then add to the cup of tallow, melted, mix thoroughly, and keep where you can have it ready to apply to the throat or chest on a cloth when needed, covering warmly. This gives almost instant relief to any lung trouble, croup, or colds.

Jellied Peaches.—Provide first a dozen good sized peaches and then half a box of gelatine, a cupful and a half of sugar and a pint and a half of water. Soak the gelatine for two hours in half a cupful of the water. At the end of that time put the sugar and the remaining water into a stewpan, and then let them boil for five minutes. Pare the peaches and cut them in halves, then cook them gently in the boiling syrup for ten minutes. On taking the stewpan from the fire turn the soaked gelatine into it; then set it in another basin containing cold water and stir occasionally until the mixture becomes cool. Before the jelly has had time to congeal, dip a mould into cold water and turn the mixture into it. Set in a cool place for three or four hours. At serving time dip the mould into warm water and turn the contents out on a flat dish. Serve with whipped cream or soft custard heaped upon the jelly.

HOW TWO LITTLE BOYS MADE MISSIONARY MONEY.

They carried around some Histories of Mrs. GRIER'S REAL HAIR RESTORER and showed their mother's testimonial. They easily sold a dozen bottles which made calls for more, and now they have cleared $5 and write: "Please send us two dozen this time, everybody is pleased with the Restorer."

The R. H. R. is a N. C. Ladies' enterprise. It is a clean, refreshing hair wash, that is endorsed by hundreds of North Carolinians as a perfect remedy for dandruff falling hair and unhealthy scalps. Wholesale agents Robt. R. Bellamy, Wilmington, Burwell and Dunn, and Jordan and Scott, Charlotte, N. C. Send for Histories of R. H. R. to Mrs. M. G. Grier, Harrisburg, N. C.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THY WILL BE DONE.

We see not, know not; all our way
Is night—with thee alone is day.
From out the torrent's troubled drift,
Above the storm our prayers we lift,
Thy will be done!

The flesh may fail, the heart may faint,
But who are we to make complaint,
Or dare to plead, in times like these.
The weakness of our love of ease?
Thy will be done!

We take with solemn thankfulness
Our burdens up, nor ask it less,
And count it joy that even we
May suffer, serve, or wait for thee,
Whose will be done!

Though dim, as yet, in tint and line
We trace thy picture's wise design,
And thank thee that our age supplies
Its dark relief of sacrifice,
Thy will be done!

If, for the age to come, this hour
Of trial hath vicarious power,
And, blest by thee, our present pain
Be Liberty's eternal gain,
Thy will be done!

Strike, though the Master, we thy keys,
The anthem of the destinies!
The minor of thy loftier strain,
Our hearts shall breathe the old refrain,
Thy will be done!

—John G. Whittier.

The "Steep Step Store."

It was christened by a little four-year-old who trudged manfully up the five steep steps, leading to his coveted sticks of lemon-candy standing like so many prisoners in a glass cage and always seeming to say, "Oh, I taste so good, I taste so good." Then he was always sure of a kind word and loving little pat on the head from his "Mina," as he called her.

She was only a little German girl with blue eyes and flaxen hair, and a neat, deft way of tying paper parcels that one always remembered. Her fingers were long and slender and so was her face. She had not the round, rosy, chubby cheeks one usually finds in those who come from the Fatherland, for Mina had early realized there was much to do in her small world, and being the eldest in a large family of children, it was always "Mina" here and "Mina" there, often shortened to "Mine," until she naturally began to feel as if she belonged to everybody in the wide world excepting herself.

No one else could do up a cut finger quite like Mina, and she could smooth out any quarrel as easily as she smoothed the wrinkles from baby's frocks on ironing day. In fact, the younger trio always called her "Mina-ma," and she had a tender little way of brooding over them quite unknown to the flurried, anxious-eyed mother, who seemed always in a state of chronic bewilderment from the many cares and duties crowding upon her. It was to eke out their slender income that the front room of the small house had been fitted up into a store with one long counter, behind which was stiffly arranged a goodly sample of the necessaries of life.

On rainy days when very few customers dropped in and the little bell over the front door usually took a long nap, it was Mina's delight to gather her brothers and sisters into the back room and "play store." They had round bits of pasteboard for pennies and could make all they wished, so were certainly rich at this period of life. Mina had treasured up real pennies and purchased a pair of toy scales with which they weighed out tiny packages of tea, coffee, sugar, spices, etc. In this way Mina taught the children many bright little lessons in arithmetic, which they enjoyed much better than learning dry "tables" in the school-room.

Next door to Mina lived a poor little cripple with white face and mis-shapen feet, who could not run and play as other children did; he could only look wistfully from the window at their merry sports and be wheeled out sometimes in a rude chair which gave him great delight. The past few months he had been slowly growing weaker and was confined to his couch most of the time. He knew every figure in the old-fashioned wall-paper, and had grown, oh, so tired, of counting over and over again the shepherds with their tall crooks watching such queer looking sheep.

Now and then a child brought in a new picture book and Mina hung at the foot of his bed her one precious framed picture—four beautiful white kittens playing dominoes; the little cripple could almost stroke their soft fur; and how it rested his poor head from counting the shepherds.

But the days of suffering were soon to be ended, and one morning just at sunrise he said softly, "Mamma, I'm going now," and the little life slipped out of its crippled body into the gladness and freedom of the Christ-world where, "There shall be no more death and sorrow, and sighing shall flee away."

This is a story taken from true life, children, and I have really seen little Mina, who most unconsciously plays the heroine in the "Story of the Steep Step Store."—Interior.

Six Easter Eggs.

Harry had been lying on a lounge for three weeks, for he had broken his leg.

It is very hard for a little boy to keep quiet all day; but it gives him a very good chance to show a patient and sweet-tempered spirit.

Harry's mamma and all his friends were doing whatever they could to help him pass away the time. They read to him and told him stories. They brought him pictures and flowers, and fruits and nuts.

"What have you got for me?" he asked one day, in a fretful voice. His mamma had just come in. She showed him something in a little box.

"What are they?" asked Harry.

"Easter eggs, dear. See how lovely they are!"

They were lovely. Each one was colored all over, and had a pretty flower painted on it, with some reading.

"They are for you and your little sister," said his mother. "I will let you have your choice, because you have to keep still. Which do you like best?"

"I want them all," said Harry, putting up an ugly lip.

I am very sorry to say that Harry was not showing any patience or sweet temper. Indeed, the more that people tried to be kind to him the more cross and selfish he seemed to become.

"Don't you want to give some of them to little Jessie?" asked his mamma.

"No-o-o-o," whined Harry.

"See!" said his mamma, taking up one of the eggs. "Do you remember when you went to find wild flowers, last spring? These are the little purple and white anemones that used to peep at you almost from under the dead leaves. And don't you know how the blue violets smile up from the grass? The dear Lord has made everything beautiful for little children, and he loves them all and wishes them to love one another."

"I'll give Jessie two," said Harry, in a very unwilling voice, "and I'll have four."

"Very well," said mamma; which will you keep?"

She felt sorry at seeing what pains he took to pick out the four prettiest for himself, leaving what he thought the dullest and plainest for his sister.

Soon after he woke up the next morning, he heard tripping steps near his door, and soon a cheery voice cried, "Good-morning, brother!" and Jessie's two arms went about his neck as she gave him a loving kiss.

"See!" she said, "mamma has given me two Easter eggs. I'll give one to you, Harry—the prettiest one, too, because you can't run about as I can;—poor Harry!"

O, how ashamed Harry felt as his dear little sister offered him the prettiest of the two he had picked out for her because they were the ugliest, chatting away all the time!

"Or, I'll give you both. Mamma says this is Easter Sunday, when Christ arose from the grave to show people the way to heaven. And he loved little children, and wants them to love one another."

"O, Jessie!" said Harry, "I'll take your eggs, but I'll give you mine, every one. Yes, you must take them."

She had to, for Harry would have it so. She ran out in the garden to find a few snowdrops to put beside his breakfast, and she carried them to him, singing like a bird: "Little children, love one another."—Sidney Dayre.

The Sting in the Breast.

"I've comed again, mamma," said little Lillie White, softly peeping into the chamber where Mrs. White sat writing letters. "Lillie couldn't help it, mamma."

"And what is the matter with my little girl this time?" Laying by her pen when she had written the sentence out, she extended a hand to the little girl, adding: "You haven't got another thistle in your finger, have you?"

"No, mamma, my finger is almost well; but something keeps stinging in my bosom. You needn't take off my dress, mamma; you couldn't see it—its deep. I know what it is—it's naughty, wicked hate. I hate Nellie Marsh; she's never good to any of us. But her aunt in Brighton sends her the bootulest things. Now she has sent a blue dress, and a doll all dressed in white and pink. She des brought 'em out and showed 'em to me, and she said: 'You can't have such booful things, Lillie White.' Then the hate stinged me harder than the thistle a little while ago. Won't you take this out, too, mamma?"

"Only Jesus can take out a sting like that," said Lillie's mother, very gently, her arm about her darling. "Go directly to your own little chamber, dear and kneel down and tell the dear Jesus all your trouble, and ask Him for just the help you need."

The little girl slipped from her embrace and left the room. A little while after she was seen walking in the garden, talking to her poor spoiled dolly, and kissing its face as lovingly as Nellie Marsh could have kissed her brand-new one. By-and-by she raised her bright smiling face to the window, and seeing her mother down, called out:

"It's all gone, mamma—all gone!"—Presbyterian Observer.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D.C., Oct 3rd, 1894.

Although it is illegal to send intoxicating liquors to Alaska and to sell them there, it has long been known, through missionaries, to church and temperance people that the law was practically a dead letter, and that the deadly liquor traffic was demoralizing, not only the natives of Alaska, but many of the white residents as well. These facts are now officially known to the government of the United States, and officials of the Treasury department are now at work trying to devise some effective method of enforcing the laws. This is the result of the recent official visit to Alaska of Hon. Charles S. Hamlin, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Hamlin reports that he not only found that liquors were openly sold in Alaska, but that illict distilling was carried on there to a considerable extent. On one Sunday, which he spent in Juneall, a town of about 2,500 inhabitants, he saw five saloons openly selling liquors. The excuse for this disgraceful state of affairs, as given by Treasury officials, is the distance of the country, the fewness of U. S. officials and the long distances between U. S. Courts. These things, they say, result in laxity in the enforcement of even the few laws there are. It does not seem to me that any great ingenuity ought to be reqnired to have the laws enforced in Alaska. If the U. S. officials now there will not perform the duties they have sworn to do. let them be supplanted by men who will. If there is not a force of officials sufficiently large to enforce the law, their number should be increased. The United States government should be ashamed to allow its laws to be thus openly violated, and a particularly strong effort should be made to prevent it when, as in this case, it is resulting in the destruction of the health and morals of a people who are entitled to our protection and help. It would be more creditable to the United States that enough of its naval vessels should be sent to Alaska to enforce the laws than it is to have those naval vessels idly cruising around the world merely as an exhibition of our ability to fight if need be. This government will never be called upon to fight a more dangerous enemy of its people than the liquor traffic, either in far away Alaska or at home.

Washington has the only Greek Sunday-school class known to exist in the United States. Its teachers are Mrs. M. E. MacPherson, Miss Mary Illsley and Miss Belle Wallace. The number of scholars varies, as they are mostly traveling fruit peddlers who seldom remain long in one place. The teachers speak in high terms of the character of their Greek scholars, particularly of their love of country and of freedom; their respect for age, for their parents and for the Church. They are also said to be as a rule proud of their race, intelligent and remarkable for their rapidity of thought and their pleasure in receiving instruction. The most of them were when at home members of the Greek Church, and great care is taken by their teachers that no part of their instruction shall have a tendency to make them lose respect for that church, although those teachers are all good Methodists.

Congress in assuming the authority to abrogate formal treaties, or parts of them, by general legislation, as was done in the tariff act of the last session and by other acts at other sessions, has raised a question that may sooner or later bring about international complications. Foreign governments do not understand such methods of abrogating treaties. Brazil lately entered an indirect protest against such methods, by declining to recognize the abrogation of our reciprocity treaty and giving notice of its intention to abrogate the treaty in accordance with the provisions contained therein. This week the German Ambassador filed with the State department the formal protest of his government against that clause of the tariff act which imposes an additional duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound on sugar imported from those countries which pay an export bounty on the article to their producers, claiming that this clause of the tariff act violates the spirit of the commercial treaty with Germany. The Ambassador states that the protest is made in a friendly spirit, with the hope that it will cause Congress to correct what his country considers an unjust discrimination against its sugar producers.

A VISIT TO WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

THE JOURNEY.

Hebron church, where Presbytery expected to meet, is in Duplin county, twenty-one miles from Magnolia, a station on the W. & W. R. R. Wednesday evening five of us left Wilmington, and were met at Magnolia, a little after dark, by Rev. J. D. Standford, pastor of Hebron church, and Mr. Henry Farrior, of Kenansville; who were prepared to transport us across the country. The brethren had arranged to take us to Kenansville that night, where we would be entertained by members of Grove church, and then go on to Hebron next morning.

Heavy rains had beaten down the sand, so that the drive of seven miles to Kenansville was quickly and pleasantly accomplished. In the light of the moon, the road gleamed almost as white as snow; and the gloomy swamps looked weird and ghostly, where the trees stood wrapped in mantles of moss, and the black pools beneath reflected the rays.

At Kenansville, after a cordial welcome, and a dainty supper, we went straight to bed where, as we watched the fire light dance upon the walls, in deep restfulness the eye lids closed in sleep.

A DILEMMA FROM HIGH WATER.

The heavy rains, which had so opportunely beaten down the sand, had also flooded the streams, until bridges were washed away and the low lands were under water. A little beyond Kenansville, Oak Grove Creek was impassable, and North East River, which also ran across our route was said to be higher than it had been for twenty-eight years. Learning these things, a council was called Thursday morning to consider what had best be done under the circumstances. Various suggestions were offered; until a brother, who had studied our Book of Order, called attention to a provision which authorizes the moderator "in case of the failure of an appointed meeting, to convene the court at a suitable time and place." Guided by this, we decided to hold our meeting at Kenansville, where we were; and accordingly went to Grove church, where the writer preached to a select congregation of fifteen persons, including the Presbytery; and Rev. G. W. McMillan called the body to order in the following words: "Inasmuch as by the providence of God, it is impossible for the Presbytery to meet at Hebron, the place appointed, and as the members of Presbytery are, to a considerable number, assembled at Kenansville, the nearest point to Hebron, that can be reached; in virtue of the authority given me by Chap. V., Sec. I, Art. 4, of the Form of Government, I hereby convene the Presbytery of Wilmington in Grove church, and do now call it to order."

EXAMINATION OF A MINISTER FROM ANOTHER PRESBYTERY.

A matter of personal interest to the writer was the examination and reception of Rev. Jas. M. Rawlings, who presented a certificate from Montgomery Presbytery. The examination, conducted by Rev. P. H. Hoge, D. D., was conformed admirably to the requirements of our Book. Last spring I was present in Greenbrier Presbytery, when Rev. A. E. Grover and Rev. Mr. Gilmore were received. "Their examination while not so thorough as that usually given to candidates for ordination, was of the same general character. They were examined as to their knowledge. Such, I am told, is the practice of other Presbyteries. Now, according to my understanding of the matter, our Book does not contemplate this. For a significant difference is observed between the directions for examining a candidate, and these for examining a minister from another Presbytery. In the first case, "trials for ordination shall consist of a careful examination as to the knowledge of Theology, &c," while, in the second case, "ministers seeking admission to a Presbytery shall be examined touching their views in Theology and Church Government. There is much difference between examining a man "as to his knowledge, and touching his views," and the change of expression indicates that the examination was intended to be a fence against heresy, not against ignorance. In the examination in Wilmington Presbytery, the chief stress was laid upon acquaintance with personal religion after which a few questions to elicit the applicants full acceptance of our standards, and soundness in the Faith.

The proceedings of the Presbytery may be found in another column, where the report of the clerk is published. All matters which could be postponed without injury, were deferred to the spring meeting, on account of the small attendance, and Presbytery adjourned Friday afternoon.

COUNTRY MEETINGS.

Meetings in the country are nearly always more enjoyable than those in town. There are not so many things to distract attention, nor so many families to entertain the visitors, and consequently the members of Presbytery are thrown more closely together, and their fellowship is more delightful. This meeting was no exception to the rule; and the cordiality with which our hosts responded to the sudden demand upon their hospitality was charming. It was felt that the trouble of our unexpected entertainment was cheerfully and gladly borne.

THE ORIGIN OF THE PENTATEUCH.*

Dr. White, in this book, does not stand on the defensive; but follows his own line of investigation, and, incidentally, considers the errors and vagaries of modern scholarship. Beginning with a vivid sketch of the collapse of Nineveh and Babylon and Lydia and Egypt, all of which powers crashed to their ruin within a hundred years of the time when Josiah found the Book of the Law; it is argued that no principle of Natural Development could account for the origin of the Law at that time. For history shows that in all these civilizations, the development was steadily downward, from bad to worse. There was nothing to lead up to a Holy Law.

In the second part, the Folk-Lore of the heathen is compared with the narratives of Genesis. The Chaldean legends of the Creation and the Deluge, and the origin of evil are studied, and the conclusion is drawn that while the Chaldean records bear the marks of human tradition, "the history in Genesis is stamped with the distinct marks of Revelation."

In part third, the historical investigation is resumed; and, from God's dealings with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, it is inferred that unless God had broken silence and sent into the darkness the light of His truth, there would have been perpetual night. "The thread of divine revelation was again taken up, and the man who had the spiritnal capacity to see and hear was Abram." In like manner from the history of Israel in Egypt and in the Exodus is deduced God's purpose to prepare for Himself a holy people.

Lastly, the Natural Covenant at Sinai is considered, and it is argued that "historic facts disprove the theory that only the Denteronomic code was developed at that time."

All through, the historic credibility of the Pentateuch is maintained. The contemporary records are examined, and the book is found to be "a true history of real events."

Thus the book goes to the very heart of the fight over the Old Testament records, and the authorships, the composition, the credibility and the inspiration of the Pentateuch—the burning questions of the day—are all discussed. It is not light reading: not as light, perhaps, as the subject would permit, without injury; but it is a scholarly and valuable discussion, and well repays study. Hard work and accurate thinking are revealed by every page and it may be profitably consulted for many items of historical exegesis.

*The Origin of the Pentateuch, in the Light of the Ancient Monuments, by Henry Alexander White, Professor of History in Washington and Lee University, Richmond, Va. B. F. Johnson Publishing Company. Cloth, $2.00.

The entertaining and able letter of L. S. M. upon the proposed removal of Union Seminary has failed, so far, to draw fire from any of those who favor the removal. It seems to us that the only chance of accomplishing the removal is for some person or persons to offer a sum of money sufficiently large to cover the expense of new buildings. And even then, it is doubtful whether the Church would agree to the change. The salaries of the professors, which are ample for Prince Edward county, would be inadequate for the expenses of city life. Hampden Sidney College would be sacrificed in the change, and the charming social atmosphere of "the Hill" could not be maintained in a city. It seems to the writer that the Board of Trustees ought to consult the two supporting Synods, before making further efforts to secure a removal to Richmond, or elsewhere.

Commenting upon our Salutatory, the Southern Presbyterian gives us the following kind words of encouragement: "We welcome Dr. Rawlings as our nearest editorial confrere and wish him strength and success in the important work which he is taking up. We hope that he will find the work not so remote from the popular sympathy as he expects, for it has been to us a pleasant surprise to find what a kind of family feeling grows up between an editor and his unknown readers, and to experience the help which is given by the kind words and expressions of interest which come back from time to time to make the editor feel that he is reaching some hearts."

THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON.

Met in Kenansville, N. C., at Grove church, 12 m., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. James M. Rawlings, D.D.

Rev. P. H. Hoge, D. D., moderator; Rev. A. D. McClure, temporary clerk. Rev. Dr. Rawlings was received by letter from the Presbytery of Montgomery. During the meeting there was preaching morning and night.

Rev. G. W. McMillan was chosen to succeed himself as trustee of Davidson College. Two requests for the organizations of new churches were presented. One was granted for the first Presbyterian church ever in Brunswick county, in Town Creek neighborhood. The other was held over until the spring meeting. Upon the report of the commission sent to investigate, Presbytery appointed a judicial trial to be held at Richlands church at an adjourned meeting Nov. 14th, 1894.

The overtures from the General Assembly were referred to appropriate committees to report at the spring meeting.

The narrative, showing growth and encouraging condition in most of our churches, was ordered to be sent to Synod with the statistical reports and those on Systematic Beneficence of our spring meeting.

Upon the report of the Home Missions Committee all our churches were shown to be supplied, and Mt. Horeb was cited to show cause for not dissolving its pastoral relation, the better to group the churches. Presbytery instructed its treasurer to pay the expenses of members of the Commission to visit the Richlands church. The Presbyterial agent of Foreign Missions read a partial report urging the claims of the Children's Missionary.

Pike church, the place, and Wednesday before the second Sabbath in April, 1895, at 12 m., were chosen for the next spring meeting. Presbytery resolved to make an earnest effort to help the colored church at Beaufort.

After a hearty vote of thanks to the people and expressed regrets that Presbytery could not reach the Hebron church, Presbytery adjourned with a hymn, prayer and the Apostolic Benediction.

INK SPOTS.

Old Baxter had a pointed and sharp way in dealing with men unconverted. "Conversion is either good or bad for you; either needful or unnecessary. If it be bad and a needless thing, then let it alone altogether. But if it is good and necessary, is it not the sooner the better? Are you afraid of being safe or happy too soon? If sick, you care not how soon you are well; if you have a bone out, you care not how soon it is set; if you fall into the water, how soon you get out; if your house is on fire, how soon it is quenched—and yet you are afraid of being too soon out of the power of the devil, and the danger of hell, and of being too soon the sons of God and the holy, justified heirs of heaven."

Dr. Alphonso Smith has an exceedingly graceful article on Addison in the "Presbyterian Quarterly." It contains some very felicitous touches as well as striking thoughts. "Style," he says, "is the reflex of the spirit that animates a given age. It is not an addition from without, but a growth from within; and it hardly needs to be said that the spirit of to-day, is almost out of hearing distance from the spirit of the eighteen century. The insistent questions that stir the public mind to-day—the deep spiritual strivings, the mighty scientific problems, the intense desire to know life in all its phases, the hot pursuit of human character into its shyest recesses cannot be compressed into the rhythmical cadences of Addison or huddled into the dogmatic periods of Johnson."

Dr. Smith well and truly says of Addison's style "its free and unaffected movement, its graceful transitions, its delicate harmonies the pliancy with which it fits and enfolds its subject may well make us overlook its almost fatal lack of vigor."

Languid graces have their use in an author, as well as forceful vigors; there are hours in which we need the trumpet tones of the fierce wind's roaring on November nights; and hours also, when we need the quiet and soothing which the west wind on September evenings brings, as it comes to us whispering peace, and lingering with soft caress around the brow, breathing the faint perfume it has caught "in gardens where the rose is dying." This Addison gives us.

Carlyle has not Macaulay's admiration for Addison. He writes: "Addison was a mere lay preacher, completely bound up in formalism, but he did get to say many a true thing in his generation. Steel had infinitely more naivete. It is a cold vote in Addison's favor one gives." One is not surprised at this from Carlyle. "The immensities and eternities and abysses," in which he dealt so largely and powerfully, absorbed him; and so he turned a contemptuous gaze on that little bower of shade and rest, which Addison built along the way, where whispering leaf and peeping sunlight flung glancing lights and shadows over the soft grass and green moss; "Ubi muscosi fontes et somno mollior herb a."

And so we may say of Addison:

"Vale tuum nobis carmen, divine poeta
Quale sopor fessis in gramine, quale per aestum
Dulcis aquae saliente sitim restinguere rivo."

Only we substitute prose writer for poet.

I hope every body will pardon my Latin quotations. I know it is pedantry, but when tags and scraps lie on one's mind, or the page opens where they are and they suit the occasion, they will come out; they do not show that a man is really learned, they only show he picks up here and there.

Says an old writer, "Death comes to the godly man, as Haman came to Mordecai, with the royal apparel and the horse, with commission to do them honor however awkwardly it be performed. I question not but Haman performed the ceremony with a very ill mien, a pale face, a downcast look and a cloudy countenance, like one who came to hang him rather than to honor him. But Haman, Mordecai's grand enemy, must be the man employed to put honor upon him. Glory, glory, glory, blessing and praise to our Redeemer and Saviour by whose own death, grim devouring death is made to do such a good office to those whom it might otherwise have hurried away in their wickedness to utter and eternal destruction."

Here is a letter written by a son to his mother in 1465—"I beseeche you humbly of your blessing—also, modyr, I beseech you that I have sent me too pair hose, 1 payr blak, and another russet, whych be ready for me at the hosers with the crooked back, next to the Blk Friars gate within Ludgate. If the blak hose be paid for, he will send the russet ones unpaid for. I beseeche you this geer be not forgot, for I have not an whole hose to do in. One hopes the hose came.

Here is another, showing they were interested in other things as well as hosiery in that family.

"Also, moder, I herd while in Lunnon, ther was a goodly young woman to marry which was a daughter to Seff, a mercer; and she will have 200 pounds to money to her marriage, and 20 by year after the dysesse, (decease,) of a step moder of hers which is upon 50 years of age—fore I departed out of Trennon I spake with some of the mayd's friends, and have gotten their good will to have her married to my broder Edmond. Master Pykenham is another that must be consulted, wherefore, moder, we beseeche you for a lettyr to Master Pykenham for to remember him for to handyle this matter now this lent." The Paston family evidently had an eye to the main chance. They don't seem to have said any thing about the "mayde's" wishes in this business.

What a neat little touch too, of that "step moder," now 50 years of age at whose "dysesse" the "mayde" was to have "20 pounds by year."

THE NIGHT AND THE MORNING.

To dream a troubled dream, and then awaken
To the soft gladness of a summer sky:
To dream ourselves alone, unloved, forsaken,
And then to wake 'mid smiles, and love, and joy.

To look at evening on the storm's rude motion,
The cloudy tumult of the fretted deep;
And then at day—burst upon that same ocean,
Soothed to the stillness of its stillest sleep.

So runs our course—so tells the church her story,
So to the end shall it be ever told·
Brief shame on earth, but after shame the glory,
That wanes not, dims not, never waxes old.

Lord Jesus, come, and end this troubled dreaming!
Dark shadows vanish, rosy twilight heap!
Morn of the true and real, burst forth, calm-beaming!
Day of the beautiful, arise, awake!

THE BURNT CIRCLE.

A century ago, when our wide western prairie stretched level like the ocean from horizon to horizon, the high grass, dried to tinder by the fierce heat, would often catch fire, and the leaping, roaring flames driven by the wind would sweep forward at a frightful speed. The roving bands of Indians or white men, abroad in the great prairie, when from afar they would behold this fiery death racing after them, had one means of escape and only one. Immediately they fire the grass around them. They burn as extensive an area as possible. In its centre they take their stand. And when the rushing flames reach the border of this circle over which the fire has already passed, they are compelled to pause and part to left and right, robbed of their prey.

Just so, whoever takes his stand in Christ is safe from destruction by the flames of sin. For over Christ the fire has already passed. On Calvary, the Bible declares, He was "made sin for us." There, it declares, He was "made a curse for us." There, it declares again, He "bore our sins in His own body on the tree," drinking to the last drop the wrath and curse of God due to us for sin, and crying in His irrepressible anguish, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me." Yes, dear reader, over that spot the flames have swept in all their fury, and therefore it is the only safe place in all this universe for a sinner to stand. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

And, thank God, that burnt circle made by Christ's sacrifice is wide enough for the whole world to stand in. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." If you remain outside that circle of safety, you perish in the fire, you "die in your sins," and you perish by your own fault. God does not desire your death. God declares that He does not desire the death of any, but that all should turn unto Him and live. He has made that circle wide enough for all.

And what is saving faith? It is nothing but the act of stepping within the circle. It is simply the step out of self into Christ. Whosoever thus puts himself within that burnt circle is safe, safe instantly and evermore, from the fiery death of sin. For God's Word declares, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus," and "they shall not come into condemnation;"—safe now, and safe forever.

Dear reader, where do you stand? inside that burnt circle, or outside? Upon your answer to this question, upon your position with respect to Christ, hangs your every hope for eternity. Where do you stand? EGBERT W. SMITH.

Do not wait till you be holy ere you cast your confidence on the Saviour; but cast your confidence on Him now, and you shall be made holy.—Dr. Chalmers.

ATHLETICS AT DAVIDSON.

The Davidson College Athletic Association held its annual meeting for the election of officers on Sept. 24th. J. D. McDowell, of Manning, S. C., was chosen President for the ensuing year; A. G. Little, Lumber Bridge, N. C., Vice-President; N. H. McGilvary, of Chiengmai, Siam, Secretary and Treasurer, and Dr. Smith, corresponding member of the Executive Committee from the Faculty.

Ninety-one regular members were enrolled, each signifying the department of athletics which he intended specially to pursue. The most popular form of exercise is work in the Gymnasium, 34 of the 91, making this a specialty. Mr. J. E. Brown, Jr., of Charlotte, is the efficient and active Instructor in Gymnastics. He has added several valuable pieces of apparatus since the college opened, and the Gymnasium was never so popular. Frequently in the afternoons one may find nearly a third of the whole body of students practicing in the Gymnasium under his leadership.

Football is next in popularity, followed closely by Tennis. The latter has for some years been the most generally popular form of recreation at Davidson, the twelve courts on the college grounds being often full every afternoon, for weeks at a time. The fact that the young ladies of the village are active participants in the sport, may account somewhat for its all-the-year-round popularity.

Roller-skating is another amusement which numbers among its adherents nearly as many of the young ladies as young men. The "season" was formally opened last Monday evening with a most enjoyable "skating carnival." Among the spectators I noticed Mrs. Graham, of Charlotte, Mrs. and Miss Robinson, of Wilmington, Miss King, of the Faculty of the South Carolina Deaf and Dumb Institute, and other visitors.

Rowing has gained a firm foothold since such ample facilities have been furnished, and divides honors with baseball, each having an eqnal number of devotees. The new 20-foot, 8-oared boat, built during the summer by Manuel Garcia, of Wilmington, is quite an addition to the Lake Wiley flotilla. The lake is only ten minutes walk from the campus, is a quarter of a mile long, and furnished with seven boats, two bath houses, a toboggan-slide, and a well-made springboard in 12-foot water. It is needless to say that it is a popular resort.

Bicycling is rapidly becoming an important department of college athletics. There are twenty-eight cycles in the college and village, it is said, and the number will be much increased next spring. On the road running by Davidson a bicyclist during the summer and fall can travel twenty-eight miles in one direction, and twenty in the other, without a single dismount. The college pastor, the college physician, and two members of the faculty are ardent wheelmen.

The college authorities have never allowed the Glee Club, or the Base Ball and Football teams to travel from place to place giving entertainments, or to engage in contests away from home. In every possible way, however, college athletics has been recognized, encouraged, and liberally supported in what they consider its legitimate field. Hence professional athletes, whose studies are secondary to their training, are few; salaried members of teams, pursuing nominal college courses are entirely wanting; but almost every student in college is actively engaged in some form of athletic recreation or physical training.

LOIS.

How They Missed the Blessing.

BY SALLIE V. DU BOIS.

Mrs. Gray, of Northern Dakota, was visiting the Lee family, and had greatly enjoyed the Sabbath service in the Reformed Church of R——, which she was privileged to attend with the members of the household. As her visit was to be prolonged, and as the Lees lived only a few doors from the church, she took much comfort from the thought that she should often listen to the words of counsel and Scriptural doctrine as preached by the pastor, Dr. Franklin. When Tuesday evening came, Mrs. Gray began to make quiet preparations to attend the weekly prayer-meeting. As the hour drew near she began to watch anxiously for some movement on the part of the family. Father had settled himself in his easy chair with his paper, while mother was busy over a basket of fancy work. The children were also employed—one reading, another studying, and still another looking up new music for choir practice.

"Isn't it your prayer-meeting night?" Mrs. Gray mildly suggested. "Oh, yes," mother answered, "but it is raining, and we never go when it rains."

Noting Mrs. Gray's surprised look, she continued, "We live so close to the church, Ellen, that there are always fair evenings enough when we can attend without exposing ourselves on an evening like this. And aside of that, the meetings are not usually interesting when it rains; the attendance is slim, and the services likely to drag along." Mrs. Gray arose with a resolute look upon her face. "Anna," she said, "will you excuse me if I go? The distance is so short that I shall need no escort." Seeing that her friend was about to remonstrate, she continued, "Do not make excuse for me; I must go. To you this meeting of prayer is a common blessing, to me, living as I have for years on the prairies, it is of such rare occurrence that I cannot afford to miss one season when the Lord places it in my power to go. My soul longs, aye, even thirsts, after these blessed hours when the Lord's people assemble themselves to worship in His sanctuary. But sit still, Anna, I can get my wraps, and an umbrella is all that is necessary to protect me from the damp." "But if you insist upon going I shall accompany you," Mrs. Lee answered.

Mr. Lee, who had been a curious, but silent listener, now laid aside his paper. "You ladies must have an escort," he smilingly said, as he went in the hall for his hat. "Let us make the family circle complete and go, too, girls," said Tom, as he threw aside his books.

And this is how it happened that the whole Lee family, together with Mrs. Gray, entered the lecture-room just as the pastor left the study church parlor for the pulpit desk. Their presence where they so properly belonged should not have excited surprise, but the pastor noted it with lightened heart. He had never thus seen the whole family represented at a weekly meeting of prayer, and had long since ceased to expect them at all when the weather was dull.

The singing certainly did not lag now, for the Lee children were all members of the church choir, and they sang together with a vim which made the little gathering of professing Christians rejoice anew in the gift of song:

"One sweetly, solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I'm nearer my home to-day
Than ever I was before;
Nearer my Father's house
Where the many mansions be,
Nearer the great white throne,
Near the Jasper sea."

"He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." In words of touching love and tenderness did Dr. Franklin picture the faithfulness of God's watching care. "Think you that the One who numbers the very hairs of your heads and holds you as the apple of His eye, will withhold from you any good thing? And should we be less tender? Should the soul of the Christian slumber because of Israel's promise to protect? God forbid! With vigilance we should press on and remember the faithfulness of the One whom we serve." "I never remember a more interesting prayer-meeting," said Mrs. Lee, upon having reached home. "I believe we have missed many a blessing, John, by failing to attend regularly these services of prayer. Suppose we turn over a new leaf, dear, and go hereafter, despite the condition of the weather?" Father sighed. He was thinking of a quiet word of welcome from his pastor, and how he had overheard the sexton saying, "The whole Lee family! No wonder it storms!"

And Mrs. Gray, upon her knees by her bedside, thanked God for her newly granted privilege, and added an earnest petition for the renewal of spiritual grace in the Lee household.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Autocrat Gone.

We clip the following from the columns of the Wilmington Messenger under the above heading. It is from the facile pen of the Messenger's editor, Dr. Kingsbury:

In the death of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes this country loses its best living poet and possibly its most gifted and eminent man of letters. He died at his home in Boston on the 7th inst., in great peace, surrounded by his loved ones. He had but recently passed his 85th year, having been born on the 29th of August, 1809, the same year and month in which the great English poet, Altred Tennyson, was born. Dr. Holmes was the last of that richly endowed galaxy of New England who had shed such a halo of glory upon their section and upon the English speaking race. Emerson, Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier and now Holmes have all passed into the great beyond. Before them that singular, weird genius, master of a style as yet unequalled among Americans, Nathaniel Hawthorne, creator of fictions that will live the longest, departed, and now the last of the great sextet passes away full of years, honored, revered, admired. Dr. Holmes was a genial, noble man personally, rich in common sense, and dowered with genius that charmed and stimulated and cheered. His many sparkling, graceful, beautiful poems; his delightful essays, his delightful imaginary table-talks, as presented in the "Autocrat," will be read doubtless by unborn generations with an uncommon pleasure, perhaps equal to that which marked the reading of his productions by the past and present generations. He was a charming personage as well as an author, and the South will unite with New England in regrets at his going, and in admiration of his fine, richly productive genius. The "Autocrat" is not dead. He will live still on earth in his memorable and graceful productions; and from what he has written in one of his poems, we may hope he will live forever in the mansions of the blest with God's redeemed of the earth.

Only a few days ago we read of his recent saying that a man who lived beyond 85, had lived long enough. It recalls to us some memorable lines from a fine poem, but little known to Americans—the noble poem that Professor Wm. Edmonstoune Aytoun, of the University of Edinburgh, wrote about forty years since on "Blind Old Milton." It closes thus:

"Nor can I grieve for what I leave behind
In the rich promise of eternal day,
Henceforth to me the world is dead and gone,
Its thorns unfelt, its roses cast away;
And the old pilgrim, weary and alone,
Bowed down with travel at his Master's gate,
Now sits, his task of life-long labor done,
Thankful for rest, although it comes so late,
After sore journey through this world of sin,
In hope and prayer, and usefulness to wait,
Until the door shall ope and let me in."

The True Hero.

The age of chivalry is not yet passed. Braver far than plumed knight of song or story, is he who cheerfully denies himself the love of a true woman, the joys of fatherhood and the cheer of his own fireside, that he may comfort and support a widowed mother or dependent sister or, he who faithfully remains in the old home, to lift the burdens of debt from an aged father's shoulders, while others find fortune in distant fields; or, he who abides "until death," the gentle, tender lover of youthful days toward the invalid wife through years of suffering. —The Interior.

"The Ice Was Broken."

It takes courage to be the first in a good movement, but often when we have made a move that is a little pronounced considering the surrounding circumstances, we are surprised to find how many near us have been longing for stamina enough to take just that step.

In a Boston boarding-house roomed sixteen clerks, honest and well-disposed, and belonging to good families. All of them were of the age when the boy, just merging into manhood, generally makes decisions as to his conduct that result in final good or evil.

Three of the young men, who occupied one of the rooms together, were recent acquaintances, and their first Sunday morning in the house brought a trial of moral courage which is interesting to relate.

The hours between breakfast and church time must be whiled away somehow, and two of the room-mates busied themselves with miscellaneous reading.

The third felt a desire to take out his Bible and read it, as he had been taught to do at home. Fearing ridicule he hesitated a good while, but conscience presently impelled him to go to his trunk and lift the lid. Cowardice suggested that it would look "sanctimonious" to be seen reading the Bible. He shut the lid down and walked away.

After nearly half an hour of struggle, conscience triumphed again. He rose and went to the trunk a second time. His hand was on the Bible. Again his courage failed him. As he was turning away, one of his companions called out:

"What's the matter, Ike? You're as uneasy as a weather cock."

Ike laughed and told the truth like a man. To his surprise both the others confessed that they had had the same struggle and defeat. Each thought that he ought to read his Bible, but was afraid to be seen by the rest.

The next minute all three had their Bibles in their hands, and read them together during the next half hour. They agreed to do this every Sunday. The ice was broken.

The next Sabbath morning, while they sat quietly reading, two of the clerks from another room came in.

"Halloo!" they exclaimed. "What is this; a conventicle?"

The three Bible readers frankly told of their agreement. The visitors confessed that only cowardice had kept them, too, from the same duty. They promised to begin at once, and they did so. The example spread, till each of the sixteen clerks in the house spent his Sunday mornings reading the Bible.

Every one of these youths is to-day a useful man. We cannot, of course, say that the mere reading of the Bible on those Sabbath mornings made these men what they are. We can say, however, that the principles of the Bible must have influenced their lives for good, and the associations which, with such a habit, they would naturally seek, must necessarily have been honorable and elevating, and have tended to their success in life. One of them, who afterwards became a minister, related the facts we have given.

One boy's courage to do right may determine not only his own future well-being, but that of many others besides.—Sel.

BOOKS.

Christian Beck's Grandson. Translated from the German of Gustav Nieritz, by Mary E. Ireland. Published by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication. Price $1.00. This is a story of German home life, intended for the Sunday-school library.

The Old Paths, by Rev. Angus McDonald, University Press, Nashville. Price $1.00. There is a strongly felt need of this book which will prove a valuable guide for young Christians and enquirers. It is also full of suggestions for preachers and teachers. It is to be regretted, however, that the author should have incorporated in the book his own views with regard to tithing, as they have never been adopted by the Church.

The Origin of the Pentateuch, by H. A. White, D. D., of Washington and Lee University. Cloth $2.00. B. F. Johnson Publishing Co., Richmond, Va. This will be noticed more fully next week.

The Witness to Immortality in Literature, Philosophy and Life, by the Rev. Geo. A. Gordon, 16mo. Cloth $1.50. Boston and New York, Houghton, Mifflin & Co. This is a very helpful book. It is not a compilation, but a well studied presentation of the thoughts and desires of men as presented by master-minds in sacred literature, poetry and philosophy In reading it we are brought into sympathy with superior souls and our reason is reassured, while our faith is confirmed and hope is brightened. The chapter on the witness of the poets is very fine, That on the testimony of philosophers is strong and scholarly, while the teachings of Scripture are presented with earnest sympathy. Throughout, the grounds of faith in immortality are shown to be as well founded and held to-day as ever in spite of all skepticism and criticism and speculation. The book is well written and published.

Dr. Warfield on the Trustworthiness of the Scriptures.

There has been much discussion among our Northern Presbyterian brethren anent the Portland deliverance on the Inerrancy of the Sacred Scriptures. The statement, "Our Church holds that the inspired word of God, as it came from the hand of God, is without error," has been ridiculed as ungrammatical and nonsensical, and the position taken, that even granting the idea aimed at in its confusion of tenses to be correct (which is disputed), still it would be worthless, as we have no access to the autographs of Moses, the Prophets and the Apostles, and the copies and translations are confessedly more or less erroneous. Rev. Dr. Warfield, in a recent number of the Presbyterian Messenger, takes up the cudgels in defence of both—the Portland and the later Washington deliverance—viz: "That the original Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, being immediately inspired of God, were without error;" and "That the Bible, as we now have it in its various translations and versions when freed from all errors and mistakes of translators, copyists and printers, is the very word of God, and consequently without error." He also shows this to be clearly the doctrine of the Confession of Faith, which is the creed of the Presbyterian Church, North and South. If we understand his contention and conclusions in a long and able article, they are: That our Confessional doctrine concerning the trustworthiness of the sacred Scripture, embraces three inseparable tenets: First, the absolute inerrancy of the autographs or writings in Hebrew and Greek of Moses, the Prophets and the Apostles. (We hardly see how this consistently with any proper theory of inspiration can be questioned. And, further, if we admit the errancy of the autographs, it destroys confidence in all copies and translations, and takes away the occupation of a reverent Biblical critic): Secondly, God has, in His all-wise careful providence, preserved these writings entire and correct, not in any one manuscript or version, but in the manuscripts and versions at large, the printed editions of our English Bible, although no one is without typographical errors. Here comes in the legitimate work of the reverent Biblical critic, to compare manuscripts and ancient versions, and eliminate, by self-evident canons of criticism and exegesis, such errors as have crept into the manuscript of copyists, just as they are found in printed copies, giving us nearer and nearer, as the work proceeds, an exact reproduction of the Bible as it came from first hands; and thirdly, that versions in common use are so nearly correct—for example, our King James'—that the ordinary reader, unacquainted with Hebrew and Greek, may rest assured, that he has to all intents and purposes the very mind of God in His Book, as spoken by Moses, the Prophets and the Apostles; for the variations do not affect in the slightest degree a precept or promise, warning or doctrine revealed in the Word.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Another Vagary.

Rev. Dr. Briggs, one of the most pretentious of the lower critics, is out on a new line of opposition now. Having dug under the foundations of the Bible with his pick he is turning his mighty powers now, as we learn from an article in the New York Sun, toward the preachers of the Gospel. He thinks there are far too many for the good of the world, and that at least a half of them should quit and get their living at something else. He is also pained to see so much of the people's money put into church buildings, and if he be correctly reported, he would tear down or sell about a third of them. He is evidently on the war path and is seeking scalps. If some doughty ecclesiastical athlete does not hitch Briggs' scalp to his wampum there is no telling what may happen. When such an heroic assailant of God's Word begins to cut and slash at the preachers and stand up for reducing the church buildings in some one way by at least one-third, an awful something must happen or the warrior will be sad, and disappointed. The Sun in its own sharp way deals in this wise with this Goliath of Gas. It says:

"Dr. Briggs gave no hint as to what the 90,000 superfluous ministers are to do when they leave their pulpits, or in what way they are to look for the means of livelihood. It would not be easy for 90,000 unemployed preachers to get work in these hard times from which they would derive as good an income as they have gotten from clerical service. We should think that Dr. Briggs might have made some practical suggestion here, perhaps one for the founding of a ministerial colony in the woods, where, by farming, fishing and hunting its members could earn their own living and practice the faith which formerly they preached. Perhaps, again, Dr. Briggs may never have thought that if the ministers are reduced by one-half, the theological professors also must needs be reduced by one-half and where then will he be?"

A man must surely have but little understanding of men, of life's realities, when he wastes his time and brain-power on such vagaries and whims, as impracticable and absurd as the Populist idea of railroad ownership and Government money lending at 2 per cent. Is Briggs of unsound mind, or is it his soul that is out of order?—Wilmington Messenger.

What Brings Peace.

A doctor who was visiting a Christian patient had himself long been anxious to feel that he was at peace with God. The Spirit had convinced him of his sin and need, and he longed to possess that peace which the world can not give. On this occasion, addressing himself to the sick one, he said:

"I want you to tell me just what it is—this believing and getting happiness, faith in Jesus, and all that sort of thing which brings peace."

His patient replied:

"Doctor, I have felt that I could do nothing, and I have put my case in your hands; I am trusting to you. That is exactly what every poor sinner must do in the Lord Jesus."

This reply greatly awakened the doctor's surprise, and a new light broke in upon his soul.

"Is that all?" he exclaimed; "simply trusting in the Lord Jesus! I see it, as I never did before. He has done the work. Yes, Jesus said on the cross, 'It is finished,' and 'whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

From that sick-bed the doctor went a happy man, rejoicing that his sins were washed away in the blood of the Lamb. Christian Worker.

GOING WEST IN WAGONS

Was discussed long ago as too slow, old-fashioned and dangerous and altogether behind the times.

Calvinism.

The Congregationalist thinks that "Calvinism needs to be reinstated, but in its essence it is true." It has one weighty sentence which we are glad to quote, because it comes from a quarter that has had no prepossessions in favor of strictness of belief, and points to a future in which Scriptural truth may be re-asserted fully and distinctly. Here it is: "The times demand, conscience requires, the continuance of freedom with equal rights necessitates a return to Calvinism." More than twenty years ago, Mr. Froude, who now lies ill at Oxford, said very much the same thing to the students of St. Andrew's University. Here are his words to the youths who thronged around him: "Calvinism is the spirit which rises in revolt against untruths; the spirit which * * * has appeared, and re-appeared, and in due time will appear again, unless God be a delusion, and man be as the beasts that perish. For it is but the inflashing upon the conscience of the nature and origin of the laws by which mankind are governed—laws which exist, whether we acknowledge them or whether we deny them, and will have their way, to our weal or woe according to the attitude in which we please to place ourselves toward them—inherent like the laws of gravity in the nature of things, not made by us, not to be allowed by us, but to be received and obeyed by us at our everlasting peril."—Ex.

The Evil of Extravagance.

The Central Christian Advocate has this to say about "one of the root evils:" One of the radical trouble of our era is the excessive expenditures to which as individuals and communities we are addicted. The latest semi-officials estimate of the outlay of the country for national, State, county, town and city expenses reaches the enormous sum of one thousand million dollars annually. No human being can take into his mind this vast aggregate of money. Nearly all public officials have become accustomed to form their estimate and "run" their departments in an extravagant way. Here and there we find public officers who are frugal, careful and heroically honest, but there are many of the other sort. Public funds, therefore, have come to be looked upon in many quarters as so much plunder, from which the sharpest and shrewdest man may get the biggest pull. The use of money in large sums to influence elections and secure triumph at the polls is one of the evils closely connected with this state of affairs. Furthermore, this evil pervades all ranks of society. Expenses, artificial wants, a desire to live in elegance, an ambition to possess the manifold conveniences, comforts and luxuries which money in considerable sums alone will command—these qualities of social life have grown far faster than our means have grown. Everywhere, in all ranks of society, people have lived at too expensive a rate. Extravagance, in many forms, has come to be an almost universal vice. What is needed is a revival of old-fashioned virtues—such as common honesty, rational economy, and the observance of the ancient motto—pay as you go."

God does not give grace until the hour of trial comes. But when it does come, the amount of grace and the nature of the special grace is vouchsafed. Do not perplex thyself with what is needed for future emergencies; to-morrow will bring its promised grace along with to-morrow's trials.—J. R. Macduff.

Satisfaction in Jesus.

One of the scourges of the desert is the sand storm, when the hot wind is laden with light, powdery dust, which finds its way into the eyes and mouth and lungs; penetrating the clothes, stinging the skin, and making life amost unbearable. An apt illustration of the small annoyances, the petty irritations, is the perpetual swarm of gnat-like stings which invade our most comfortable circumstances and make us question whether life is worth living.

Then there is also the mirage of the desert, when from afar green glades seem to attract the weary traveler, who, as he reaches them, finds his hopes deceived and his thirst mocked. Emblem this of the disappointments to which they expose themselves who are ever seeking for some earthly good to mitigate the hardships and sorrows of their life, instead of seeking the fellowship and blessed help of the living Christ, they travel forward, thinking at every step that they are nearing an oasis in the desert march; but, as they approach, the fabric of their hopes fades away into the the air.

"We are made partakers of Christ." These words may mean either that all believers together partake of the fullness of Jesus, or that they all partake with Him of the fullness of God. "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ." But whichever be the true rendering, the thought is inexpressibly helpful. Jesus Christ is our Promised Land, and our Joshua to lead us thither. He gives us rest. In Him are orchards and vineyards, and all manner of precious things. His comfort for our sorrow; His rest for our weariness; His strength for our weakness; His purity for our corruption; His ever-present help for our need. Oh, blessed Jesus, surely it is the wonder of heaven that we make so little of Thee!—F. B. Meyer.

The Beauty of Death.

If there is one thing especially of which many people cannot possibly believe that, under any circumstances, it would seem beautiful, I suppose it must mean death. That must always be dreadful. Men seldom see any misery in life so great as to outweigh the misery of leaving it. But yet it comes to all of us that he who made death made it, like all things else, to be beautiful in his time. When a life has lived its days but in happiness, grown old with constantly accumulating joys, and then, at last, before decay has touched it, or the grounds soften under its feet, the door opens, and it enters into the new youth of eternity; when a young man has tried his powers here and dedicated them to God, and then is called to the full use of their perfected strength in the very presence of the God whom he has loved; when a man has lived for his brethren, and the time comes that his life cannot help them any longer, but his death can put life into dead truths, and send enthusiasm into fainting hearts; when death comes as a rest to a man who is tired with a long fight, or as victory to a man who leaves his enemies baffled behind him on the shore of time—in all these times, is not death beautiful? "Nothing in all his life became this man like leaving it," they said of one who died.—Phillips Brooks.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address:

Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain, from Poortith, Union county, N. C., to Princeton, New Jersey.

NORTH CAROLINA.

St. Paul's Church:—We closed a ten days meeting at St. Paul's church, Fayetteville Presbytery, Saturday night, October 7th. Rev. A. M. Hassell, preached for us eight days. His preaching was simple, yet powerful. Christians were brought nearer the cross, and reconsecrated themselves to Christ and His service. Sinners were converted. Seventeen were added to the church on profession of faith in Christ. Making 128 additions to this church during the present pastorate of ten years.

New Hope Church:—On last Sabbath the session of New Hope church had the pleasure of welcoming another new member—a bright and promising young man who received the rite of baptism. Four others were received in the summer during the week of faithful preaching by Bro. D. I. Craig, of Reidsville. We hope to add others still to the roll of dear old New Hope ere long.

D. J. C.

St. Andrews, Fayetteville Presbytery:—We have just closed a meeting of six days at the above named church. It was indeed a precious season of revival. There were forty-two professions of faith in Christ. And twenty-three backsliders renewed their allegiance to the Savior. We were ably assisted for the first four days by Rev. M. D. McNeil, preaching one sermon per day with great acceptance and much power. To God we give all the praise.

Jonesboro:—Our church here is in a prosperous condition. There is perfect harmony among the members. And there is no end to the gifts of the congregation to their pastor. Since our last writing we are due many thanks for cakes, chickens, beef, butter, jellies, preserves and wood. And Mary Little has not been forgotten. She is also due many thanks to a kind lady for a pretty dress. May the Lord abundantly bless them all.

Burlington Church:—A congregational meeting was held by the Burlington church Sunday, the 14th and Rev. A. Little, of Virginia was called as pastor for three-fourths of his time at a salary of $800 and the use of the manse. It is expected that Springwood seven miles distant will take the other fourth at a salary of $200, but in case they fail to do so, the Burlington church resolved to make the salary $1,000 and take the whole of his time.

Lumber Bridge:—Lumber Bridge church has been blessed with a precious revival. Rev. William Black came to my assistance last Monday. The storm on Tuesday, and swollen streams and wrecked bridges on Wednesday and Thursday, interfered seriously. But Bro. Black preached twice daily to crowds that increased steadily to the close last night. The church has been quickened and edified and twenty-six added to its membership. It is expected that others will be added later. The Word was unfolded simply, clearly, earnestly and soundly. A liberal contribution was made to the cause of Synodical Home Missions. My flock concurs with me in the conviction that Bro. Black is peculiarly fitted to do successfully the work to which he has been assigned.

October 15th, 1894. P. R. L.

VIRGINIA.

Buchanan:—Rev. C. M. Howard has recently labored for nearly eight weeks at Buchanan, Carmel and Rich Patch churches, in the Presbytery of Montgomery, preaching generally every night and lecturing the children every day. At the two last named churches, especially, his labors have born fruits that give joy to the hearts of pastor and people. His instructions to the young are such as to encourage the hope that impressions were made which will, in future years, by the blessing of God promote their spiritual welfare and do incalculable good. He went last week to assist Rev. Bolling Hobson, at Eggleston in Giles county, Virginia, and has several other engagements, in Virginia and Maryland, awaiting him. P. B. P.

Rev. Jas. I. Vance has reconsidered his purpose to decline the call of the First Presbyterian church of Nashville and expects to enter upon the work in Nashville next February. The Presbytery of Norfolk has probably acted upon the matter by this time but the report has not yet reached us.

Dr. J. H. McNeilly, was in Richmond on the the 7th and preached for brethren there.

Lynchburg:—At the First church, Lynchburg, the names of about thirty persons were announced as received since the last communion.

Newport News:—At the communion (on the 7th) eleven new members were welcomed. (Ib.)

Charlottesville:—At the communion service in October there were thirteen additions to the church, eight of which were from the Sunday-school.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Synod:—Synod meets at Greenville on the 23d of October.

Clinton:—At the communion (Oct 7th) there were seven additions, two by letter and five on profession.

Mayesville Church:—Rev. J. E. Stephenson has accepted the call to the Mayesville church.

Rev. W. T. Matthews has been called to the First Presbyterian church of Pensacola. Fla.

Columbia Seminary:—Columbia Seminary has thirty-four students on the ground and others are expected. The Junior Class numbers twelve, all of whom with one exception are taking a regular course. There is an excellent spirit in the student body and a disposition to do good work.—Southern Presbyterian.

Enoree Presbytery:—This Presbytery from being the smallest and weakest in the Synod, has grown and developed into one of the largest and strongest. The number of churches and ministers has doubled since its organization. and now more candidates for the ministry are under its care than any of the Presbyteries. The total number of young men now under its care is about twenty-four.

GEORGIA.

Elberton:—The meetings conducted by Rev. R. G. Pearson, commencing Aug. 26th, resulted in more than two hundred confessions of Christ. No church building in the town was large enough to hold the crowds and a cotton warehouse was fitted up for the occasion. Twenty persons joined the Presbyterian church.

Haysten:—On Sept. 29th, Dr. J. B. Mack, Rev. T. B. Trenholm and Dr. J. J. Dearing (a committee of Atlanta Presbytery), organized the Luther Hays church at this place. There is one remarkable and commendable fact in this matter. As soon as the people petitioned Presbytery for a church organization they began to build a house of worship; and it was finished and services held in it the day before the organization. The house will seat three hundred persons, and is the only church in the village.—Christian Observer.

ALABAMA.

Silver Run:—We have had a delightful meeting at Silver Run. It was begun in the schoolhouse as a union meeting by two Baptist ministers, Rev. Messrs. Nalls and Mullins, and they were afterwards joined by Rev. W. I. Sinnott, Presbyterian, and Rev. Mr. Wilkins, Methodist. The interest in the meeting was great and some nights there was scarcely standing room in the densely packed building. On one night there were about ten or twelve confessions of Christ and it is estimated that from twenty to twenty-five confessed Christ during the meeting. Five were added to the New Lebanon Presbyterian church.

TEXAS.

Weatherford:—Rev. J. D. Leslie, after a pleasant visit to his old charge in Water Valley, Miss., and to relations in Mississippi and Tennessee, returned to Texas, Oct. 1st, to accept the call from the Weatherford church, preached last Sabbath to large and interesting congregations.

KENTUCKY.

Mt. Horeb:—On last Sunday morning, at the Mount Horeb church, the pastor read publicly the action of the church concerning Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge, who had made to them a confession of his guilt and asked the prayers and love of his brethren in leading a Christian life.

The unanimous action of the officers was that while accepting his repentance as sincere and heartfelt, the great publicity of the sin demanded some public action, so he was suspended from the sacrament until Feb. 1st, 1895.

ARKANSAS SYNODICAL COLLEGE.

The Synod of Arkansas, acting through its Educational Committee, has appointed Rev. R. B. Willis, of Searcy to the work of raising an endowment fund for the Synodical College located at Batesville.

This institution, under the leadership of Rev. L. J. Long, D. D., (deceased,) has done a noble work in the past. It has required thorough scholarship at a time when many of the so-called colleges and universities of the southwest insisted upon doing very "advanced" work with pupils whose elementary training had been deplorably neglected.

Dr. Long's use of the Bible as a daily text book was an innovation in the schools of Arkansas. but the rich fruit resulting from this daily seed sowing gives abundant evidence that God blesses His Word in the school-room as well as from the pulpit.

The increasing demands for enlarged facilities in educating our young people for the Master's service make it necessary that the Board of Trustees should control a liberal endowment.

The man whom we have put into the work of raising this fund is a North Carolinian who has cast in his lot with us, who inhabit this "marshy and malarial wilderness" and is one of the most successful and energetic workers of our Synod, as well as a preacher and pastor whose ability and influence are potent factors in the work of our church in this State.

In the fervor and vigor of his young manhood his life has been given without stint or reservation to "building the walls of Jerusalem."

Mr. Willis' churches, at Searcy and Newport will be filled during his absence by Mr. Stormont, who last spring completed the theological course at Clarksville. We are too busy to write often of ourselves and our labors, but give us your sympathy and your prayers as we toil in our acre of God's great harvest field. C.

ROLL OF HONOR.

On Sabbath, Oct. 7th, the following eighteen Sabbath-school scholars of New Hope recited perfectly in order the names of the books of the whole Bible and are entitled to a place on your Roll of Honor:

Miss Nannie Kirkland, Miss Davy Borland, Miss Mary Hogan, Miss Lillian Chandler, Gertrude Chandler, Susie Chandler, Margaret Chandler (five years), Blanche Shields, Maggie Clayton, Mary Craig, Ida Strayhorn, Annie Johnston, Freddie Clayton, Robert Clayton, John Moody, John Chandler, Robert Chandler and George Johnston.

Margaret Chandler is worthy of double honor being only five years old, and all of her name (six) above are of one family.

PLEASE READ THIS.

I beg permission to raise my voice once more in behalf of the struggling churches of Cherryville, Waco and Forest City.

I. RESULTS ACCOMPLISHED.

1. At Waco we have fifteen members, an ample church lot, a neat church 26x40 feet, now complete, save "the three p's"—pewing, plastering and painting. Work thus far has cost some $380.

2. At Cherryville, we have twenty-nine members. An eligible church lot has been secured and partly paid for.

3. At Forest City, we have only ten members. A church lot has been secured and partly paid for, a subscription of some $225 toward a church has been obtained; a good part of the lumber for the building is already on the ground. Funds to pay balance due on the lot are in sight.

II. HELP RECEIVED.

1. For Waco Church.

From Presbytery of Mecklenburg	$ 50 00
" Shelby church	22 60
" Mrs. Carene Elam and others (acknowledged heretofore in N.C. PRESBYTERIAN)	4 00
Total	$ 76 60

To which must be added window-fastenings contributed by Bro. Jno. F. Arrowood, of Rutherfordton, worth $5.00, making $81.60.

2. Forest City.

Shelby church	$ 8 40
Rev. P. H. Dalton and wife	1 00
J. W. Dixon	1 00
J. M. Wharton and wife	2 00
A Young Lady of Concord	1 00
Mrs. Forney, of Brittain church	2 00
Mrs. ——, of First church, Charlotte	2 00
Total	$ 17 40

3 Cherryville.

Rev. P. H. Dalton and wife	$ 1 00

And in this connection, I am sure Bro. Dalton feels lonesome, and would like to have company.

RECAPITULATION.

Contributed by Presbytery (Waco)	$ 50 00
By Shelby church (Waco and F. C.)	31 00
Three Friends of Rutherford county.	8 00
By a member of Morganton church	2 00
By two members of First church, Charlotte	3 00
By two members of Jamestown church	2 00
By a member of Concord church	1 00
By a minister and wife	3 00
Total received for all three buildings.	100 00

Of which amount private contributions from the entire Synod make up but $19.00.

III. ADDITIONAL FACTS.

1. Our people are poor at all three points.

2. They have done nobly, at Waco and Forest City, and will do likewise at Cherryville. One man—a poor farmer—at Waco contributed $50 in labor and materials, and a railroad carpenter at Forest City, working on a small salary, gives $75, others have given very largely in proportion to their means. But one man, in all three of these churches, lives in a finished house of his own.

3. The scant encouragement given us by Presbyterians at large tends to prevent local subscriptions from outsiders. It is being spoken of to our disadvantage. I appealed to 30,000 Presbyterians, and outside of a Presbyterial appropriation and the special collections taken by myself in Shelby church, received but $19.00. Had every church sent me a contribution of one cent per member, the total amount received from that source would have been more than $300, enough to insure the completion of the Waco church this fall, and the building of churches at Cherryville and Forest City. Four hundred dollars would insure the completion of all three churches by Christmas.

4. Our work is suffering for the want of these churches. At two of the points named we worship in churches belonging to other denominations, and cannot proclaim our own doctrines as we would nor hold protracted meetings at will. At Waco, the people are too poor to buy the materials needed for finishing the church, together with stove, lamps etc. We have used candles chiefly in our night services heretofore, and are using seats loaned by a kind Methodist teacher.

5. Our work is needed at each of these three points; the attendance is many times as large as our membership. Besides holding our own Presbyterian population, we are gradually gaining accesssons from other elements. Our Baptist brethren announce it as the purpose of their State Board of Missions to plant a Baptist church within easy reach of every neighborhood in the State. Shall we be less loyal, and leave our struggling little organizations unsheltered, and our scattered members to be absorbed by other churches?

Brethren, I appeal to you once more. Will you help? All contributions will be duly acknowledged in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.

Address,

WM. P. MCCORKLE,
Shelby, N. C.

THE CASWELL FIELD—EARLY LICENSURE.

At a recent meeting of Orange Presbytery, the churches of Bethesda, Yanceyville and Stony Creek were grouped together to form one pastorate. Bethesda and Yanceyville are in Caswell county, and are eleven miles apart. Stony Creek is in Alamance fifteen miles south of Bethesda, and a little farther from Yanceyville, and until recently was a part of the Burlington field, but the growing little city needs more of a pastor's time, and Stony Creek had to seek another connection. Burlington will call a pastor for three-fourths of his time, and Springwood seven miles distant will claim the other fourth. Presbytery directed the writer to visit the Caswell group to ascertain what the field could do for the support of a pastor or local evangelist, and to report at an adjourned meeting to be held during the session of Synod. Sunday, Oct. 7th, the visit was made to two of the churches. Yanceyville is the least hopeful part of the field, since there is no growth there and little business activity, and most of the families in the village are connected with other churches, but there is a faithful little band of workers, with a good church building, and comfortable manse; and there is a good field for work with promise of growth, four or five miles distant. The manse has recently been repaired, and a small, but efficient Sunday-school is maintained.

Old Bethesda seems to have taken on new life. For many years they have been satisfied with one-fourth of the pastor's time, but they are now ready to increase their subscription fifty per cent, and want preaching two Sundays in the month. The writer has known the church for more than seven years, but never saw it show such life before.

Candidate W. K. Forsythe labored in these two churches during the summer, and the increased activity seems to be the fruit of his faithful labors. This leads to the reflection that other candidates are doing good work of the same kind every year. Their labors generally seem to be blessed to the good of the churches they serve, and certainly tend to develop those gifts that are requisite to successful work in the ministry. We cannot afford to do without their work, and they cannot afford to give up this important part of their education. Why not then have some provision for doing LEGALLY what must and will continue to be done?

Stony Creek is an old, well established church with a membership of about one hundred, and with a faithful, active pastor would give promise of steady growth. Presbytery will doubtless put a man in the field as soon one that is suitable and available can be found. W. R. COPPEDGE.

The Trustees of Female Education Meet in Statesville.

STATESVILLE, N. C., Oct. 5, '94.

The Trustees for Female Education of Concord Presbytery met at the call of the President and the meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. John M. Rose.

Present, Rev. J. B. Shearer, D. D., President; Rev. J. Rumple, D. D., Secretary: Rev. J. M. Rose, Prof. J. H. Hill, and Maj. G. W. F. Harper. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Maj. Harper was elected Treasurer in place of S. H. Wiley, Esq., deceased. Rev. J. M. Rose reported that no charter had yet been obtained.

Various reports and communications concerning the matter of Female Education, were received and the whole subject was carefully considered. After deliberation the following resolutions were adopted, viz.:

Resolved, 1st. That it is the sense of this Board of Trustees that there is urgent need for the establishment of a good and economical school for the education of girls under Presbyterian auspices in this section of the State.

2nd. That a committee consisting of Dr. Shearer, Maj. Harper and Rev. J. M. Rose be appointed to inquire where and upon what terms suitable property can be secured by Concord Presbytery, either alone, or in conjunction of Mecklenburg Presbytery, if she so desire, for such school.

3rd. That a committee consisting of Rev. J. M. Rose, Prof. J. H. Hill, and Dr. Rumple be appointed to prepare and secure a charter for said institution.

The committee then adjourned to meet at the call of the President.

J. RUMPLE, Secretary.

Orange Presbytery.

MR. EDITOR:—By an oversight I failed to publish in the abstract of last week the names of the Committee appointed to consider and bring in a report at the next spring meeting, on the overtures of the Assembly touching the Licensure and Ordination of ministers of the gospel.

The Committee appointed is as follows:

Rev. W. S. Campbell, Rev. E. W. Smith, D. D., Rev. D. I. Craig, Elder J. C. Wharton, Elder D. M. Hines.

D. I. CRAIG,
Stated Clerk.

Reidsville, N. C., Oct. 9th, 1894.

A CARD!

To the Subscribers to the Salary of Rev. T. R. Sampson, D. D.;

DEAR BRETHREN:—If any of you are in arrears in the payment of your subscriptions, will you please promptly forward the amount to me before Synod meets.

Yours fraternally,
ALFRED T. GRAHAM.

Davidson, Oct. 12th, 1894.

Albemarle Presbytery.

Unless the churches in arrears on Presbyterial Funds pay up at once, and those who have not paid on the extra special assessment for the debt of Presbytery, we will be read out as delinquent to Synod. Dear Brethren, let us meet our dues, and promptly. If you can't get the money to Mr. I. B. Gary soon enough, send it direct to Synod.

Anxiously,
J. N. H. SUMMERELL,
Stated Clerk.

Tarboro, Oct. 12th, 1894.

The Synod of Alabama will meet in the Central Church of Montgomery, Nov. 20th, 1894, at 7 o'clock p. m.

An Elders' and Deacons' Convention will be held in the same church, on the night preceding the meeting of Synod.

If one hundred representatives and visitors attend the meeting, reduced rates in returning will be granted by the Southern Passenger Association to all who procure certificates from ticket agent at the points where they purchase tickets in going.

W. I. SINNOTT,
Stated Clerk Synod of Alabama.

SECULAR NEWS.

DOMESTIC.

Two train robbers held up the east-bound overland train near Sacramento, Cal., and secured $51,000 in gold on the 11th inst. They escaped, and have not been captured.

On the night of the 12th inst., near Aquia Creek, Va., seven masked men stopped the northern bound passenger train on the Fredericksburg, Richmond and Potomac railroad. They blew open the express car with dynamite and picked out the packages containing money. The amount they secured is variously estimated, but is supposed to be about $180,000. The express messenger fired two shots and was wounded in the left arm by them. This was the only resistance attempted. The robbers turned the engine loose after the robbery, and it collided with two loaded freight cars and was wrecked. It barely escaped colliding with the southbound passenger train. A reward of $2,000 is offered for each of the robbers. The scene of this robbery was in an hour's ride of Washington.

The latest railroad project, is a road from Manitoba to the Gulf of Mexico, It is said that English capitalists have taken $4,000,000 of the bonds, and that three hundred miles are under contract.

Rev Dr. Charles F. Miningerode died at his residence in Alexandria, Va., after a lingering illness, on the 13th inst. He was the intimate friend and counselor of Hon. Jefferson Davis and Gen. Robert E. Lee during the war, when he was rector of St. Paul's church, Richmond.

New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio were visited by considerable snow storms on Sunday.

It is to be regretted that a professional footbal league has been formed and that professional games will take place between the teams of the larger cities this season. Football was rough enough before the advent of professionalism.

A big stamp steal, which has been going on for thirty days has just been discovered at the bureau of engraving and printing at Washington. It is the work of three employees who have been arrested. It is supposed that 250,000 stamps are stolen.

FOREIGN.

The Czar's condition is reported as being very serious, and Prof. Leyden has been telegraphed for again. The prayers of the Church for his recovery have been ordered.

A rumor is current in Shanghai that China has begun peace negotiations with Japan. She is reported as being willing to give up Korea and pay a war indemnity. Readers anxious for the exact truth concerning the Eastern war are in a trying position. Fourth Quarter.—Lesson IV.

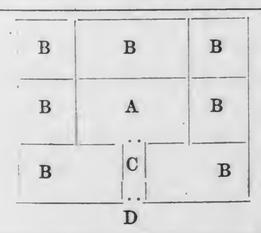
Oct. 28th.—A Paralytic Healed.

Mark ii. 1-12. Commit vss. 9-12.

Golden Text. The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins. Mark ii. 10.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.



First Step. After the busy Sabbath in Capernaum that we studied about last week, Jesus rose the next morning before day and went into a solitary place to pray (Mark i. 35). Finding Himself in the thick of His Messianic labors and confronted with a sudden popularity, He seeks strength, guidance and refreshment in communion with God. The disciples find Him, and—evidently thinking this is the time for action rather than meditation—say, All men seek for thee (Mark i. 36, 37). Instead of returning to Capernaum to build upon this foundation of popular favor, He takes them for a tour of preaching through other cities and villages (Mark i. 38, 39; Luke iv. 42–44). This is the first preaching tour of Galilee. He was accompanied by the four disciples. The only incident recorded of this tour is the cleansing of a leper (Mark i. 40–45; Luke v. 12–15). Matthew records the same incident (viii. 2–4) but not in its chronological order. At the end of this tour He returns to Capernaum and when the news gets abroad that He is in the house (or at home), the multitudes throng Him again. Then occurs the incident of the lesson. From Matt. ix 1, we might infer that it was just after His return from the other side of the sea and His rejection by the Gergesenes. But that event was really much later than the lesson. Matthew does not follow the order of time and much harm is done by the divisions of chapter, and connecting words that imply such a connection. He begins an entirely new subject with, "And behold." Matt. viii. 1 should be the last verse of chap. vii, finishing the subject of the Sermon on the Mount. Matt. ix. 1 should be the last verse of chap. viii. completing the narrative of the journey across the sea. The cleansing of the leper, and the healing of the paralytic are thus related as distinct topics, with no necessary sequence to what comes immediately before.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The rumor of Jesus' return, vs. 1; the crowd around the house, vs. 2; the preaching of the word, vs. 2; the paralytic and his bearers, vs. 3; their earnestness and resourcefulness, evincing their faith, vss. 4, 5; the gracious greeting, vs. 5; the jealous murmurings, vss. 6, 7; the effective rejoinder, vss. 8–11; the complete vindication, vs. 12.

Third Step. Study points needing explanation with your helps:

Vs. 1. In the house, i. e., Simon's, which was now His home.

Vs. 2. About the door. If this was a house of the larger oriental pattern, such as the well-to-do (not the wealthy, who lived in houses still more elaborate), it was built around a central court, open to the sky, with all the rooms facing inward upon the court. A passage way through the body of the house led from the court to the street. In the figure below, A is the court, B B B are the rooms and C the passage way. Jesus would be preaching in the court, the crowd filling the rooms, the court, the passage way and blocking access even to the outer door D, of this passage that was closed only at night.

If, however, this was one of the homes of the very poor, there would be simply two rooms, one opening on the street and the other opening into that, with possibly an upper chamber reached by outside stairs. In that case Jesus was in one of the rooms surrounded by people who also filled the space in front of the door.

Preached the Word. The first time this expression is used in the gospel narrative.

Vs. 3. One sick of the palsy, i. e., a paralytic, or one paralyzed—evidently totally so, and entirely helpless.

Vs. 4. Uncovered....broken it up. The roof was made thus: A layer of small sticks were laid from rafter to rafter, and these were covered with brush—laid in the other direction; over this was a layer of earth, beaten and rolled hard and smooth. After a rain it was always rolled again. This explains the "grass upon the housetops" of Ps. cxxix 5. Dug out is the literal meaning of "broken it up." When they had dug out the earth for a sufficient space, they "uncovered" the rest, i. e., removed the brush and sticks, letting down the man between two of the rafters, which were about three feet apart. If this was one of the better houses described above it was probably the roof of the veranda, or gallery, that ran around three sides of the court, and under which Jesus would probably be standing. If it were one of the poorer houses, it was the roof of the room in which He was.

Vs. 5. When Jesus saw their faith. Note that their faith was shown by their works.

Son, thy sins be forgiven thee. Paralysis is a type of the condition of the sinner. He is helpless, unable to run the Christian course or walk in the ways of God's commandments. Jesus speaks to him first of pardon, because God must pardon us before He renews us, and we must be conscious of pardon before we can begin to serve God. Until we know His pardoning love, all service is servile and therefore worthless. The only service He accepts is the service of love, rendered in the spirit of children. So Jesus calls him Son, assuring Him of Adoption, and says, Thy sins are forgiven, assuring Him of justification, before He performs the miracle that is a type of sanctification. See Catechism, Q. 33, 34, 35.

Vss. 6, 7. The scribes were right in their principle, wrong in its application. Christ's miracles were miracles of Divine power, vindicating His Divine authority. They were intellectually orthodox, but their hearts were not taught of God's Spirit to know His presence.

Vs. 8. Perceived in his spirit, something more than quickness of intuition. It was Divine knowledge of the heart (John ii. 24, 25). This is most frequently asserted of Jesus in the Gospels, and even His enemies expected it of Him (Luke vii. 39) if His claims were true.

Vs. 9. Easier to say. Jesus does not say that it was easier to forgive than to heal, but the assertion of the power to forgive is easier than the assertion of the power to heal, because it cannot be tested by results. But the manisfestation of miraculous powers shows God's presence and co-operation, which proves the man to be owned of God and therefore worthy to be trusted of men. God may give miraculous powers to a mere man, who could not pardon sin. But whatever power is claimed by such a man of miraculous power must be acknowledged, because God is with Him. And when He who is manifestly from God claims Divine authority He must be Divine.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying these explanations, or others that you accept.

Fifth Step. Study the topic of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

Bringing others to Jesus.

1. Why we should bring them.
   a. Because they are—
      Sinful, vs. 5; Rom. iii. 23.
      Miserable, vs. 3; Rom. ii. 9.
      Helpless, vs. 3, Eph. ii. 1; John vi. 44 and v. 40. Note it is the will that is paralyzed by sin.
   b. Because Christ gives—
      Pardon, vss. 5, 10; Acts v. 31.
      Renewing, vss 11, 12; 2 Cor. v. 17.
2. How we may bring them.
   By testimony, John i. 41, 42.
   By example, 1 Thess. i. 6-8.
   By bringing them to the preaching of His word, John iv. 29, 41, 42.
   By prayer, Rom. x. 1; James v. 15; 1 John v. 16.
3. Conditions of success.
   Faith, vs. 5; Matt. xv. 28.
   Perseverance, vs. 4; Gal. vi. 9; Luke xiii. 6-9.
   Resourcefulness, vs. 4. Note that what they could not do in one way they did in another, and compare 1 Cor. ix. 20–22.

Sixth Step. The practical lessons will be learned by a prayerful study of the Bible Reading above.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Place the lesson in its proper time with reference to events intervening since last lesson. Draw from the scholars the story of the lesson making the method used by the men as vivid as possible. Take up the Bible Rading ine the Fifth Step, and impress upon the scholars their need of Jesus to renew and strengthen their wills, and, if Christians, their duty to bring others to Jesus.

In Reidsville, N. C., on Wednesday, Sept. 26th, 1894, after a short illness, Mrs. REBECCA ADELINE DENNY, in the 64th year of her age.

Mrs. Denny was a daughter of Mr. John Harden, and was born in Alamance county, April 6th, 1831. She was married to Mr. John Denny Oct. 29th, 1851, with whom she lived happily until his death, March 11th, 1893. She was the mother of nine children, three of whom are gone before her, and we trust to the home of the blest. She lived to see all her children consistent members of the church, and three of her sons ordained as office bearers in the Presbyterian church.

She made a profession of religion and connected herself with the church in early womanhood, and lived a consistent Christian life unto the end. She was a woman of much business tact and enterprise, with a strong will and great decision of character. She was a faithful and devoted wife, a loving and watchful mother, a kind neighbor, and a true friend. She will be greatly missed by her family and friends, the church and community. But our loss is her eternal gain, for she was to go and be forever with the Lord. In sweet submission and perfect peace, through the Lord Jesus Christ, she passed away and hath entered iuto rest.

"O for the death of those,
Who slumber in the Lord!
O be like theirs my last repose,
Like theirs my last reward!"

PASTOR.

Miss MOLLIE McFARLAND, third daughter of W. H. McFarland, Esq., of Columbus, Polk county, N. C., was married Sept. 2d, 1894, to Robert L. Camp, of Green River, and died Sept. 27th, in the 21st year of her age.

Mrs. Camp was a child of the covenant, and had been for several years a communicant of Sandy Plains church. Within a few days after her marriage, she felt the hand of fatal disease upon her, and spoke repeatedly of her approaching end, expressing always her faith in Christ, and her fearlessness of death. And at last she yielded up her young life without a struggle, and was borne from her bridal chamber to her grave. She was a woman of rare personal beauty, of most affectionate and amiable disposition, and of humble, consistent Christian character. A large circle of devoted friends and relatives mourn with the bereaved family, and with the young husband so soon separated from the wife of his youth. May God bless the stricken households, and comfort them abundantly in this sore trial, enabling them to say in Christian hope and resignation:

"Smile on then, darling, as God wills is best,
We loose our hold,
Constant to give thee to the deeper rest,
The safer fold,
To joy's immortal youth, while we grow old.

Constant the cold and wintry day to bear,
The icy wave,
And know thee in immortal summer there,
Beyond the grave,
Content to give thee to the love that gave."

W. P. McC.

J. LOCHLAND CURRIE, infant son of the lamented Rev. James L. Currie died at the manse in Burlington, N. C., Oct. 8th, 1894, aged seven weeks and three days. The widowed mother who less than three months ago was bereft of a devoted husband, is again called to pass through the deep waters of affliction. The little one has gone to the father, and the mother is left to weep with the other children, but the Master is with them all, and assures us that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

At his residence in Richmond county, in the vicinity of Old Hundred, on Sept. 29th, after a brief illness, Mr. M. D. McNEILL, aged 73 years.

Our deceased friend commanded the utmost confidence and good will, of all who knew him; consequently unfeigned sorrow was felt throughout the entire community, as the sad and unexpected intelligence of his death passed from neighbor to neighbor. Although somewhat indisposed for a few days, yet even his family did not regard him as dangerously ill until the day before his death. Verily we know not what sorrow and sadness even a day may bring forth.

"Help Lord; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men." Truly in the death of our departed friend, a godly and faithful man has been removed from the family circle, from the church, and from the community, and one that will sadly be missed by all.

In the family, he was a fond and loving husband, and a most tender and affectionate father. In the church, he was an earnest and faithful worker, deeply interested in the building up of the Master's kingdom; "an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile."

In his community, and county as well, he was an honored and very highly esteemed citizen. His was a character beyond reproach. In middle life he joined Laurel Hill Presbyterian church, of which he remained a consistent and devoted member, until his work on earth being finished, he was called by the Master, "to the General Assembly and Church of the first born above."

"Servant of Christ well done;
Rest from thy loved employ,
The battle fought the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

Tribute of Respect.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased our kind, loving Heavenly Father in His inscrutable wisdom to remove from our midst by death our esteemed and much loved brother, Capt. M. D. McNEILL, and called him as we believe and trust to a home of rest in the bright mansions above, prepared by the dear Saviour he so much loved to honor in his long Christian life; therefore Resolved 1st. That we, the Aberdeen Sabbath-school, of which he was an honored member and faithful teacher, bow in meek and humble submission to this dispensation of divine wisdom and goodness, and say, "Thy will be done."

Resolved 2d. That while we deeply mourn this loss to us, and shall miss him in the church as teacher, friend and neighbor, still we weep not as if he had died without hope.

Resolved 3d. That we extend to his bereaved family our Christian sympathy in this hour of great trial and grief to them.

Resolved 4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Laurinburg Exchange and the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN with a request that they publish.

Tribute of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Presbyterian Sabbath-school of North Wilkesboro, Oct. 7th, 1894:

WHEREAS, In the holy and wise providence of God, death has taken from our church and Sabbbath-school one of our most consistent members, and valuable officers, Mr. J. WADE BARBER, therefore be it

Resolved 1st. That, having by his faithfulness in the discharge of his duties, and his exemplary Christian deportment, won our love and respect, and given a worthy example to our school, we deeply feel our loss in his death; but would strive to submit to the will of "Him who doeth all things well," and believe that our loss is the eternal gain of our departed friend.

2nd. That we unite with the church, in extending to the bereaved family our sincere sympathy in their sorrow, and in praying that the God of all comfort may abide with them.

A BUSINESS, POLITICAL AND FAMILY PAPER.

Don't Be Selfish.

If you take a newspaper it should be one that not only you, but all your folks will find pleasure in reading.

THE SAVANNAH MORNING NEWS

is that kind of a journal.

It gives more real reading and news matter than any other paper in the South. It is not the organ of political cranks or personal favorites, but of pure democracy; of low tariff and sound currency, and of the economial administration of the State and federal governments.

It is independent in all things, and does not change its views through fear of losing a few subscribers by advocating what it knows to be right.

Daily, every day in the year (335 papers), $10: 6 months $5; 3 months $2.50; 1 month $1; 1 week 25 cents. Daily, without Sunday News, 1 year $9; 6 months, $4.50; 3 months, $2.25.

HOME.

Oh, home! God's temple, sacred, fair,
When sheltered by the wing of prayer;
Love dwells within thy calm, and will
With whitest peace thy borders fill.

Oh, garden! in thy hallowed soil
Prayer-warmed, tear-sown, 'tis sweet to toil;
Each little tear-dropped seed finds root,
And bears the germ of heavenly fruit.

Oh, school! where tender minds receive.
The highest culture earth can give;—
To educate a soul! great God,
What grander work can earth afford?

Oh, sanctuary! altar, where
We bear ourselves aloft in prayer;
Where garments stained are made like fleece,
Blood-washed by Him, the Prince of peace!

Oh, heavenly home! where, free from sin,
From vain regrets and earth's fierce din,
The ransomed soul shall know its power—
The bud shall find its perfect flower.

Two Incidents.

A western paper recently invited prominent surviving officers of the Union and Confederate armies to give in its columns an account of the bravest act which fell under their notice during the Civil War.

Colonel T. W. Higginson in reply tells the story of a supper party which was given at Beaufort, South Carolina, and to which Dr. Thomas Miner, an assistant surgeon in his regiment with other young subalterns were invited. Wine and other liquors circulated freely. The supper lasted until after midnight, and the fun grew boisterous. Stories were told, songs were sung, to which the men in their sober moments would have blushed to listen.

Dr. Miner, a slight, boyish young fellow, did not drink. When he and others rose to go they were stopped and told that they must first either sing a song, tell a story or give a toast. Miner glanced around the cirle of flushed, excited faces, and said quietly:

"Gentlemen, I cannot sing a song or tell a story, but I will give you a toast. I will drink it in water. You shall drink as you please. It is—'Our mothers.'"

There was not, the narrator states, an atom of priggishness or self-consciousness in his manner. The shot told. The party soon after broke up, and three of the older men, all of higher rank than himself, came the next day to thank the young man for the simplicity and courage of his rebuke.

This act Colonel Higginson justly says required more courage than to ride up to the cannon's mouth.

A general who had served through the war, and was distinguished for his bravery, was asked by his daughter at what time in his life his courage was most severely tested. After a moment's thought he said, smiling:

"Not at the storming of any fort, or in any battle-field. As a boy I secured a job of work with a grocer. I was very poor. The place was obtained with great difficulty.

The day I began work, the shopkeeper showed me a row of boxes and barrels which contained damaged and stale sugar, flour and fruit. These he ordered me to 'get off' upon children or customers who were too ignorant to know that the goods were inferior."

At a reduced price?" I asked.

"Certainly not," he replied, turning away.

During the next quarter of an hour my courage was put to what I think was the hardest test of my life. I did the right thing I am glad to say. I went to him and told him I could not make dishonest sales. I also added what I thought a fine argument, that the boy who cheated his cutomers would probably cheat him. It did not convince him, however. He turned me out of the shop then and there. A month later an old friend of my father's secured me an appointment a t West Point.

"Yes," he added thoughtfully, "it was much easier to face a battery than that ugly little grocer."

We do not need a civil war nor a sinking ship to give us the chances to be brave. They come to us in every day life. The applause and promotion do not come, but God is a sure wage-payer. Youth's Companion.

Things Useful.

Orange Salad.—Peel the oranges, prick them with a fork in several places, and soak in cold water, put them in a preserving-pan with boiling-water and some shavings of the orange-peel; boil for ten minutes, plunge them into cold water, put sufficient refined syrup into the preserving-pan to cover the oranges; which drain well and boil in the syrup, without the peel, until quite thick. Take off the fire, pour the syrup and oranges into a deep dish; cut the fruit into quarters when cold, place in a dish with the shavings in the center, and pour the syrup over them.

Creamed Oysters.—Put twenty-five oysters in a double boiler for ten minutes, or until the gills curl. Drain them and save one gill of liquor. Put two ounces of good, sweet butter into a saucepan; when melted, add two even tablespoonsful of flour, mix without browning; add one gill of cream and the gill of oyster liquor; stir constantly until it boils, add a half tespoonful of salt, a dash of white pepper and the oysters. When very hot, serve.

How to Remove Stains from the Hands.—Berry stains or stains caused by acid fruit on the hands may be easily removed in the following manner: Wash the hands in cold water until they are as clean as possible; wipe them only partially, leaving them moist. Strike a match (not sulphur) at once and encircle it with the hands so that they will catch the smoke, when the stains will immediate disappear.

How to Clean Chamois Leather.—Rub plenty of soft soap into the leather and put it to soak in a solution of weak soda and warm water for two hours; then rub until it is clean. Rinse it in a weak solution of soda and yellow soap in warm water. Wring the leather out well in a rough towel and dry it quickly; then pull it and brush it well.

THE VERY THING FOR CHILDREN

—Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They're so tiny, so easily taken, so easy and natural in the way they act—no disturbance, no unpleasantness, no reaction afterward. They're made of nothing but refined and concentrated vegetable extracts—sugar-coated. One of them at a dose is a corrective, a regulator, a gentle laxative.

When you feel "a touch of biliousness" or indigestion, take one of these little Pellets. They go right to the spot.

THE YOUTH'S HYMN.

"Just as I am," thine own to be,
Friend of the young who lovest me;
To consecrate myself to thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come!

In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve and no delay,
With all my heart I come.

I would live ever in the light,
I would work ever for the right,
I would serve thee with all my might,
Therefore to thee I come.

"Just as I am," young, strong, and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth, and righteousness, and thee,
Lord of my life, I come.

With many dreams of fame and gold,
Success and joy to make me bold;
But dearer still my faith to hold,
For my whole life, I come.

And for thy sake to win renown,
And then to take my victor's crown,
And at thy feet to cast it down,
O, Master, Lord, I come.

The Boy Who Dared to Be a Daniel.

BY S. JENNIE SMITH.

Sunday-school was dismissed and the children were going, some in one direction, some in another, to their homes. The majority of them were chatting merrily of the proposed strawberry festival, but one little fellow seemed to be engrossed with more serious thoughts. He was alone and apparently unconscious of the nearness of his companions until a lad about his own age joined him and inquired, "Say, Ralph, what are you thinking of? You look as wise as an owl."

"I should hope I was a little bit wiser than a bird," answered Ralph, with a smile. "But I was just awondering, Ned, if I could be brave enough to go into the lion's den like Daniel did. I wouldn't like to stop praying to God, but it would be pretty hard to make up your mind to face a lot of lions."

"Yes, indeed, but then father says that we don't need grace to do those hard things until we are called upon to do them, and then if we ask God, He will give us the strength we require. All we've got to do is to attend to the duty nearest us, and seek for strength for that."

Ned was the minister's son and had enjoyed many an instructive talk with his kind father.

"He says, too, that we are often called upon to face other kinds of lions in this life, if we persist as we ought in doing the right. But here we part, Ralph, good-by," and the boy turned off into a side road, leaving Ralph again alone.

Ralph's way led through a quiet country lane, for his home was beyond the village where nearly all of his companions lived.

"Well, I won't have to go into the lion's den to-day," he said to himself, as he sauntered along; "and when I do I guess God will give me the strength," and with this thought a gayer frame of mind came to him. "But it must be grand to be a Daniel."

Just then two large boys crept stealthily from the bushes that lined one side of the road and looked anxiously around. "Say, John, there's Ralph," one of them muttered. "He'll tell we didn't go to Sunday-school. Let's frighten him into promising not to."

"Hello!" cried John, in a loud voice.

Ralph turned and was surprised to see his brothers approaching him.

"Going home?" one of them asked.

"Why, yes, Tom, ain't you?"

"No, not yet; and if any one inquires where we are, just mention that we've been to Sunday-school and will be home soon."

Ralph's eyes opened wide in astonishment. "But you didn't go to Sunday-school," he replied, "because your teacher came and asked me where you were, and I told her I didn't know; I thought you were coming."

"Well, it isn't any of your business whether we went or not," growled John. "All you've got to do is to say we were there if you're asked."

"I can't tell a lie about it, can I?"

"Yes, you can, if you just make up your mind to do it."

"But I won't tell a lie about it," said Ralph, sturdily.

"No, I suppose you'd rather get your brothers in a scrape. You know what will happen if we're found out."

Ralph hesitated. He was an affectionate child and disliked to see anybody in trouble, especially his own brothers, but he had a very decided opinion that he was in the right, and therefore concluded to speak the truth at all hazards.

"I'm just as sorry as I can be," he returned, sadly, "and I'll beg papa to forgive you and say I know you won't ever do it again, but if they ask me I can't tell a lie about it."

"You won't, eh, little saint?" cried John, angrily, grabbing his brother's arm: "Now just promise to do as we say or we'll pitch you into that deep pond over there."

Ralph was too young to realize that this was only an idle threat, and he was very much frightened, yet in that moment of terror the thought of Daniel in the lion's den flashed throught his mind and gave him the strength that he had not dared to hope for. He saw in an instant that he had come to his temptation and his den of lions, and he felt that as God had protected Daniel in that far-away time, He would now protect him. Ralph had never learned to swim and he was in fear of the big frogs and other creatures that inhabit ponds, but he did not flinch; with a boldness that surprised even himself, he looked steadily at his brother and replied, "You cannot frighten me into doing that wrong thing. I will not pray to the image of falsehood that you have set up."

It was now his brothers' turn to be astonished. They had never thought of Ralph as anything but a timid, little boy who could be overcome by the slightest threat, and for a moment they were at a loss what to say. Of course, Ralph was merely repeating some of his teacher's words, but they were not aware of that fact, and consequently wondered at his remarks. Finally John managed to stammer, "Do—do you want to go in that pond?"

"No manner of hurt was found upon him because he believed in his God," continued Ralph, with his mind still on his Sunday-school; "God delivers His faithful ones in time of trouble."

Turning away, John was about to walk off, but Tom detained him. "Wait a moment, John," he said, and then the others noticed that there were tears in his eyes. "I want to tell my brave little brother that I honor him for sticking to the truth. As for me, I shall confess to father, and promise not to repeat the the offence."

"I am with you," John replied. "Come Ralph, we'll go together now and hereafter. We need never be afraid to go where a Daniel leads."—Christian Intelligencer.

The Garden of God.

The sweet young sister of a little boy was dying. The child had heard that if one could secure but a single leaf from the Tree of Life, which grew in the Garden of God, every illness could be healed. No one had dared to attempt the quest, however, for the way was hard, and a great Angel guarded the gate of the garden against mortals. The child loved his suffering sister so well that he resolved to find the garden, and plead with the Angel for the healing leaf. So over rock and moor and hill he went, until in the golden sunset the beautiful gate appeared, and he tearfully made his request to the angelic sentinel.

"None can enter this garden," replied the Angel, "but those children for whom the King has sent, and he has not called for you."

"But one leaf," pleaded the child, "one little leaf to heal my sister! The King will not be angry. He cannot wish that my sister should suffer so, and die, and leave me all alone. Have pity, great Angel, and hear my prayer."

The Angel looked down on the little suppliant, with deep love and pity, and said: "The King has sent my brother, the Angel of Death, to bring your sister to himself. If you are allowed to keep her, will you promise to see that she shall never again lie tossing on a sick bed in pain?"

"How can I?" said the wondering child. Not even the wisest physicians can keep us from pain always."

"Then will you promise me that she shall never be unhappy? Nor do wrong? Nor suffer sorrow? Nor be cold, or hungry or tired? Nor be spoken to or treated harshly?" asked the Angel.

"Not if I can help it," answered the child bravely. "But perhaps not even I could always make her happy."

"Then," replied the Angel, tenderly, "the world where you must keep her must be a sad place. Now I will open the gate, just a little, and you may look into the garden for a momemt, and then, if you still wish it, I will myself ask the King for a leaf from the Tree of Life, to heal your sister."

And the astonished child looked in where grew the living Tree, and where flowed the crystal river, and where stood the bright mansions, and where walked and talked immortal children under a light more beautiful than that of the sun and with friends more loving than those of earth, and where love and blessing reigned forever. He looked, until his eyes widened in surprise and glowed with joy, and turning to the Angel he said, softly:

"I will not ask for the leaf now. There is no place so beautiful as this; there is no friend so kind as the Angel of Death. I wish he would take me too."

So the child turned back under the stars which shone like celestial eyes upon him. And as he went a ray of holy light fell upon his path, and wonderful music, such as he had never before heard, filled his ears, and he knew that the golden gate had opened to receive his sister. And it was so that when he saw her silent form upon her little bed at home, he was comforted.—"The Ministry of Bereavement."

Equitable Life

DURHAM, N. C., Mar. 27, 1894.

MR. W. J. RODDEY, Rock Hill, S. C.

Dear Sir:—When the settlement of my policy for $50,000 in the Equitable was first made, I expressed some dissatisfaction at the outcome, but since I have had more time to look into the matter, I am persuaded that I have had cheap insurance. I have always regarded the Equitable as one of the strongest insurance companies in this country, and am carrying at present a policy for $25,000 on my wife and one for $50,000 on my own life, and have had these policies in force for more than 10 years.

Yours, very truly,
J. S. CARR.

Some people never get higher than a towering rage

The latest notion is what is termed "the paper pad and shirt," The bosom of this remarkable garment is formed of seven layers of white paper. When one has done its duty it may be torn off, and its wearer is once more ostensibly the happy owner of a clean shirt!

ACTIVE EXERCISE

and good food in plenty, tends to make children healthy. If children suffer, however, from Scrofulous, Skin or Scalp Diseases—if their blood is impure and pimples or boils appear, they should be given the right medicine. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery brings about the best bodily condition. It purifies the blood and renders the liver active as well as build up health and strength. Puny, pale, weak children get a lasting benefit and "a good start" from the use of the "Discovery." It puts on wholesome flesh, and does not nauseate and offend the stomach like the various preparations of Cod liver oil. It's guaranteed to cure you, or your money is returned.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure constipation headaches, indigestion, dyspepsia. One a dose. Sold by all dealers.

The best and only thing to do when your horse is excited is to calm him down. This is best done by getting to the horse's head and talking to him gently, rubbing his face and otherwise diverting his attention from the subject of his fright. If the horse is sullen and angry the same treatment will be found beneficial. In a high state of excitement the horse does not comprehend what you want, and it is useless, worse than folly, to attempt to beat the fright out of him.

The strength of a horse is equal, on an average it is said, to that of seven and a half men,

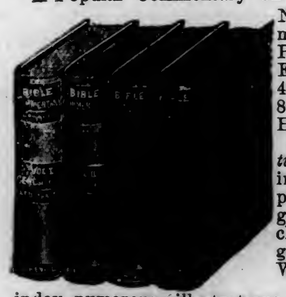
INTERESTING TO LADIES.

The latest invention of the Brainerd and Armstrong Silk Co., is a Patent Skein Holder for Wash Embroidery Silks. Each and every Skein is to be enclosed in a Paper Holder, and one needleful at a time can be drawn out as wanted, This saves ladies the trouble of undoing the Skein and re-winding upon Cardboard, as in the old-fashioned Skeins.

Any lady interested in this improvement and wishing to see it, can get a sample Skein, together with a copy of the new "Blue Book" on Embroidery, by sending 6 cents in stamps to No. 2 Union St., New London, Conn.

It is estimated that 3,000 marriages are daily performed throughout the world.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.



I have had wonderful success selling Dish Washers. Have not made less than $8 any day, and some days $15. Nearly every family buys one. They are cheap, durable, and, do the work perfectly. You can wash and dry the dishes for a family in two minutes, without touching your hands to a dish- I believe any lady or gentleman, anywhere, can do as well as I am doing, as I had no experience. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family seems to want a Dish Washer. Write to the Iron City Dish Washer Co., E. E. Pittsburg, Pa. They will send you full particulars and help you as they did me. I do not write my experience boastingly. but because I think it a duty I owe to others in these hard times.

CHILDREN OF THE COVENANT.*

A SERMON PUBLISHED BY REQUEST OF MONTGOMERY PRESBYTERY.

Ps 103: 17, 18. "And His righteousness unto children's children to such as keep His covenant."

It has pleased Almighty God, in the performance of His sovereign purpose of saving sinners, to make a series of covenants with men. Thus when Abram was called out from the gathering night of heathenism, to receive the light of revelation and to become the father of the faithful, not only was he encouraged by the divine promises; but God made with him a solemn covenant, saying, "I will establish My covenant between Me and thee and thy seed after thee." And at Sinai when the law was given by Moses, and Israel was acknowledged as the chosen people of Jehovah, Moses was commanded to make a covenant with the people in God's name, and to ratify it with sacrifices and the sprinkling of blood.

Also, the Christian dispensation; under which we live, is called a covenant. Jesus is said to be (Heb. 12: 24) "the Mediator of the new covenant," and His blood is called "the blood of the everlasting covenant." And the Saviour, as he gave the cup to the disciples, at the first celebration of the Lord's Supper, said to them: "This cup is the new covenant in My blood." For thus the Revised Version renders His words "ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη;" and it is a matter of regret that the same Greek phrase. when used as the title of the later Scriptures, is rendered New Testament, rather than New Covenant, which is the usual meaning of the words.

David, in our text, does not specify which covenant he refers to. Nor was there need that he should do so. For the covenants are really one, and the recognition of the children is common to them all. So important are these two statements, that we will pause here to establish them.

Firstly, the covenants with Abraham, with Israel, and with the Church of Jesus Christ, are really one and the same. Moses, at Sinai, said to the assembled people: "Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God, your little ones and your wives, and the stranger that is in thy camp, that He may establish thee this day for a people unto Himself * * * as He hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac and to Jacob."

In like manner, the New Covenant is declared to be in fulfilment of this same covenant, made, long before, with Abraham; and is new only in the fuller revelation of God's salvation, and in the stronger assurances of his love. Thus, Zacharias filled with the Holy Ghost, declared that the incarnation of Jesus was "to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, to remember His holy covenant, the oath which He swore to our father Abraham." (Luke 1: 73.) And the Apostle Paul, writing to the converted heathen of Galatia, assures them that the Gospel brought to them, the very blessings that were pledged to Abraham and his seed. "Christ," writes he, "hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ," * * * * "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Having shown that the covenants are the same, in as much as they are successive declarations of the same purpose of love, let us consider the second statement, that in every dispensation of grace, the children of God's people are included in the covenant, and are entitled to the sign and soul of membership. This is not questioned, so far as I know, with regard to the Abrahamic covenant, or the national covenant at Sinai. God said to Abraham, "I will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee;" and it was commanded that male infants should receive the sign of this covenant, when eight days old. At Sinai, also, the children were remembered. God's purpose included them, for He said to Moses, "Oh that there were such a heart in them that they would keep all My commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children forever." And, accordingly, the little ones stood beside their parents when the covenant was ratified, and along with their parents received the rite of baptism, when Moses "sprinkled all the people."

When, however, we come to consider the new covenant,—the Christian dispensation, under which we live, we find that the right of the children to the seal of the covenant is strenuously denied. The doctrine of Believer's Baptism is advanced to their exclusion. Personal belief in Jesus, it is urged, is the only Scriptural ground of admission to the Church, and therefore, the little ones must remain outside until they are believers.

So urgently has this point been pressed upon the attention of the churches, that a one-sided view of the Truth has resulted, and some important teachings of the Bible have been obscured. Not long ago, a visitor to one of the Sunday-schools in Richmond was requested to make an address to the children; and, in the course of his remarks, he asked that one of the scholars would give him a verse of Scripture, which told the way of salvation. Promptly some one replied, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." But the visitor answered, "No, you have not given the verse correctly. Can any one else give me a verse, that tells how we must be saved?" There was a pause, and then a teacher said, "I know no better verse than the one that has been given." But still the speaker shook his head, and expressed surprise that a teacher should not see wherein lay the defect, and now the venerable pastor came to the rescue, saying: "This matter is too serious for jesting. What better answer could be given?" And still the speaker was unabashed, and asked the pastor to turn to the sixteenth chapter of Acts, and read the verse as it is written there. And opening the Bible, the old pastor turned to the place, and slowly read aloud, "And they said, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

The significance of this latter clause is often overlooked. It seems to recognize the covenant-relation of the children, as, in like manner, the Saviour, when Zacchaeus had declared his penitence, was mindful of the covenant, and said, "This day is salvation come unto this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham."

So far from the Scriptures teaching the doctrine of Believer's Baptism, they declare plainly that the children of a believing parent are holy, and record for our example the baptism of the household, when the father or the mother becomes a Christian.

Now let us go back and learn from the prophet Malachi the purpose of God in ordaining the marriage relation. Mankind might have cohabited promiscuously like the brutes, or a man might have been given many wives, or woman, many husbands. But God ordained the marriage of one man to one woman, and this he did for a specific purpose. Malachi, rebuking the Jews for their adulteries, refers to the original appointment of marriage; and, speaking of the creation of Eve, goes on to say, "And did he not make one, although he had the residue of the Spirit? And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed." The family therefore is a sacred institution ordained of God for the raising of a godly seed, and accordingly his covenants embrace the children also.

There is one passage in the Bible which teaches positively that the children of a believing father and mother are included in the covenant, and are members of the Church of Christ. This passage to which I ask your attention, is the fourteenth verse of the 7th chapter of 1st Corinthians. Paul is there dealing with the relation of husband and wife, when one of them is a Christian, and the other is still a heathen. The law of Moses expressly forbade the marriage of God's people with the heathen Canaanites, (Deut. 7: 2–4), and, under this law, Ezra required the Jew who had married a heathen woman to put her away, and even to send away the children with their mother. Therefore it is not surprising that some of the Christian Jews should incline to the opinion that a Christian ought not to continue the marriage relation with a heathen. This question Paul settles by adducing the acknowledged fact that the children of such marriages were holy. "If any brother have a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman that hath a husband that believeth not, if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him. For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband, else were your children unclean, but now are they holy." This word "holy" has a clearly defined meaning, in the Bible, of consecrated to God. Thus, Israel is called a holy people, and all the vessels used in God's service are holy. In the New Testament the word is used about fifty-six times, and is the distinctive appellation of the members of the Church, as those who were devoted to the Lord. Therefore, when Paul declares that the child of a believing parent is holy, he must mean that the child is dedicated to God or in covenant relation to Him. No other sensible interpretation of this passage has ever come under my notice. And, bearing in mind that the children of a believer are holy, how appropriately, when Lydia's heart was opened to receive the truth, Paul baptized her "and her household." And when the jailer was converted, he was baptized "and all his."

Perplexity sometimes arises from ignorance of the distinction which the Bible makes between the Visible Church and the Invisible. Our confession states this clearly: "The Visible Church consists of all those throughout the world that profess the true religion, and of their children; and is the house and family of God." "The Invisible Church, consists of the whole number of the elect, that have been, are, or shall be gathered into one, under Christ the Head thereof; and is the spouse or body, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all."

Into the Invisible Church are received those only who are called of the Spirit, and renewed. But of the Visible Church, the children always have been and still are members.

Thus the family is seen to be a sacred institution ordained of God for the raising of a godly seed and the little ones of pious parents are holy, and have a right to baptism, the sign and seal of the new covenant.

Every godly father and mother can sympathize with the yearning cry of Abraham: "Oh that Ishmael might stand before God!" For, just in proportion as we grow in grace and appreciate the preciousness of salvation, our longings grow intenser for the salvation of the children we have brought into the world, and our dread of sin grows stronger. The favor of God, pledged to the children of the covenant, is very precious to the parent's heart. In the Psalm from which the text is taken, the contemplation of this goodness rouses the heart of David to an ecstasy of praise. The 103d Psalm contains no petition nor complaint.

Elsewhere David bemoans his sins and sorrows; in other psalms he confesses his sins, and pleads for mercy; but here he soars aloft in an unbroken hymn of praise. Beginning with personal mercies, he calls upon his soul, and all that is within him, to bless the Lord for health and strength and comfort. Then rising higher, he mentions the goodness of God to his people, in "making known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel," and praises God for his pardoning love, so full and tender. And next, he dwells upon frailty and shortness of human life, and praises God that "his mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, and his righteousnese unto children's children to such as keep his covenant." And then as if the swelling notes of praise were too exalted for human lips, he calls upon the heavenly hosts to take up the theme: "Bless the Lord, ye his angels that excel in strength. Bless ye the Lord, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure." Evidently the Psalmist regarded this goodness of the Lord to the little ones as one of his greatest mercies to mankind. Do we appreciate it as we should?

Of course, the covenant has its responsibilities and duties. God said of Abraham: "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, to keep the way of the Lord, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." In the covenant at Sinai, Israel was commanded to teach God's Word diligently to their children: "Thou shalt speak of them as thou sittest in thine house, and as thou walkest by the way, and as thou liest down, and as thou risest up." And in the new covenant, parents are commanded to "train up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Thus family worship is felt to be a sacred obligation, a becoming recognition of the covenant. The religious training of the little ones is an imperative duty, which may not be left to teachers in the Sunday-school, for God has laid it upon the father and the mother. The presenting our children for baptism is obedience to the requirement of God in his covenant.

In the last two verses of the Old Testament, Malachi predicts that God will send Elijah before the great and terrible day of the Lord, "and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers," lest God "smite the earth with a curse." And in the beginning of the New Testament, this prophecy is taken up again by the angel Gabriel, who says to Zacharias concerning John, "He shall go in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children; to make ready a people prepared for the coming of the Lord." The commentators give wild and fanciful interpretations of these verses; but the simple, obvious meaning is, that John should come in the power and spirit of Elijah to bring about a great revival of religion, which should be characterized on the one hand by a realization of parental responsibility and deep concern for the salvation of the children; and on the other by a meek and reverent acceptance of instruction and guidance.

The decay of family religion is a very dangerous and reprehensible feature of the Church to-day; and I have therefore selected this topic for the doctrinal discourse, with the prayer that God will bless my words to arousing Christians to the appreciation of the covenant and to a sense of their parental responsibilities.

*Preached by Rev. J. M. Rawlings, Sept. 21st, 1894, during the meeting of Presbytery at Rocky Mount, Va.

The Business Manager of this paper would like, were not the demands of space so pressing, to give some notes of a recent trip to the Presbyteries of Fayetteville and Mecklenburg. He can only here, return thanks of the editor and himself, for the kindness extended by the members of the Presbyteries, and to the writer personally, the appreciation expressed of the services of the N. C. Presbyterian and to the kind invitation to visit the churches, with the promise of all practicable aid in extending the circulation of the paper.

We invite attention to the gratifying commendation of the N. C. Presbyterian by Mecklenburg Presbytery, to be found on fourth page.

INK SPOTS.

Yes, we have all realized it, and felt its sadness too, as we have gone back to childhood's home, and said, "'Fairoaks' is ours no longer"—"He passed over the old familiar bridge, heard that well remembered sound of waters beneath, and saw his own cottage of Fairoaks among the trees. How clear the night was; how keen the stars shone; how ceaseless the rush of the flowing waters; the old home trees whispered, and waved gently their dark heads and branches over the cottage roof—yonder in the faint star light glimmer, was the terrace where as a boy he walked of summer evenings, ardent and truthful, unspotted, untried, ignorant of doubts or passions; sheltered as yet from the world's contaminations in the pure and anxious bosom of love."

But we can say—"non omnia terrae obruta—vivit amor, vivit dolor; ora dulcia negatur conspicere; at flere et meminisse relictum est."

Perhaps these are the most beautiful lines in all Latin poetry; the description of sea waves under early morning light, stirred by morning breezes. They are from Catullus—

"Hic flatu placidum mare matutino
Horrificans Zephyrus proclivas incitat undas,
Aurora exoriente vagi sub limina solis,
Quare tarde primum clementi flamine pulsae
Proceedunt leviter resonant plangore eachinni
Post vento crescente magis magis increbescunt
Purpureaque procul nantes ab luce refulgent."

Among many translations of them, Martin has given the most beautiful—

"As, when at early dawn the western breeze
Into a ripple breaks the slumbering seas,
Which gently stirr'd more slowly on at first,
And into gurglings low of laughter burst;
Anon as fresher blows the rising blast,
The waves crowd onwards, faster and more fast,
Floating away till they are lost to sight
Beneath the glow of the empurpled light."

* * *

Coleridge says "after vainly searching in classic authors for the line so often quoted,

"Tempora mutantur nos et muamur in illis,"

I learned from Mr. Donaldson that it belongs to no classic author, which might be known from its Latinity, and that probably it is a colloquial saying formed into an hexameter verse."

* * *

Dr. Bushnell, when well, abounded in life and action. He once preached a sermon on "The Employments of Heaven," a weary, hard-working woman was heard to say when the service closed, "Well if Heaven is such a place for work I don't care to go there; I hoped I should rest." Dr. B. said as his strength began to fail, the thought of rest grew more precious to him also. It only illustrates how apt we are to see every thing from ourselves.

The Presbyterian.

"FOR MY SAKE."

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning;
Three little words the heart can scarcely hold;
Three little words, but on their import dwelling,
What wealth of love their syllables unfold!

"For my sake" cheer the suffering, help the needy;
On earth this was my work. I give it thee.
If thou wouldst follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take up my cross, and come and learn of me.

"For my sake" let the harsh word die unuttered
That trembles on the swift, impetuous tongue.
"For my sake" check the quick, rebellious feeling
That rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

"For my sake" press with steadfast patience onward.
Although the race be hard, the battle long.
Within my Father's house are many mansions,
There thou shalt rest and join the victor's song.

And if in coming days the world revile thee
"If, "for my sake," thou suffer pain and loss,
Bear on, faint heart, thy master went before thee.
They only wear his crown who share his cross.

REMOVAL OF UNION SEMINARY.

L. S. M., in your paper of October 11th, writes a very readable article on the removal of Union Seminary. The article is replete with noble sentiment, but almost every line runs in the face of immovable facts. The Synods of North Carolina and Virginia are confronted with "a condition" which makes the removal of the seminary no longer a question of expediency, but one of necessity.

1. The changed conditions in this country since the war is the rock upon which the article of L. S. M. goes to pieces. The wise founders of Presbyterianism in this country did not possess the knowledge to command future events and conditions. They could only build in the light of their time. When they built, a large proportion of the wealth and culture of the South was in the country, and it was quite natural that institutions of learning should grow up in the country. Were these wise fathers living to-day, they would be too wise to bury their infant institutions. The railways have made the cities the center of population, influence and capital. This is a stubborn fact, and even noble sentiment, will not erase facts. In 1880 ten cities in the United States had more than 200,000 inhabitants each. Their population aggregated 4,914,897. In 1887, fourteen cities had over 200,000 each, and their population aggregates 6,798,000. Our total urban population at that date was about 10,000,000. The census of 1890 gives the urban population of our country at about 19,000,000. Evidently there is a strong tendency in the American people towards city life. The Church cannot afford to ignore this concentration of power and influence in the cities. We should seize these centers of power as they were seized by the apostles of old. They are the strategic points for the future. The Church which would rank first in work for the Master must give special attention to the cities. To attempt to ignore this fact in modern life would be suicidal.

2. The seminary would be a potent propaganda of the faith in the city in which it shall be located.

a. The general influence of the seminary would be felt for our Church throughout the city. The capital of the State of Virginia would soon feel the effect, and Presbyterianism in the city of Richmond, the most influential city of its size in the South, would receive a new and powerful impetus.

b. The professors, who are men of wide culture and learning, would by lectures and sermons, delivered at times, that would not interefere with their teaching duties, exert a powerful influence in the city. At present they are blocked up at Hampden-Sidney. The contiguous population is small. They have no opportunity to exert any influence other than upon the student. In a city they could even run off to distant points Saturday evening to preach and be in place Monday. Thus their influence would go over the whole land.

c. The Seminary students would be a picked body of mission workers to reinforce the pastors of the city. Their labors in Sunday-schools and missions would strengthen our cause in the city and exert a powerful influence in determining the place of Presbyterianism on the central Atlantic slope.

3. The city is the best location for the seminary student himself.

(a) There they would see Christian work in actual operation according to the most approved methods. The teaching of the professors in pastoral theology could be illustrated and tested while fresh from his lips. They would have the opportunity of hearing our best preachers and lecturers. What a training for the actual work of preaching to hear frequently our pulpit Prince, Doctor Hoge, to listen to Kerr's graceful and powerful efforts and to enjoy Doctor Fair's exquisite rhetoric. But L. S. M. fears our "immature youths" coming under "the seducements of pulpit oratory." He thinks it would work "positive injury" to them. Why then do they send for Dr. Hoge so often to go up to Hampden-Sidney to "injure" our "immature youths" with "the seducements of pulpit oratory?" Would that our young seminarians could hear him every week for three sessions. They would be the better fitted for preaching the glorious gospel.

(b) The seminary student would have better opportunity for a "clinic" in his life work. He should do some work of gospel instruction and exhortation. His heart and mind need it. He would come forth at the period of licensure able to conduct a service with ease and comfort to himself and others, and not so awkward as to make a whole congregation nervous lest he break down in opening the Bible and hymn book.

The Faculty could and would see that too many engagements were not made and studies not interfered with. L. S. M. has heard of this reason for removing the seminary, but evidently he cannot laugh it out of court by speaking of it as exercise of "lung power." If the exercise of "lung power" in learning to preach instils "the virus of vain ambition" to such a deadly extent, how terribly dangerous it must be to do the work of actual preaching! The seminary student must not exercise his gifts for fear of vain ambition, still more must not the ministers of the gospel speak lest ambition should cause him to fall. "Our poor human nature at its best" is evidently too weak ever to trust itself in the pulpit. L. S. M. would be delighted with Tennyson's "silent Island" as a location for a seminary.

(c) Temporary residence in a city at this stage of preparation would give something of great value in a personal way. Many of our students come from retired, rural districts, and need the finish, refinement, and versatility which they would absorb in a city. These qualities cannot be given by word of mouth, but come in a gradual and insensible way by contact.

(d) Moreover our students would have advantages in preparing for work in foreign fields. Some medical training is invaluable for any man expecting to be a missionary and all know that this is the day of medical missions. The medical colleges in Richmond would furnish the needed advantages.

4. It will be impossible to secure at Hampden-Sidney as much money as could be easily gotten in a city for the proper equipment and enlargement of the seminary. People do not wish to put their money where it will never be seen and rarely heard from. The seminary in a city would attract the notice and hence the gifts of the benevolent. Large gifts are often made in our day for memorial purposes and these are never given to be hidden. It would lose the very character almost of a memorial. The intensest effort is required to secure small sums for the present location. Witness the long and dreary campaign for the Fifth Professorship Endowment! Seventy years have scarcely given money to equip our building with even ordinary necessities for health, comfort and convenience. In a city wealth is centered and local pride alone will bring many gifts. Louisville Seminary received from the generous Mr. Alexander recently, $100,000; one will not suppose for one moment that he would have given so princely a sum to be buried in the backwoods of Kentucky. The seminary continuing at Hampden-Sidney will merely hold its own in endowment; send it to Richmond and the endowment will surely increase and we will some day have an institution with money sufficient for her great purposes. I call special attention to this consideration.

5. Our young men are unwilling to go to an unknown rural place for their training. I say unknown for Hampden-Sidney is unknown save as the seat of the college and seminary. It has taken us seventy years, backed by the two strongest Synods of the Southern Church to build up an annual attendance of 60 to 70 students at Hampden-Sidney. Louisville backed by two of the weaker Synods in one year built up an attendance of fifty. Next year confidently expect seventy-five. What makes the difference? Not the Faculty; for there is no more able faculty in the United States than the one at Hampden-Sidney. Princeton, McCormick and Louisville have all made earnest efforts to secure our Moore. They knew he would prove a brilliant light to attract patronage. Besides there are other able men. What makes the difference? LOCATION. Location alone.

God bless Louisville; but let us remove our Union to Richmond so that we may at least be on competing grounds with our sister seminary.

Hampden-Sidney is inaccessible. Her mud-bound roads are dreary in winter—Our students are unwilling to toil to reach an institution when fast trains will take them to the doors of another claiming to be as good.

Candidates from our own Virginia Presbyteries and Colleges have already entered the seminary at Louisville. These have, almost to a man, said they preferred Union but went to Louisville because of its city advantages. With Louisville in existence and equipped as Kentucky will equip her, should Union remain in her present location, she cannot count on students from the University of Virginia, Washington and Lee, University of North Carolina, King College, and other institutions. We should take warning in time. Able men who have come most closely in contact with the situation advocate the removal.

There has not been a man in the faculty as long as five years since the war who did not think that removal was a necessity. Our departed brethren Peck, Smith and Latimer were driven to the conclusion that in order to large and increasing usefulness the seminary should be removed from its present disadvantageous location. Dr Peck's formula for the situation was: "The seminary is bound to move sooner or later." Dr. Dabney thought the same thing while he lived at Hampden-Sidney.

Drs. English, Johnson, Hersman and Moore are a unit in earnestly desiring the removal. Removal, too, involves considerable financial sacrifice to the present Professors. They would have to rent their houses in Richmond which mean that they would have to pay about $700 each, a year, to secure the removal of the seminary. Yet such is their conviction of the necessity of the step that they urge it upon the Church.

The action of the Board last spring looking to removal was the action of an able, thoughtful, earnest, body of men. They did not move until after years of anxious thought over all the problems involved. That action, too, was taken we understand with remarkable unanimity.

What "looker-on" dare say that he can see more than our distinguished Faculty and able Board.

Many other important reasons for the removal could be given. We give these to show L. S. M., that he has not, though a "looker-on," seen all there is in this question of removal.

We would detract nothing from the glories of Hampden-Sidney. We yield to none in love for a splendid past. On the mother's side we are linked with John H. Rice, and all the members of our family have been educated at Hampden-Sidney College. We wish the college conspicuous success, but her friends should see that she is moved from her present location. After we have removed our seminary to Richmond and she is launched upon a prosperous career, in some vacation season her students may, when the roads are good, make their way to "the Hill" for a picnic and beneath the signing pines have their piety "grow warmer among the ruins of Iona."

DO WHAT YOU CAN.

She hath done what she could. Mark 14: 8.

Mary, the sister of Lazarus and Martha, whose home was in Bethany, offered to Jesus a token of her personal affection and confidence. It was a small thing to do, and yet the Master seems to have regarded it as of some importance.

She had an alabaster box of costly ointment made from the roots of the East Indian nard, and according to the usage in Oriental lands, she poured it on the head of Jesus. Its perfume filled the house, and some of the disciples were indignant at what they called the waste of a precious substance which might have been sold for three hundred pence for the benefit of the poor.

Jesus rebuked their complaints by saying that Mary had "done what she could." It was not within her power to assist Him in any great way, but she improved her narrow opportunity and extended to Him a most gracious courtesy.

The lesson is very significant. We may not be able to do large things, but we can all do something. Not every life can be conspicuous, but every life can be beautiful. We are working for the approval of God, not for the praise or applause of men, and though the world takes no note of our little acts of beneficence He sees them, and that should be satisfaction enough. No man ever lived in so small a sphere that he could not be helpful to somebody at some time either by word or deed, and these scattered words and deeds are the seed corn whence springs the heavenly harvest.

Great men and women are doubtless needful to the progress of society, but not more so than little men and women who perform their humble tasks with serene faith and unswerving fidelity. A general directs the battle, and when the strategy of his genius has wrought a victory we place his statue in our parks, but after we have given him all due credit we must not forget that the victory was really won by the courage of the common soldiers whose names are never mentioned.

When we travel over the country road we look with awestruck wonder at the range of hills on the horizon line, their tops empurpled by the setting sun. The clouds rest on their brows like crowns filled with diamonds, whose facets flash with many colored lights. But need we be unmindful of the graceful ferns the thousand wild flowers which Nature has woven into a carpet for our feet? While admiring the one shall we ignore the other? The same creative force which lifted the hills from the valleys has fashioned also the pimpernel which peeps from the sod to give us cheer. What are hills without verdure? Every tree and bramble, every weed and blossoming bud, serves to make the picture perfect; and who is rash enough to say that the moss on a fallen trunk has not its mission as well as the stately pine, the pride and glory of the forest?

We need not be discouraged because we live near the ground rather than near the sky. Our prime duty is to recognize our limitations; and not fret ourselves into restlessness through envy of those who can do easily what we cannot do at all. Aspiration and ambition are well enough in their way, and we should always be prepared for a larger opportunity when it presents itself; but it is a fatal mistake not to do the little things of to-day because we expect to do great things to-morrow. The logic of happiness teaches us to be content with what we have and to make the most of ourselves in our present surroundings. Then, if wider chance happens to come our way, we shall be equipped to make good use of it.

It is a great pity that the popular theology should dampen our ardor to do what we can. It has wrested the saying of the prophet Isaiah, that "all our righteousness are as filthy rags," from its proper interpretation and bidden us believe that, however honest our motives and however self-sacrificing our daily lives, they count for nothing in the sight of God, unless we accept a long array of dogmas which no ordinary mind can comprehend and about which theologians themselves differ.

We are wounded "past all surgery" by such a statement. It is utterly incredible that God should reject the man who believes a little and lives according to that belief, refusing to allow him to enter heaven because he cannot accept everything which the Church teaches as truth.

Besides, it is false; it is unreasonable. It does not commend itself to the common sense of mankind. A good deed done with a pure motive will never under any circumstances, be disapproved on high. No matter how long or how short your creed may be, if you love your fellow-men and preserve your personal integrity amid temptation and hardship, the dear God who is our Father will not regard you as clothed in filthy rags, but on the contrary will say, "Thou hast been faithful in a few things; I will make the ruler over many things."

Do what good you may, therefore, and trust to the love of God rather than the caprice of men. If you live in a narrow circle, fill it full of holy thoughts and noble actions. No day will pass that shall not give you the opportunity to lend a helping hand to some forlorn soul. Men and women need encouragement, for our years are filled with trouble. So far as lies in your power do good by word or deed, or both, and when you wake from the last sleep the angels will lead you in the presence of One who will give you a kindly welcome.—New York Herald.

Individual Spoons.

Apropos to the solving of "the individual cup" question at the celebration of the Lord's Supper, a suggestion, coming from a good old Scotch lady in Kansas, may help Brother Hutchison, of Salem and other "nice people" out the dilemma. "Why, man," she says, "let each communicant take a 'silver spoon' wi' them and dip a sip." Whether this idea is original with the old lady I know not; but you see that it would do away with the cup and a "large bowl" could be used. Of course each spoon would be absolutely clean and when it entered the "bowl" would impart no impurity or "death dealing disease." After it had been used each communicant could see to it that the spoon was fumigated, scoured and cleansed until every little lurking bacillus, bacterium or suspicious germ had been captured and summarily dealt with. Then there would be some comfort in the thought that the particular germ or germs that were holding a picnic on the spoon, belonged by right to the owner of the spoon.—Interior.

THE HILLS.

The everlasting hills! they hedge me round
And hold me safe within this narrow vale,
From all the world's great turmoil not a sound
Doth penetrate these silences profound.
Ah, life is paradise in this fair vale!

At morning all the East grows vivid red,
And all the hills reflect the rosy light;
At sundown warm and mellow rays are shed
Adown the valley, while the mountain head
Stands for a moment bathed in glory bright.

Then, like a being pure and fair as snow,
The full moon rises grandly o'er the hills,
And mounting zenithward, serene and slow,
She pours a flood of light on all below,
And views her face in myriad mountain rills.

Ah, this is peace! to live at nature's side,
To walk with her at morn and noon and eve,
To wander free with nature for a guide,
To drift and dream upon life's quiet tide,
To find from wordly cares a sweet reprieve.

PREACHING THE GOSPEL.

The change proposed in the Law of Licensure has at least been edifying to the Church in one respect if in no other, in that it has given to the public and the Church each week through the columns of your paper a series of able articles pro and con. These are of themselves sufficient to impress all who read them with the idea that no matter what may be the result in the future of our turning out preachers, the past has not been a failure—judging from these discussions. They have all been of a high order and, if somewhat too high, it was not the fault of substance and diction, but only in the aim. The writer has like all others, perhaps, enjoyed them, but it was far from his thought to have anything to say in the matter, until the issue of your paper containing the article of Rev. Egbert Smith, and this has drawn his fire, though only to shoot at the same mark, with no hope, however, of hitting the centre as he did. According to our poor way of thinking he has hit the nail on the head, though so hard as not to leave much to be driven up, but with his permission I want to give it at least one blow. Having had the misfortune to enter the ministry partly, at least, by the short hand method, and having been classed in my Presbytery as one of the red tape men and sticklers for form, &c., I wish to put myself on record this time, at least, as not on that side of the house.

In one sentence of Bro. Smith, it seems to me lies the "germ of the whole matter," (and a big one it is.) He says, "We must square our Book not with an untried and dangerous theory, but with our practice, a practice of ten years standing—the result of which has been good and not evil." Let me add to what he has so well said, and I do it reverently, but from entire conviction that we must square our Book, not alone with our practice, but with the necessity pressing upon us in this 19th century, growing out of one great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Books of Church Order no matter how good or how old, are of man, but this commission and the Book from which it is taken is of God.

Let us put a query. If this Book of Church Order, created in a different age of the Church, becomes a drawback to the preaching of the gospel, or more, is insufficient for the exigencies of to-day, what is the duty of the Church in the present? Hold on to the letter of the Book, or, rising to the occasion, forget those things which are behind and preach out to those which are before? Another query. If the preaching of these young men in the past has been productive of good, (and who can successfully deny it,) yea more, if God has used them as instruments for the conversion of souls, can the Church in her her corporate capacity stop them now without sin? Verily it seems as though we had taken that age of the world when there is most need for activity, zeal and increased scope of labor, to put on the brakes, (air brakes.) Never before in the history of the world, or of the Church, has the great work, left her by Christ, so crowded upon her ministry as to-day. Are we equal to it? Is that the thing for ministers to do? To oppose the present promiscuous system of evangelization made necessary by the great needs of the case, and then hold the Church back from doing the work?

"Say not ye there are yet four months," (three years), "and then cometh harvest, behold I say unto you lift up your eyes and look on the fields for they are white already to the harvest."

When cotton opens it must be picked and the man that waits to discuss with his neighbors methods, &c., will get left. We have been pretty badly left already, in some places, and others have gathered the harvest. But the opportunity is ours and that fixes us with responsibility before God. He holds us accountable for opportunities and their improvement, taking care of the result. The opportunity of the pre-millennial age is upon us, but shall we meet it by taking more time? Some country church, unable to sustain a preacher, but hungry for the Word, knowing a young man in the seminary of a year's standing, writes him to come over and help them. Souls are to be saved and much good can be accomplished. The young man thanks them for the invitation, &c., but says: "Wait two years until I study some more, know myself better, and am sure that God's Holy Spirit is with me, then I will come." Then if he ever goes, one-half that needed him are dead, or gone into some other Church. God forbid that in the day when churches as well as individuals ("I know thy works, &c.") must face their record, there shall stand in front of the Presbyterian Church a ghastly company of wan, hollow-eyed spectres, who will cry out: "Had it not been for your peculiar views of Licensure we might have had the gospel preached to us." When Christ left his disciples here to carry out his work, He bid them tarry in the city of Jerusalem, and not to preach, but to wait. What for? To study some more? No, but for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. And if a young man has not had this after a year in the preparation for the ministry, he had better quit then and not wait longer. There is a parable in the Bible about stewards and talents committed to them; then, brethren, let's try and make a big percentage on ours and not borrow from some outside, unauthorized evangelist. We have had ours wrapped up in a napkin long enough. Don't let's put another fold in it and then put on some fresh dirt. There have been times in the history of God's Divinely appointed Church in almost every age, when increased zeal and activity were necessary to meet the wants of the times, and when the Church, like the beneficent angel she is, unfolded her wings, opened wide her arms, and received to her communion great numbers as the result of this forward movement. To such a time as this we have come. Brethren, in this age crutches won't do, (unless a man is lame,) and we must get down off them and run toward the Kingdom or be left, or at best be a straggler. Which class of men are best to preach the gospel, those having a year's training and identified with our Church, or those having no study and identified with no Church? The ministerial graces, mentioned in Scripture, are: Knowledge, Discretion, Truthfulness, Gentleness, Forbearance, Meekness, Humility, Firmness, Zeal and Blamelessness, and I suspect that all these may be found burning as brightly in the breasts of these young men, as some older man who has had the ups and downs, successes and failures, and disappointments of half a century of pastoral work.

Young men are the hope of the world and the Church, and the history of the world proves that this hope is not misplaced, for they are worthy of every confidence. If these students all labor like one we have had with us in this county during the past summer, then the best thing the Presbyterian Church can do is to flood the world with them. His preaching was exceptional, and as to the ministerial graces, he could make some of us blush. I went to see an old man living in squalor and wretchedness, and afflicted with diseased legs and feet, and thougnt I was doing well to get in the house, talk with him, ask him to come to church, &c., but he got down on his knees and washed his feet and tidied up his house. In God's name can't we get some more like him.

"For we preach not ourselves" (nor our views), "but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus sake."

For Jesus sake,

GEO. A. SPARROW.

THE TWO-WINE THEORY.

BY T. W. CHAMBERS, D. D.,
Of the Collegiate Reformed Church, New York City.

I am requested to write upon the theory that Scripture makes mention of two kinds of wine, one fermanted and intoxicating, the other unfermented and incapable of producing undue exhilaration. The difficulty of opposing this theory is expressed by the man who said that it wrenched him terribly to kick at nothing. The view is not held by any respectable scholar now living in any part of the world. It is not maintained in any influential commentary on the inspired Word. It is not supported by any Hebrew or Greek lexicon, whether issued in Europe or America. True, it was advocated in the last generation by two men deserving of high respect for their services to religion and letters, Moses Stuart and Tayler Lewis; but in this vagary they have had no successors among the learned. And the case stands as I have stated; all scholarship on one side, and some mistaken advocates of temperance on the other.

There is no word, either in Hebrew or Greek, that denotes unfermented wine, and for this fact there was the very good reason that the thing was unknown; therefore the name was not required. In Palestine there were, no doubt, unfermented drinks in ancient times as in modern; but none of them was called wine. That name was given to the juice of the grape, not in its natural state, but after it had been subjected to a well-defined process. At the present time the traveler in the Holy Land can obtain wine, the product of the different regions through which he passes, but in every case it is the result of vinous fermentation. No other kind of so-called wine is known. Missionaries who have spent their lives in the country bear the same testimony. They have never seen or heard of an unfermented drink called wine. And this testimony has very great weight, much more than it would have in the Western world where customs and habits change from generation to generation. But in the Orient the social life of to-day is the social life of former days. As Sir John Chardin said, two centuries ago:

"In the East they are constant in all things; the habits are at this day in the same manner as in the precedent ages; so that one may reasonably believe that in that part of the world the exterior forms of things, (as their manners and customs), are the same now as they were two thousand years since, except in such changes as may have been introduced by religion, which are, nevertheless, very inconsiderable."

The argument then is this, if the two-wine theory existed in biblical times and was generally recognized, it would exist now and have at least some form of recognition. The total absence of any trace of such a distinction of wines is proof, not only presumptive, but positive and direct, that the ancients knew nothing of it.

This is confirmed by the usage of Scripture. The most common Hebrew word for wine (yayin) occurs much more than a hundred times, and is used in a great variety of connections. On one hand, it constituted the drink offering in the daily service of the Tent of Meeting (Ex. 29: 40); in the Psalms it is spoken of as that which maketh glad the heart of man (104: 15); in Proverbs (9: 5) wisdom invites men to drink of the wine she has mingled; Isaiah (55: 1) puts it with milk as a symbol of the blessings of the Gospel; Jeremiah (40: 10, 12) speaks of it with summer fruits and oil as the proper sustenance of man; Amos (9: 14) promises it as a prominent feature of the restored Israel; and Zechariah (10: 7) likens the joy of God's favor to the joy that comes through wine. On the other hand, it was wine that made Noah drunk (Gen. 9: 21) and that led to the hideous sin of Lot (19: 32–4); priests on service were forbidden to drink it (Lev. 10: 9); in Proverbs (20: 1) it is said to be a mocker, and in a subsequent chapter (23: 29–35) there is an eloquent and vehement denunciation of its evil effects; Isaiah (5: 11, 12; 28: 1, 7) pronounces a wo upon those who err through wine, and Amos (2: 8) specifies wine drinking as one of the sins of Israel, and Habakkuk (2: 5) says wine is a treacherous dealer (R. V.)

Now in both classes of passages the same word occurs. The only possible explanation of the contrariety is that in one case the writer speaks of the use, the moderate and reasonable use, of the fruit of the vine, while in the other reference is had to the abuse of the gift, immoderate and reckless indulgence which dethrones reason and turns man into a beast. The result of the former is refreshment and exhilaration which may very properly represent God's spiritual gifts; the result of the latter is a disturbance of the faculties, which degrades and perverts and leads to innumerable evils. There is no need then of the two-wine theory. If it could be established, it would not avail; for, as we have seen, the very same word denotes what is sometimes a blessing and at others a curse, and this both literally and figuratively.

The same contrariety is found in the New Testament. Our Lord said, as we are told by Luke (7: 33–4): "John the Baptist is come eating no bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil. The Son of Man is come eating and drinking, and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man and a winebibber." John was a preacher of repentance, and symbolized his errand in his garb and food; but his Lord set forth the good news of salvation, and therefore ate and drank what other people did, and hence the atrocious calumny of his foes. And as our Lord used wine, so he made it by miracle at Cana of Galilee (John 2: 3–10). Not only so, but he appointed as one of the elements to be be used in the sacrament that commemorates his death, "the fruit of the vine," a phrase which all lexical authorites consider a periphrasis for wine, a view confirmed by the fact that the Apostle (1 Cor. 11: 21) reproves some of the Corinthians for having become "drunken" in celebrating this feast. On the other hand, Paul exhorts the Ephesians (5: 18) not to be drunk with wine, and says that the deacons must not be given to much wine (1 Tim. 3: 8), a direction which he repeats to Titus (2: 3) in regard to the aged women. In Revelation (17: 2) wine is used as a symbol of the gross evils wrought by the great harlot that sitteth upon many waters. In the New Testament as in the Old the same article is used in the most solemn part of divine worship and in a drunken revel; it is made to represent a blessing and a cure; it is used as a medicine (Luke 10; 34, 1 Tim. 5: 23) and as a means of shameful riot Ephesians (5: 18, R. V.)

Now, it is easy to say that when the Scripture speaks in praise or toleration of wine it means an unfermented drink, and where it speaks in condemnation of it, it means an intoxicating liquor; but such an assertion is arbitrary in the last degree. The same word cannot mean one thing at one time and a different thing at another, when there is nothing in usage, in the connection, or on any philological ground to suggest such a difference. And it is a great mistake in the friends of temperance to commit themselves to such a view, and to hold that any use of wine, however rare or moderate, is a sin. Surely it is an affront to reason to call that sinful which we have no reason to doubt was done by our Lord himself. No one disputes that the use of wine is forbidden by the Koran in more places than one. How easy it would have been for Christ and his Apostles to insert the same prohibition in the New Testament had they been so disposed! The Bible rule is temperance, not abstinence; the control, not the extirpation of the natural desires. Abstinence may become obligatory as the only road to temperance, or by the law of love which restrains a man's liberty when the exercise of that liberty may work injury to others. The cause of morals has wrought great and beneficent changes by advocating what can be fully sustained by Scripture warrant. But to go beyond this, and advocate what in fact is a species of asceticism as obligatory in itself, repels many, and furnishes no secure anchorage even for those who accept it.—Independent.

ELECTROLIBRATION CO. GOULD BUILDING, ATLANTA, Ga.

It Leads to Ruin.

A liquor dealer in the town of Ayr, Scotland, had a particular brand of whisky which he wished to advertise. One day when the circus was coming to town, to add interest to its performances and advertise his whisky he offered a prize for the best answer to the question, why this particular kind of whisky resembled a certain bridge across the waters of the Ayr. The show came, and the answers to the liquor seller's question were handed in to be examined, and the successful competitor was announced. He proved to be a boy, who, perhaps, knew from experience what he was speaking of, and his answer to the liquor seller's question, why his particular brand of whisky was like the bridge, was as follows: "Because it leads to the poor-house, the lunatic asylum and the cemetery.—Hastings.

This analogy applies here as well, and, dear Christian people, will you continue to build and keep up these bridges which lead to the poor-house and penitentiary? Why not rise in your might and knock the foundations from under them?

"Setting the Thames on Fire."

This is a saying which we often hear, but probably few people know its origin. In the time of our forefathers the corn was ground in a rough instrument called a "temse." This was merely a stone hollowed out to receive the corn and with a piece of wood passed through it, which being rapidly turned, ground the corn to flour. If the wooden handle was turned with sufficient force, the friction of the wood against the stone would cause the stick to catch fire, but as it required considerable energy to produce this effect the person who could accomplish it was thought smart, and he who could "set the temse on fire" was pretty sure to be a good worker in other ways. After a time the "temse" was superceded by better machinery, but the expression still remains in our language, only as the "temse" is now an unknown instrument the spelling has been corrupted into "Thames" although in reality it has nothing to do with the river Thames.—Good Words.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following change of address :

Rev. B. L. Beall, from Lenoir, N. C., to Greensboro, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Hebron Church :—The following paper was drawn up and adopted by the members of Wilmington Presbytery and members of Hebron church who succeeded in reaching Hebron, where the late meeting of Presbytery was to have been held :

"In view of the circumstances by which we are surrounded, we, the visitors and members of the church in attendance, most gratefully express ourselves as follows :

That we, for ourselves and on behalf of the Presbytery of Wilmington, take great pleasure in returning our heartfelt thanks to the citizens in the vicinity of Hebron church for their unbounded kindness and hospitality shown us, and also to Bro. Wood, for efficient work done in entertaining and edifying the congregation during our stay by his preaching."

Brunswick County :—The first Presbyterian church in this old county was organized on Friday the 19th inst., by a commission of Wilmington Presbytery, consisting of Rev. P. H. Hoge, D. D., chairman, and Rev. A. D. McClure, and Ruling Elders B. F. Hall, and Samuel Northrop. Mr. McClure preached Friday morning, and at night the church was organized with twelve members, Dr. Hoge preaching the sermon. Mr. Jackson Johnson and Mr. John S. Henry were elected ruling elders. The officers were ordained and installed Saturday morning, Rev. A. D. McClure preaching the sermon. Dr. Hoge remained and preached Saturday night and Sunday morning, administering the communion on Sunday. Three additional members were received, two of whom were baptized. Five baptized non-communicants were on the roll of organization and four more were baptized on Sunday. The church chose the name of "New Hope." It has a flourishing Sunday-school and a good building in course of erection. It is in the field occupied for two summers by Rev. L. W. Curtis. Dr. Hoge will preach there once a month during the week until the field be supplied.

Burgaw and Hopewell :—Five members were received into this church on the 14th inst., on profession of faith, and four members at Hopewell on 21st inst. These churches are in charge of Rev. G. W. MacMillan.

Rev. Jonas Barclay :—Who has been supplying Williams Memorial and Mulberry churches during the past year, has been called to the pastorate of those churches. His decision is not yet announced.

Phillippi Church :—Our fall communion, embracing 2nd Sabbath and including four days services, resulted in seventeen additons to membership of the church—sixteen by examination, one restored, and four baptisms.

VIRGINIA.

Sermons at the University of Virginia :—The series of sermons at the University of Virginia on the "Evidences of Christianity," to which Dr. Moses Hoge, Dr. John A. Broadus, Bishop Dudley and Bishop Granberry have contributed two sermons each, was concluded Oct. 14th with two discourses by Dr. W. W. Moore on the Evidence of the Contemporary History of the Old Testament. The whole series will soon be published in book form.

Harpen Creek Church :—Has just passed through a precious season of grace. In the meeting, the pastor, Rev. G. W. Belk, was assisted by Rev. G. G. Sydnor, who preached the Word with force and power. Christians were revived, and sinners converted As a result, nine were added to the church.

Synod :—Meets in Danville this week. Dr. Kerr, as moderator of the last meeting, will preach the opening sermon.

Gordonsville :—The Rev. R. B. Eggleston has closed the second year of his ministry in the churches of Gordonsville, Southplains, and Will's Memorial. There have been about fifty-five additions to these churches, and excellent work at Barboursville and Boyd's Tavern.—Central Presbyterian.

New London :—Rev. G. W. Belk, of Chatham, has been assisting Rev. G. G. Sydnor, pastor of the Academy church in a meeting of much interest. The church was much revived, and five were added on examination. Others will be received. (Ib.)

Rev. T. A. Wharton :—Has been transferred from Mecklenburg to Abingdon Presbytery, with a view to his becoming pastor of the Abingdon (Sinking Creek) church.

Rev. A. F. Laird :—Was installed pastor of Front Royal church on the 7th of October by Rev. Chas. Ghiselin and Rev. R. W. Carter.

Rev. J. B. Morton :—At the adjourned meeting of Abingdon Presbytery, on the 6th, Licentiate J. B. Morton was ordained to the full work of the ministry; and the following day was installed pastor of Beaver Creek church in Washington county.

Hampden-Sidney :—Rev. B. M. Wilkinson (the colored preacher) is better, though still confined to his bed, and very sick. Funds are needed for his support. On the 7th, Dr. McIlwaine preached, and administered the communion. Three members were received on profession of faith and four by letter; besides several colored persons.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Synod of South Carolina :—Meets this week in the First church of Greenville.

Salem Church :—Has extended a call to Rev. E. E. Robertson, who has just been installed at Limestone and Spartan Mills.

Rev. James Russell :—Has been installed at Horeb and Union where he has made a fine impression on the people.

The Columbia Presbyterian High School :—Has had a splendid opening. It now has four teachers and 150 scholars—nearly fifty applicants could not be received for lack of room. —Southern Presbyterian.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham :—Dr. Handley, of the Central church, writes to the Christian Observer: "The financial cloud is breaking. The Lord's people are hopeful. We are moving on with our work, not rapidly but substantially. We had recently a very precious meeting. Bro. Bull, of Opelika, was with us. The preaching was a "feast of fat things." The Lord's people were edified, strengthened and comforted. There were no additions to our membership, yet we feel that a good work was done."

Wyeth :—A new church was organized, Sept. 23d, with sixty new members, which has been increased since to eighty-five. Three elders and three deacons were ordained and installed. A house of worship will be built at once. This is the field of Rev. B. F. Bedinger.—Observer.

Hatchett Creek :—The annual camp-meeting was held at this church, beginning on Friday before the fifth Sabbath of September, and was protracted until the following Wednesday. The preaching was done by Rev. P. C. Morton and W. I. Sinnott, with one sermon by Rev. Mr. Tucker, of the Methodist church. There were about fifteen confessions of Christ and seven were received into the Presbyterian church. Eternity alone will reveal the great amount of good which this campmeeting has done during the many years of its existence.

KENTUCKY.

Organic Union :—The Synod of Kentucky at its recent session in Paducah took the following action without a dissenting vote :

The committee on the Minutes of the General Assembly would report that they find nothing in the records of the Assembly which requires any action on the part of the Synod; but they would call attention to the action on Organic Union, page 211, and would recommend the adoption of the following :

The Synod believes that the appointment of a Committee of Conference would have been an act of proper courtesy towards brethren of a Church, between which and our own the most cordial relations of fraternity subsist; and, that the result of such a conference would have been to make our people, on both sides, more intelligently acquainted with the real causes of separation, and to show that the questions involved are those of principle, and not of passion; and, therefore, whilst appreciating the motives which actuated the General Assembly, we regret that it did not see its way clear to appoint a Committee of Conference and exhibit our willingness to confer candidly and freely in reference to all matters of difference between us and the brethren of the Northern Church.

[For the N. C. Presbyterian.]

"USURY" AND "USURY."

"Is it right to loan money on interest ?" is a question which is now concerning a considerable number of our people. And this is a question on which many are seriously seeking light. It is thought, and argued, by some that the Old Testament forbids the receiving of interest in toto :

"And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him; yea, though he be a stranger, or sojourner, that he may live with thee. Take thou no usury of him, or increase; but fear thy God." Lev. 25 : 35, 36.

"Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury, but a stranger thou may est lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury, that the Lord thy God may bless thee." Deut. 23 : 19, 20.

Here we see that the children of Israel were allowed to exact more from the Canaanites, Amorites, Hittites, &c., than from one another, because those people had filled up their cup of iniquity and were doomed by the Lord to subjection to the children of Israel. But we have no people around us, toward whom we can maintain the same attitude which the children of Israel might rightfully hold toward the original inhabitants of Canaan; and it is argued with fairness, that it is wrong for any of us to exact "usury" for the loan of money.

But is the word usury of the same meaning with the word interest, as some think ? As the exacting of usury, on the one hand, was so strictly forbidden to the children of Israel, and we see so plainly, on the other hand, that the loaning of money on a moderate interest may be advantageous both to the lender and borrower,—the inference is, that usury means something more than interest. A difference is recognized by the State law, when it denominates any percent under 8 as interest, and any percent above that as usury; it is further borne out by the definition in Robinson's Bible Encyclopædia—"usury, a premium received for the loan of a sum of money, over and above the principal;" and what the difference is, is seen in a very striking way by digging down into the root meanings in the Bible.

In the Old Testament, we find that the word usury is translated from the Hebrew word, Neshek, derived from the verb na shak, which means primarily, to bite, then to gnaw, to vex, to oppose. It is interesting to note, that these figures of speech, which were in use in the time of Moses, are still in use to-day. In some parts of the country you will hear the expression, "I got bit in that bargain,"—meaning, of course, that he did not get all that was due him, according to the law of equity. We, also, speak of a "gnawing debt," the interest of which "eats a man out of house and home;" and of course such an interest vexes and oppresses, and may be termed usury according to she meaning of that word in the Old Testament.

Now the children of Israel were not to oppress one another in any way,—"Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother"—but they were to live together as brethren. And, more than that, they were not allowed to receive even interest from the very poor,—"If thy brother be waxen poor and fallen in decay * * * * * * take thou no usury from him, nor (even) increase" (Heb. tarbith, from rava, to enlarge, or multiply which doubtless contains our idea of interest). They were to help their brethren who were in need. Some might be found in such circumstances, that the lowest interest would be oppressive.

What then is to be said of men who make it their business to loan money on real estate with the direct purpose of getting that real-estate in possession, at a sacrifice of its value, by sinking the land owner in debt ? What is to be said of a man who takes advantage of a poor, but honest, man in need, when nobody else can help him, and "accommodates" him with the loan of ten dollars, but charges him five dollars for that accommodation,—viz: he receives fifteen dollars in return for the loan of ten dollars for six months. Such transactions as these are not immaginary, but real, passing before our eyes from time to time. Is there not sin lying at somebody's door in this "Christian" nation ? And will God allow judgment to slumber forever ?

The above examples, differing somewhat in their aspect, serve to illustrate the Old Testament meaning of usury—a loan of property, with such exactions as BITE, GNAW, OPPRESS. The significance of the word lies in the idea of oppression, or of bringing a brother into distress, rather than in any fixed laws of borrowing and lending. Any lending of money with exactions which tend toward oppression in usury according to the Old Testament usage.

But when we come to the New Testament (Matt. 25 : 27 and Luke 19 : 23—"Thou oughtest, therefore, to have given my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I might have received mine own with usury"), the meaning differs. Here the word "usury" is translated from the Greek word toko (τοκω), derived from the verb tikto(τικτω), which is synonomous with the Hebrew word tarbith, mentioned above, and means to bring forth, bear, produce. That which the Saviour called increase, or interest, the human translators called usury. He seemed to teach,—indirectly, at least—that money when put into circulation, legitimately produces, or begets something of value, and that the lender is entitled to a rent for its use, as much so as for the use of his land.

AFFAIRS AT DAVIDSON.

The fall term at Davidson—and we presume at every other college—is the time when students reap the aftermath of good resolutions formed during the summer under the parental eye. Hence this fall there is the usual amount of buoyant mental activity and consequent good work.

At present there are one hundred and fifty-four enrolled. As this is a larger number than we had at the same time last year, it is well-nigh certain that we shall go beyond our last year's registration which, it will be remembered, was the largest in the history of the college. The competition for members, though, is becoming so sharp, and the inducements offered to students by other institutions are so many, so varied, and so seductive, that it will be necessary for every friend of Davidson to work for her with a will if she is to enlarge her sphere of usefulness and make the proper impress upon Church and State. It is unfortunate that the race for numbers should become so keen that the secondary schools should have their area of usefulness circumscribed. While all the prominent colleges in the State, we believe, are raising every year, the standard of graduation, we suspect every one of them is consciously or unconsciously lowering the standard of admission. The result is that the secondary schools are encouraged to do inferior work, and students who enter badly prepared are disheartened at the very outset of their college career, and in a year or two leave college after a futile attempt to stand the strain made upon their intellectual energies, by the efforts to meet the exactive demands of modern scholarship. It is clear that, if a halt is not called in the mad rush for numbers, the cause of education, higher and lower, must suffer.

But we do not intend to play the offensive role of a croaker. Higher education in North Carolina has taken such strides forward in the last ten years that the present passion for counting noses must eventually give way to a more laudable ambition to count heads. When Davidson, however, reaches two hundred, about the limit of her present accommodations, the friends of the college, the writer of this letter included, will be throwing up their hats very high and pleading, like Oliver Twist, for more. So irresistible is the American tendency to confuse 'big' with 'great.'

High resolves and lofty ideals being always in the air at the beginning of every session, you must excuse your correspondent, if he has depressed in the direction of the unattainable ideal in collegiate education.

At present the practical, vivid Now is of more consequence to the average student than the glamour of the unattainable Then, if we are to judge by the quality and quantity of good work being done just at this time in all of the various departments of study.

A special incentive is the fact that the graduation grade has been raised ten points in the Senior and Junior classes. Under the old standard, students graduated who really could have done better if they had had the spur of a higher numerical grade to incite them to more honest and faithful effort.

These cases are not numerous as the majority of the student body are alive to the importance of making the most of their opportunities. To those who are anxious for a higher education and unable to secure one from lack of funds, the Students Home just started here, the offspring of Dr. Shearer's liberal heart, affords ample opportunity.

Board may be obtained here for less than half the usual price and many a student is thus enabled to continue his education, who would otherwise be obliged to discontinue it permanently or temporarily. This is only one of the many ways in which Dr. Shearer with unostentatious kindness and liberality has befriended the student body during his presidency.

It is gratifying to the college authorities to note that the Medical College has enrolled a larger number this year, than it has ever had. Dr. Munroe, the President of the Institution, has won, all over the State such golden opinions of his work, that there is every reason to believe that students will be more and more attracted to his admirable school.

More anon of Davidson and its doings in another letter. This one is already long enough.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Mecklenburg Presbytery ; Preliminary services at 11 a. m., Oct. 16th, in the Presbyterian church; 25th anniversary; historical sketch by the stated clerk. Sermon at 3 p. m., by Rev. J. J. Kennedy, charter member. Text, Acts 28 : 15. Dr. E Nye Hutchison, elder of First church, Charlotte, one of the charter members, was elected moderator. Revs. W. W. Pharr, D. D., and J. B. Shearer, D.D., representatives of Concord Presbytery, were received and their greetings cordially presented and received,

Dr. Pharr spoke of Presbyterian Ways in the Past; Dr. J. H. Boyd spoke of Presbyterian Activities in the Present and Possibilities in the Future; Dr. Shearer spoke of the Educational Interests of the Church, appealing for the establishment of a Presbyterian Female Institution in Western North Carolina. Rev. R. Martin discussed the Development and Responsibilities of the Presbyterian System. Revs. W. P. McCorkle, J. R. McAlpine and S. W. Newell, were appointed a committee to report at Synod what action Presbytery shall take in regard to these anniversary exercises. Ministers present, 29; elders, 33.

Samuel W. Moore, of Hopewell church, was received as candidate. Pastoral relation at South Side church was dissolved and Rev. L. H. Baldwin permitted to labor beyond bounds of Presbytery till spring of 1895. Call for services of Rev. H.M. Parker from South Side church, was placed in his hands.

Calls from Mulberry and Williams Memorial churches for services of Rev. Jonas Barclay were placed in his hands.

Call from Davidson River church for Licentiate J. L. Wicker, of Fayetteville Presbytery, was approved, and he was received from Fayetteville Presbytery and ordained, and Revs. Campbell and Sample directed to install him.

Calls from Pleasant Hill and Pineville churches for Rev. J. R. McAlpine were approved, and Revs. Martin and Hunt were directed to install him at Pleasant Hill Nov. 1st, and at Pineville Nov. 2d, '94.

R. A. Dunn resigned as treasurer of Presbytery and J. W. Miller was elected in his place, and the auditing committee instructed to transfer the office on the 1st of November, and the following paper was unanimously adopted :

Resolved, That Presbytery reluctantly accepts the resignation of R. A. Dunn, our valued treasurer, and expresses its appreciation of the unfailing courtesy and faithful service which have marked the extended term of years during which he has handled the monies of this Presbytery.

The commission reported the organization of Midway church in Henderson county, July 28th, 1894, with sixteen members and two elders, and the church was enrolled.

Pastors and sessions were urged to make earnest efforts to raise apportionments for colored evangelistic work, and a collection of $16.00 was taken up to aid Bethany colored church, Asheville.

E. Nye Hutchison and H. M. Gray, were appointed trustees of Davidson College.

Presbytery expressed interest in the establishment of an institution where the daughters of our people may be thoroughly and cheaply educated under our own control and appointed Revs. Boyd, Campbell, and Smith, and Elders D. W. Oates and C. E. Graham, a committee to report on the matter and confer with the Board of Trustees of Concord Presbytery, for female education, and to call a meeting of Presbytery to consider their report if the way be clear.

Revs. W. P. McCorkle, H. E. Dixon and Wm. Black, and Elders Geo. M. Phifer, Frank Robinson and A. F. Stevens were appointed a committee on Church and Manse Erection, and a collection of $52.00 for this cause was taken up.

Revs. McAlpine, Campbell and Dixon, and Elders R. B. Alexander, J. B. Ross, and Archie Graham, were appointed with the agent, a committee on Colportage.

Revs. Smith, Campbell, and Miller, and Elders J. E. Oates and A. G. Brenizer were appointed committee to raise salary for an evangelist, to be put in charge of the Home Mission work of the Presbytery.

Bro. McLaurin, Business Manager of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, was heard, and the following paper adopted :

"Presbytery is gratified to receive a visit from Mr. Jno. McLaurin, Business Manager of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, and has heard with interest and pleasure his appeal in behalf of his valuable paper. We cordially commend the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN to the patronage of our people, as being not only a very important medium for the dissemination of religious truth, and Church news, but as being indispensable to the work of our own Synod. We would put on record our grateful sense of the diligence and faithfulness of the managent of the paper in furthering all the interests of our Master's kingdom, and we cordially invite Bro. McLaurin and his associate to visit our respective charges in the interests of the paper, assuring them of a cordial welcome to the homes and the hospitalities of our people."

The committee on Elders' and Deacons' Institute, made a satisfactory report and was continued with power to hold one or more Institutes in the Presbytery. Wm. Anderson was substituted for J. J. Osborne on committee.

Candidates were urged not to leave Union Theological Seminary till close of session.

The overtures of the General Assembly and other matters in minutes, were referred to a committee to report next spring.

The following paper was adopted :

WHEREAS, The chair has been filled by a ruling elder for the first time in its history, this Presbytery would place on record its sense of gratitude to God, that He has spared the life of our present moderator so long, and also express our appreciation of the patience, fidelity and impartiality with which he has discharged the onerous duties of that office.

Presbytery cordially endorsed the invitation of First church, Charlotte, to General Assembly to meet in Charlotte.

The Second church, Charlotte, was appointed as place for next regular meeting and 3 p. m., April 9th, 1895, as the time, with Rev. J. H. Boyd, D. D., and Elder Geo. M. Phifer, as committee of arrangements for next meeting.

Adjourned to meet in Greensboro next week on call of moderator.

Attest: R. Z. JOHNSTON, Stated Clerk.

Monroe, N. C., Oct. 20th, 1894.

NOTES.

Fayetteville Presbytery met with the Presbyterian church of Rockingham, Oct. 16th, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. W. F. Thom, Rev. J. W. Johnston was elected moderator, and Rev. W. B. Arrowood and Elder W. J. Currie temporary clerks. Sixteen ministers and thirty-three elders were present during the session.

Candidate L. L. Little, was licensed to preach the gospel, and calls for his services as pastor were received from Pee Dee, Wadeville, and Ellerbe Springs churches,

A call for the services of Rev. M. D. McNeill as pastor one-fourth of his time from White Hill church was received and placed in the brother's hands and accepted. A call from the Bluff church for the personal services of Rev. A. M. Harrell for one-half his time was placed in his hands.

Lumberton church was given permission to employ as supply Rev. D. W. Fox for one-half his time,

The Business Manager of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, Mr. J. McLaurin, was heard in the interest of that paper. Addresses were made by Revs. J. A. McMurray, A. J. McKelway and W. B. Arrowood, commending the paper and the importance of extending its circulation.

Presbytery agreed to hold adjourned meetings in the spring, when necessary, for the purpose of examining candidates for licensure, and directs her students to remain at the seminary till the close of its sessions, according to the request of the Board of Directors of Union Seminary,

A mass meeting, very interesting and impressive, in the interests of Foreign Missions was held Thursday evening, and a Presbyterial collection for that cause was taken up amounting to $20.34.

Gulf Church was chosen as the place of next regular meeting of Presbytery, the time to be decided at the adjourned meting at Synod.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson V.

Nov. 4th.—Jesus Lord of the Sabbath.

Mark ii. 23–28 and iii. 1–5. Commit vss. 3–5. Compare John v. 1–18.

Golden Text. The Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath.—Mark ii. 28.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. We have previously fixed that the events we have been studying were between our Lord's visit to Samaria on His way to Galilee (John iv) which was in December (four months to harvest, John iv. 35) and the following Passover, March–April, A. D., 28, which we have identified with the un-named feast of John v. i. The events of this lesson must have been after the Passover, because no corn could be plucked and eaten until the first sheaf had been offered at the Passover. Turning to John v. we find that a serious Sabbath controversy had arisen in Jerusalem during the feast out of the healing of an impotent man on the Sabbath. It is this controversy that had now followed Him back to Galilee, the provincial Pharisees taking their cue from the leaders at Jerusalem. Luke in his account (vi. 1.) has an expression "the second Sabbath after the first," (literally, the "second-first Sabbath"), the meaning of which is obscure, but it is probably according to same system of counting from the Sabbath of the Passover, the method of which is now unknown.

The call of Matthew had taken place since the last lesson, probably before the Passover.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson:

Passing through the grain-fields on the Sabbath, the disciples pluck the ears, vs. 23; accused by the Pharisees, vs. 24; defended by Jesus, (a) from O. T. precedent, vss. 25, 26; (b) from the beneficent purpose of the Sabbath, vs. 27; (c) from His own authority, vs. 28. The trap set in the synagogue, iii. 1; the malicious watchers, vs. 2; the accusers fore-stalled, vss. 3, 4; Christ's wrath and mercy, vs. 5.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 23. Corn-fields. Corn in the Scriptures denotes any kind of grain. It was probably barley, which ripened earliest.

Pluck the ears. Matthew (xii. 1, etc.) explains that they were hungry (as implied here in vs. 25) and adds that they "did eat:" and Luke (vi. 1, etc.) adds, "rubbing them in their hands." This was not an unlawful trespass on other people's property. The law (Deut. xxiii. 25) makes distinct provision for this. It was one of those provisions of the Mosaic law that compel property-owners to recognize the obligations of humanity, that no one should suffer.

Vs. 24. Why do they. The charge was that being constructively a kind of harvesting and threshing, it was unlawful on the Sabbath. Even then it violated neither the letter nor the spirit of the law, but only the elaborate definitions that the tradition of the elders had added. Jesus, however, does not make this point in His reply, but meets them on the broader ground that ceremonial laws must give place to the necessities of humanity.

Vs. 25, 26, Have ye never read. Professing to be so deeply learned in the Scriptures had they missed a plain lesson like this? Read the incident in 1 Sam. xxi. 1–6. Of course neither David nor the High Priest could make a thing right or wrong. But this was an act that had passed unreproved by the Scriptures and unchallenged by the Rabbis. The narrative in the O. T. names the priest Ahimelech and gives Abiathar as the name of the son, but both men seem to have borne both names (2 Sam. viii. 17 and references,)

Vs. 27. The Sabbath was made for man. God ordained the Sabbath for a blessing and not a burden. It is strange how people argue from this that they can set it aside or use it as they please. Gifts lay us under just as deep responsibility as laws. Those who from the second clause of the verse would bend the Sabbath to their own will, forget that the first clause makes it an institution of perpetual and universal obligation. It is made for MAN, not for Jews; for all centuries and not for a few.

Vs. 28. The Son of Man is Lord. Men argue that as the Sabbath is made for man, man is lord of the Sabbath. Jesus says that He is its Lord. We must come, then, to Him, and find out what He teaches about it. (See Fifth Step.)

Vs. 1. Into the synagogue. Apparently, but not necessarily, on the same Sabbath, but Luke says it was "another Sabbath" (vi. 6).

There was a man there. Probably by arrangement of the Pharisees to set a trap for Him. The man need not have been a party to the plot.

Vs. 2. Watched—that they might accuse. They wished ground for formal charges against Him, so as to cast Him out of the Synagogue and so discredit Him before the people.

Vs. 3. Stand forth. It was a crucial situation and He wanted the utmost publicity.

Vs. 4. Is it lawful. He demands a definition of the law from the authorized teachers that they may have no ground afterwards for accusations. As He puts the question there can be but one reply. So they are silent. *Or to do evil * * * or to kill.* To do evil should rather be "to do harm" i. e., to hurt. There is a two-fold implication here: it is first, a thrust at their consciences for their murderous purpose; and, second, it shows that to omit to heal is in truth the same as to hnrt; to omit to save a life, is really to kill. Matthew adds the provision that they themselves admitted for the humane care of animals on the Sabbath, in obedience to the requirements of the law that made no exception of the Sabbath (Ex. xxiii. 4, 5).

Vs. 4. With anger, being grieved. His anger was without passion or vindictiveness. It was the calm, white heat of holiness hating sin. But while He hated their sin, His tender heart was grieved at the hardness of their hearts. No verse in Scripture more completely describes the emotions of a holy, loving heart towards sin.

Hardness of their hearts, better, the hardening. It was a process going on. The convincing of their understanding, the silencing of their accusations, only embittered their hearts at the frustration of their plans. Those who ask that the evidences of religion be made plainer, overlook the part the heart plays in religion.

Stretch forth thy hand. The manner of the cure completely upsets all their plans. It was not unlawful for a man to stretch forth his hand, nor for another to tell him to do it. Do not let us overlook the faith of the man in making the effort, nor the illustration of Divine grace that always gives the power to do as we seek to obey the commands of the Gospel.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study the topic of the lesson in the light of God's Word:

Christ's Sabbath law.

1. The purpose of the Sabbath beneficent not burdensome.
   - In the beginning, Gen. ii. 3, "blessed."
   - To the Jews, Deut. v. 14, 15; Is. lviii. 13, 14.
   - So declared by Christ, Mark ii. 27.
2. Its obligation universal.
   - Originally for the whole world, Gen. ii. 1–3.
   - Lost by the rest of the world it is restored to the Jews, Ex. xx. 2, 8–11.
   - Restored to mankind by Christ, Mark ii. 27 (1st clause).
3. Its obligation perpetual.
   - The Decalogue still in force, Matt. xix. 17; Rom. xiii. 9.
   - (Both of these passages quote only the second table; but if one table is in force, the other must be.)
   - Christ came not to destroy, but to fulfil the law, Matt. v. 17.
   - The typical significance of the Sabbath is not yet fulfilled. Heb. iv. 3-9.
   - Christ has not repealed and no other can, Mark ii. 28.
4. The law defined by Christ.
   - The fourth commandment required (1) rest from our own work, (2) provision for the rest of our employes, and (3) of our beasts, in order that (4) it might be "kept holy," i. e., free for religious uses.
   - Jesus declares that its letter must not be be made superior to its spirit, but that works are permissible which are necessary:—
   - a. For our physical wants, Mark ii. 25,26.
   - b. For the exercise of humanity, Mark iii. 4; Matt. xii. 11, 12.
   - c. For the exercise of worship, Matt. xii. 5; Num. xxviii. 9, 10.
5. Changed to the first day of the week that the Resurrection might be commemorated instead of, or in addition to, Creation:
   - a. Christ's example.
     - On the Resurrection day, He appeared, to Mary Magdelene, John xx. 16; to other women, Matt. xxviii. 9; to Simon Peter, Luke xxiv. 34; to Cleopas and his companion, vss. 13–15; to the assembled disciples, vss. 33, 36; John xx. 19.
     - One week later, to the disciples assembled with Thomas, John xx. 26.
     - Seven weeks from the Resurrection He inaugurates the kingdom by the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, Lev. xxiii. 15, 16; Acts ii. 1-4, 41.
   - b. Apostolic usage.
     - The first day of the week, the day of worship, Acts xx. 7.
     - The day of religious offering, 1 Cor. xvi. 2.
     - Called "the Lord's day," Rev. i. 10.
     - The Apostles guided by the Spirit of Christ, John xvi. 13, 14; 1 Cor. ii. 16.
     - And endowed with His authority, Matt. xvi. 18; xviii. 18; 1 Cor. vii. 17.
   - c. The significance of the change.
     - The Resurrection Christ's rest, Heb. iv. 10.
     - Redemption a new creation, 2 Cor. v. 17.
     - Bringing in a richer inheritance, 1 Pet. i. 3, 4.
     - Looking to a nobler consummation, Rom. viii. 21–23.

Prize Questions.

We have omitted the new questions for the past two weeks so there will be no answers this week or next.

NEW QUESTIONS.

108. What is the motive for Sabbath desecration as defined by a text in one of the Minor Prophets?
109. How does the existence of this motive make State Sabbath laws necessary?
110. How are such laws consistent with religious liberty?

tion concerning Licensure was referred to a committee of three to report at the spring meeting.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood, was appointed to preach the next Presbyterial sermon on the "The Polity of the Presbyterian Church."

All the churches of Presbytery are directed hereafter to pay half the assessment for Presbyterial fund in the fall and the other half in the spring.

A mass meeting in the interests of Home Missions was held Friday evening.

Presbytery adjourned Friday evening and the brethren hastened home for Sunday, leaving only two to fill the various pulpits of the town on the Sabbath, and express in act the Presbytery's grateful sense of the royal entertainment given them by the good people of Rockingham.

RESOLUTIONS ON LICENSURE.

The clipping below was sent us by an esteemed correspondent with the request that we would publish; the name of the Presbytery was not mentioned; but we suppose that it was Louisiana, as it was said that Dr. Palmer was probably the author.

LICENSURE.

The following report on the overtures of the Assembly in regard to Licensure was adopted:

"In regard to the licensing of candidates for the ministry before they have completed their preparatory studies; also as to the proposed amendments to the Book of Church Order, sent down by the Assembly to the Presbyteries for their approval, this Presbytery records its disapproval of both, and earnestly protests against the whole movement, for the following reasons:

"1. Because it involves the vicious principle of legislating for a class—and this relatively a small class—and, in part, avowedly for the pecuniary benefits of the same.

"2. Because the proposed legislation is radical and revolutionary, contrary to all the usages of the past, and inviting to further aggressions upon the order and constitution of the Church.

"3. Because it obscures the evidence of a Divine call to the ministry, by removing one of its concurring elements—the final approval of the Presbytery being the connecting link between the conscience of the candidate and the judgment of God's people whom he shall serve.

"4. Because the doctrine of licensure for a limited time is foreign alike to the letter and spirit of our constitution; and by lowering its sanction will invite to its utter disregard by the laity, who may desire to usurp the function of a religious teacher.

"5. Because it is a concession to the untheologic spirit of the age, which discounts doctrinal instruction in favor of vapid and often unwholesome exhortation.

"6. Because its inevitable tendency will be to withdraw the attention of our candidates ftom the studies which they should pursue, in the antecedent preparation of sermons to be used in vacation—yielding in course of time an effete ministry which cannot cope with the errors of their day.

"7. This undue haste is rebuked by the example of our Lord, who was content to wait to His thirtieth year before His public ministry was begun. The underlying spirit in all of these movements of kindred impatience find its taproot in an Arminian conception of the Gospel, which always wants God to be in a hurry; and manifests a lack of confidence in the plans and purposes of Him with whom 'one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.'"

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Milton, N. C., Sept. 23rd, JOHN W., infant son of W. B. and Maggie S. Lewis.

"Another gem in the Savior's crown
And another soul in Heaven."
"AUNT NAN."

On 5th of Oct., 1894, at her home in Statesville, in her 59th year, Mrs. ISABELLA S. PARKS, wife of Mr. Andrew Parks. She was a life-long member of the Presbyterian church. A sincere Christian, a faithful wife and mother, and a patient sufferer has gone to that home where the inhabitant never says, "I am sick."

In Barbecue congregation, in Harnett county, N. C., on Sunday, the 7th inst., Dr. JOHN McCORMACK, aged 65 years. The Doctor had been in a precarious state of health for some time, but on the above date, he was seized at 9 a. m., with a violent attack of, probably, congestion of the lungs and expired at 12 o'clock m. Dr. McCormack was well and widely known, was a physician of note—and his death will be an irreparable loss. He was justly esteemed a skillful physician, and had the practice of a large scope of country—and the poor, whether able to pay for his services or not, enjoyed the benefits of his professional services.

The Dr. was deeply interested in all that pertained to the wellfare of his community, his county and his State. He was patriotic and public spirited. The death of such a man will be deeply and painfully felt in the community. He has for many years been a director of the Insane Asylum at Raleigh, has represented Harnett and Cumberland counties in the Legislature, and has held other places of honor and trust. He was an influential and useful member of Barbecue church, which with the entire community mourns his sudden and seemingly untimely death.

He leaves a widow and four children to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and an indulgent and affectionate father. McB.

Near Wade, Cumberland county, N. C., on the 4th inst., Major NEILL McDOUGALD, in his 82d year. The death of this aged and venerable man, was not a surprise to himself or his family and friends. His constitution once good, resisted for months the natural decay and infirmities of old age. But the Lord lead him gradually and gently down into the "valley," where mortality is swallowed up of life and "where the weary pilgrim is at rest."

In the death of Major McDougald, the Church and the community sustain no ordinary loss. He was a public spirited man, a man of true nobility of nature and character, a Christian gentleman—to know him was to esteem and love him. He was possessed of superior intellect, was decided in his convictions, and fearless in defence of what he believed to be right. Those who knew him well, appreciated his true friendship, and strong attachments. Faithful in every trust committed to him, his loss in these degenerate times, will be sorely felt.

These characteristics, made him, a staunch pillar in the Church—the Bluff, of which he was long a faithful and efficient officer. He loved the Presbyterian church, was always deeply interested in its wellfare, and his life-long devotion to her interest voiced the devout sentiment,

"I love Thy kingdom Lord,
The house of thine abode."

The Bluff church esteemed and loved him as one of her brightest ornaments and mourns his loss with deep and heartfelt sorrow.

McB.

In Memoriam.

Mrs. HARRIET RICE GREENLEE, relict of the late Jas. Greenlee, of "blessed memory," was born March 21st, 1820, at East Charlemont Map, and died at the old homestead in McDowell county, N. C., Sept. 22d, 1894. The funeral services, attended by a large concourse of weeping friends, were conducted by her pastor Rev. Wm. H. White, assisted by Rev. C. A. Munroe; who had also been her pastor in 1882 and 1883. At the early age of 12 years she gave her heart to Jesus and became a communing member of the Congregational church. But after moving to North Carolina, she joined the Presbyterian church, in which she continued a consistent, faithful and zealous member till she "passed away" She loved all the churches and people who love and "honor our Lord Jesus Christ even as they honor the Father."

Says one who knew her long and well, "I cannot remember her ever having done anything that would bring a blot to her Christian profession, and though she had many and peculiar trials, I never knew her faith or trust clouded even for a moment. I think her chief desire in life was to make others happy by leading them to Christ and doing them good. She was especially fond of children. Her heart went out to them even as the Master's did when He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me." And the little ones all loved her. Mrs. Greenlee was a highly educated and very intelligent lady. Teaching school—in which she was engaged for a number of years—was her great delight. She never failed to leave the imprint of Christian character upon the lives of her pupils and to inspire in them an earnest impulse for nobler and better things than this world can give. Many of those who came under her influence and sat at her feet years ago, are even now rising up and calling her blessed. After she ceased to teach school and became the mother of a family—she was still a great reader and always found time amid her domestic cares to keep up with the issues of the day, and with her clear perception and sound judgment, could easily discriminate between good and evil tendencies. While she was interested in all the benevolent objects of our Church—her heart was with the Foreign Mission work, and her largest contributions were made to this cause. In early life she proposed becoming a Foreign Missionary. But the Lord lead her into other paths. There were two traits in her Christian character, that "stood out in bold relief." One was her perfect sincerity. She was what she seemed. The other was her bright, sunny, cheerful, disposition at all times, in all places and under all circumstances. Her very presence encouraged the despondent, strengthened the weak and comforted the feeble minded. Her death was truly the death of the righteous. Calm, quiet, trustful,

"Not a wave of trouble rolled,
Across her peaceful breast."

One of her dying expressions was, "In Christ alone I trust." She lived to a good old age, having passed her "three-score years and ten." While she will be greatly missed in her community, yet her many friends and kindred are to be congratulated on having had for so long this "elect lady" as their friend, neighbor, relative, mother.

FOR THE FAMILY.

MY MOTHER'S SONG.

When the thrushes cease their singing, and the wild bees leave the clover;
When the glory of the sunset fades, and leaves the heavens pale;
When above the hill and mountains misty shades of twilight hover,
And the discords of the daytime far away in distance fail.

When the rath wheat gently rustles, and the timid aspens shiver,
And the west winds sighing softly scent from sleeping flowers bring;
When the peewitts cry together plaintively by brook and river—
Then it is that I hear the old song that my mother used to sing.

Round my neck I feel the pressure of her fingers warm and slender.
And in sleeping dreams and waking I have felt it many times,
Just as when of old I listened to that ditty, quaint and tender,
Till the boughs that waved above us caught the cadenee of the rhymes;

And my heart throbs loud and quickly as I hear it rising clearer,
Youth is mine, its hopes and visions, dreams and plans are mine again;
Earth is fairer, life is sweeter—ay, and heaven itself seems nearer
To me as I list in fancy to that ne'er forgotten strain.

Items for Lady Readers.

No name will shine with greater lustre in the annals of philanthropical work than that of Mrs. Susan Goodhue, who, after having rounded out threescore years and ten of active work in the cause of humanity, has decided to devote the remainder of her years to procuring the funds necessary to maintain a home for epileptics—poor sufferers who spend part of their lives as thoroughly rational individuals and the rest as though they were demented, and for whom no real place has ever been provided.

Knowing through personal contact the care and attention these persons require at times, and that such care could only be given in a hospital devoted to their particular disease, Mrs. Goodhue started on her praiseworthy mission a year ago last September, and received for her first subscription $2. By various entertainments the sum grew to $700, and in March of this year, through the efforts of Mrs. G. W. Dickinson, of Quincy street, who had ably seconded Mrs. Goodhue in her work, "A Home and Hospital of Epileptics for Epileptics of Brooklyn and New York" was incorporated. By Sept. 17th, a commodious house had been leased, and is now in running order under a competent board of managers, with Mrs. Dickinson as President. The Advisory Board includes many of the well-known clergymen of this city, and the medical staff is of both schools, and is composed of physicians who are interested in the study of the elusive disease.

As has been stated, the Home has at present three inmates, five whose applications are being considered, and fifteen applications in the name of charity have been made. It is in this direction that the board feels its limitation, as the income is inadequate, and until the hospital is self-supporting, through its inmates or endowments, the charity patients will of necessity be few. The first endowment is from Mrs. M. Rahm, one of the managers, and is $1,500. This will procure for her a life interest. She means to avail herself of the opportunity of placing her invalid son there.

It is desired by the managers that all the churches will co-operate in this enterprise, as the hospital is to be nonsectarian. It is the intention of the managers to render the institute a "home" in more than name, and every feasible plan which will be likely to promote the comfort of the inmates will be carried out. A number of young people have organized into a society of co-workers, and during the winter will provide entertainments to be given at the Home. The hospital is located in what was the old De Mill house, at No. 1038 Greene Avenue. At present this old-fashioned house, with its pleasant grounds, will answer admirably. But that is to serve as the beginning, and before many years the brave women hope to be managers of a home situated in the fresh, pure air, grounds large enough to permit of flower-raising or some other equally healthful industry which will interest the patients, and a building which will accommodate a large number of inmates, each with a separate room.—The World.

Old paint should be cleaned before repainting, with a solution of soda—two ounces dissolved in one quart of water—applied warm; rinse thoroughly with clear water.

Things Useful.

White Marble Cake.—Two cups of white sugar, one and a half cups of butter, one cup sweet milk, five cups of flour, the whites of seven eggs, one-half teaspoon of soda, and one teaspoon cream of tartar.

When a glass stopper sticks in the bottle pass a strip of woolen cloth round the neck of the vessel and see-saw it backward and forward. This friction heats and causes the neck to expand, so that the stopper becomes loose.

Furniture that mars the wall can be provided at small expense with rubber knobs at the back. Rubber tips drawn over hooks on which towels and other things are hung, save a deal of wear to the articles hung on them. Chairs that scratch the floor and make a noise can be booted with rubber.

Oyster salad is a favorite lunch dish. Put two dozen small oysters in enough boiling water to cover them, and cook them just a few moments, until the edges begin to curl. Add a little salt and a teaspoonful of vinegar, drain and cool them. Arrange the inner leaves of two crisp heads of lettuce in the salad bowl, turn the oysters into the center of the leaves and pour over them the following dressing: Take the yolks of three raw eggs, half a teaspoonful of mustard and a teaspoonful of salt. Beat these together until they begin to thicken; drop in oil until it is quite thick, and thin with vinegar.

A BAD WRECK

GEO. W. SWEENEY, ESQ., of Haydentown, Pa., says: "I was for years hardly able to go about. I suffered from liver and kidney trouble, six different Doctors treated me during that time but could do me no good. I give your "Medical Discovery" the praise for my cure. Then, too, my wife had a bad case of Asthma which was cured by the use of that wonderful blood-purifier."

HOW TWO LITTLE BOYS MADE MISSIONARY MONEY.

They carried around some Histories of Mrs. GRIER'S REAL HAIR RESTORER and showed their mother's testimonial. They easily sold a dozen bottles which made calls for more, and now they have cleared $5 and write: "Please send us two dozen this time, everybody is pleased with the Restorer."

The R. H. R. is a N. C. Ladies' enterprise. It is a clean, refreshing hair wash, that is endorsed by hundreds of North Carolinians as a perfect remedy for dandruff falling hair and unhealthy scalps. OCTOBER.

Come, come, my little blossoms,
You should be in your beds;
I mean to tie your nightcaps
Upon your sleepy heads.

'Tis no use to resist me,
For go to bed you must,
As in your eyes the "sandman"
Begins to throw his dust.

So saying, young October
The flowers we love best
Has soon tied up in nightcaps
For their long winter's rest.

A Boy's Suggestion.

About a year and a half ago a boy of sixteen conceived the plan of selling coal to the poor of the city of New York at cost. He was a thoughtful lad, and wished something could be done to alleviate the misery of the unfortunate. The plan he had formed, as we learn from the New York Sun, he carried to his father, who immediately adopted it.

"When will you do it, father?" asked the lad, eagerly.

"I will begin to-morrow," was the answer, "and you shall help me."

The gentleman, notwithstanding he was a busy man and a member of one of the busiest firms in New York, began his experiment by the sale of coal in two easily accessible places.

What had suggested this charity was the fact that the poor necessarily buy their coal in quantities of from twenty-five to a hundred pounds, and have to pay about three times its value.

The lad's father proposed to sell a scuttleful of coal, or twenty-five pounds, for very much less than the people were accustomed to pay—or at cost.

At first the poor, who, we are sorry to say, have some reasons for suspecting the rich of trying to make them poorer, were somewhat skeptical as to the meaning of this abatement of cost. From their experiences they know no reason why any man, especially a rich man, should bring tons of coal from the mines to New York to sell to them without gain to him.

They did not realize that the teachings of Christ, who lived nineteen hundred years ago, could persuade a New Yorker to forego a legitimate profit. He must make money from the sale somehow. By some shrewdness or trickery he was sure, at their expense, they thought, to make an addition to his riches.

But the boy who conceived the idea went to the yards day after day, and saw to it that first one poor man and then another received an honest twenty-five pounds of coal for his pittance of money. No slate or refuse in that coal. It was honest fuel.

Soon the wonderful story was told among the poor of the city, until it is said there were thousands of destitute families supplied daily.

But the lad's coal was sold even below cost. For it was bought to be delivered only on the dock in New York, and the merchant bore the cost of having it handled after that, until it got into the poor man's hod.

By this means he gave steady employment to about two hundred men, who otherwise would have been idle, and for whose labor the poor did not pay. That is charity with an emphasis. That is good will to men after the Master's own heart.

But what of the boy? Eager to see that his plan was fully carried out, he constantly went to the coal yards. In doing this he caught a serious cold which settled upon his lungs. Pneumonia followed and terminated fatally in a brief time. Why such a life, so full of promise, should be cut off when the world so greatly needs its Christlike influence, only God knows. Human reason is dumb before such a loss.

"Why not try bread at cost, father?" were among the last words of the dying lad.

To coal and bread the noble and bereaved merchant has added tea and coffee at cost. He has also opened lodging-houses, where a man can get a clean cot for the night, and bread and coffee for breakfast—all for five cents. This is below cost.

"At cost" is one of the mottoes of Christian service. Pecuniary gain is not considered when sincere men are working in partnership with Christ. And this man and this boy have exemplified it.—Youth's Companion.

Nellie's Gifts.

The following story was read to a great Sabbath-school missionary meeting in Broad Street church, Burlington, N. J., by a little girl, whose clear, sweet voice could be heard in every part of the room, and it thrilled every heart:

"Did you ever want anything awful bad and then have it come? Then you know how I felt when the package came from auntie in New York, and I opened it and found a pair of real silk mitts. Jack said they were just "splen-dor-if-ic," and Jack's my brother, and he knows. I had wanted some for ever so long, but I didn't say much about it, 'cause when you live in a little cuddled-up house, and your papa has to buy bread and shoes for so many, the money flies away before it gets around to what little girls want.

"I don't know how auntie found it out unless Santa Claus told her, and it wasn't near Christmas time, either. They were such pretty brown mitts. Tilly Jones said they were just the color of my hands, but I didn't care for that. Little hands will get brown when they weed the garden and do so many things. I looked at them 'most a hundred times in two days, I guess, and then it came Sunday. Wasn't I glad! I put them on and walked to church, just so. Jack said I held my paws like a scared rabbit, but I didn't ever see a rabbit with mitts on.

"It isn't right to think too much about what you wear when you go to Sabbath-school, and by and by I didn't, for we had such a good Sabbath-school I forgot everything else. A missionary man told all the folks about some poor children away off; how the fire had burned down their school house, and they hadn't any nice houses, or clothes, or anything, but they were trying so hard to get along and to learn; and he said what was given to those little ones was just the same as giving to Jesus. Think of that! Just the same as giving to the dear Christ Child! I just supposed everybody would give. Why, some of the folks are worth as much as ten dollars, or one hundred dollars, and yet that basket stayed 'most empty.

"I did wish I was rich, and all at once I remembered the poor widow in the Bible. I'd read it that very morning, how she had given her two mitts, every living mitt she had; it said so. So I slipped mine off and dropped them into the basket, and I was glad, if my throat did choke up. But pretty soon, when that basket was carried up, the gentleman picked them right out. "Has any little girl lost her gloves?" Nobody said anything, and he asked again: "Did any little girl drop her gloves in the basket by mistake?" It was awful still in that room and I thought he was looking right at me, so I had to say something. "It wasn't a mistake," I told him; "I wanted to help and hadn't any money, but I knew how the poor woman in the Bible gave her two mitts, and so—" Then those folks just shouted, they did! and I felt as if I'd like to drop right down through the floor.

"I knew I had made some dreadful blunder, but I couldn't see what, for if m-i-t-t-e-s don't spell mitts what does it spell? 'Course I cried, but my teacher put her arm around me and whispered, 'Never mind, little Nellie'; and she stood up and said, with her voice all trembling: 'Dear friends, this little girl has given her greatest treasure; have we older ones done as much?' Some way, the money just poured into the baskest after that, and the missionary looked gladder and gladder. They brought my mitts back to me, and my teacher said she would show me how to get some money to give. But O! how full that basket was! And when that gentleman counted it his eyes grew all wet, and he said softly, (though I didn't know what he meant,) 'A little child shall lead them.'"—Ram's Horn.

What Mother Left.

When mother died she left some things here, and they have made us rich.

Let me tell you, dear reader, what they were. She left her crutch here; for several years it helped her walk, but they don't have crutches in heaven. Think that out.

She could not see very well, and hence wore glasses—but she left them here. No use for eyehelpers there. No dim visions in heaven. Think of it.

She left her Bible here. It was her chart and compass on the sea of life. It brought her safe home to God. She has no need of it now. We little think of love letters when the lover is near by.

She left her property here. It would have made a poor showing there in the King's palace in the city of gold. What earthly use of carrying aught to heaven when homes are furnished free?

But, best of all, she left us the example of piety and prayer. I prefer it to a clean million.

What will you take with you, and what, leave here?—Young Men's Era.

An Old Ryhme Reset.

"Affliction sore long time she bore
Physicians were in vain."
At last one day, a friend did say,
"You'd soon be well again"

if you would take, as I did, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for that is the cure for all the peculiar ailments of women. It is a safe, simple and sure remedy. It banishes those distressing maladies that make woman's life a burden, curing all painful irregularities, uterine disorders, inflammations and ulceration, prolapsus and kindred weaknesses. As a nervine it cures nervous exhaustion, prostration, debility, relieves mental anxiety and hypochondria and induces refreshing sleep." She took the advice and is well. "Favorite Prescription" is the only remedy for the delicate derangements and weaknesses of females, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee of curing in every case, or money paid for it returned.

New Series Presbyterian Sabbath-School Papers.

Greatly Enlarged, Much Improved, New Features.

Beginning with the Fourth Quarter, the Presbyterian Committee of Publication are pleased to announce that their Sabbath-School Papers will be greatly enlarged, and so much improved that no publications of like character will be more helpful in themselves or handsome in appearance—their desire being to make them in all respects so superior that it will be to the advantage of all the Schools of the Southern Presbyterian Church to use them. They have added another Quarterly to their list of publications, and no doubt the Teachers of the Infant Class will welcome it—the PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

Notwithstanding the enlargement, the terms of subscription will remain the same as heretofore, enabling them to say that they are the cheapest publications published for the Sunday Schools of any denomination. Samples sent on application.

MODERATOR'S SERMON.

Preached by Rev. P. H. Hoge, D. D., before the Synod of North Carolina at Greensboro, October 23rd, 1894.

John 3: 29. "This my joy therefore is fulfilled."

The seaman as, after a weary, storm-tossed voyage, he drops anchor in his desired haven; the husbandman as he gathers in the bounteous harvest for which he has toiled and watched through anxious months; the bridegroom as the hand of his bride is placed in his, or as he leads her across the threshold of the home his love and labor has prepared; the father as he sees the child of many hopes and fears ripening into those qualities of mind and character that satisfy his own heart and command the respect of others; these, and all in situations like these, can appreciate and appropriate the sentiment of the words, "This my joy therefore is fulfilled." It is the language of accomplished purposes, of realized hopes, of satisfied desires, and of fulfilled aspirations.

And yet the words as we find them in the text are not the words of the successfull and prosperous, but are spoken by a man of waning popularity and of eclipsed fame; a man around whom the storm-clouds are beginning to lower, and who must already have had premonitions of his coming fate; a man whose young life, overflowing with zeal and power, was soon to languish in a prison until it ended in a bloody death at the whim of a profligate woman. It is he who says, "This my joy therefore is fulfilled."

Surely such a man has sounded the springs of human happiness deeper than most of us. Surely he has found a profounder philosophy of life than those whose spirits are filled with gladness or gloom, according as the sun of prosperity shines or the clouds of adversity darken the horizon. Like the calm depths of ocean, he has found a peace undisturbed by the ebb and flow of popular favor, or of the winds and waves of fickle fortune.

Is it possible for us to fathom his depths and learn with him the true secret of human happiness? Is there any one thing that we can find so satisfying, so sufficient, so complete in itself, that whatever else does or does not come, we can say, This my joy is fulfilled?

What was his joy—this joy of John the Baptist? The joy that filled his heart when listening thousands had ceased to throng his ministry, and trembling kings no more gave heed to his word? In its simple and fundamental element it was only this, or—shall we not say?—it was all of this: that he had done the work that God had given him to do.

Repeatedly he had declared that he was not the Christ, but was sent before Him; that he had come baptizing only that the Christ might be manifested unto Israel. If this was accomplished and all men came to Him, his work was finished and his joy fulfilled.

You will observe that it was not the reward or emoluments of the work—that constituted his joy.

No great preacher, perhaps, had less of these. His food was the coarsest, his clothing the roughest, his dwelling a cave or rude hut in the wilderness. Or if you think of those subtler rewards that appeal to the more refined sensibilities of our nature—the applause of the multitudes, the exultation of success, the consciousness of power and leadership—these, it is true, he had had. But it was just when they were slipping from him, just when he was learning their vanity, that he rises to this highest conception of his mission, and contemplates with fullest satisfaction its accomplishment. The joy was not here.

Nor was it in the greatness of the work he was called to do. It is true his work was great. Our Lord, Himself, testified that among them that were born of women there had not arisen a greater than John the Baptist. He tells us that he was not only a prophet but more than a prophet. The prophets had foretold His coming and shadowed forth His glories with type and symbol and poetic imagery. To John was given the distinguished honor of pointing with the finger and saying, "This is He." To him alone was it granted to single Him out from the multitude and say, "Behold the Lamb of God." And yet in a very true sense Jesus could say, "The least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." And to John himself, his work never appeared great. Though one of the greatest preachers that ever swayed the multitude with his voice, though the leader of one of the most widespred revivals and most far-reaching reformations in the history of the world, so near was he to that majestic figure that fills all the ages, so entranced was he with that Light to which he had come to bear witness, that his own light appeared but as the morning star losing itself in the brightness of the dawn of which it was the herald. "He must increase but I must decrease." Before the greatness of that One whose coming he proclaimed—the latchets of whose shoes he was not worthy to unloose—he is content to lose even personality, identity, and to declare himself but a voice—yet a voice fulfilling its mission and crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." When it has uttered its cry let the voice vanish into air; its mission accomplished—its joy fulfilled.

Nor, once more, was it the success of his work that constituted his joy. His work had, indeed, shown many of the characteristics of success. The whole nation had flocked to his preaching. Multitudes had been baptized, confessing their sins. Some of the most hardened classes had come to him asking, What must we do. The spiritual rulers had sent embassies to inquire as to his mission, and a corrupt and dissolute king had given hopeful promise of reformation. But before long it mus have appeared evident to John that the dream that had filled his soul—the dream of a thoroughly cleansed and prepared people waiting with eager hearts to welcome their King and His reign of righteousness—was not to be fulfilled. The rulers rejected his testimony; the mass of the people—when the nine-days wonder was over—relapsed into their former habits; corruption still reigned in high places and indifference in low; and when he pointed to the Messiah, instead of a universal acclaim of welcome, there were only some half-dozen young men of Galilee to whisper one to another, "We have found the Messiah!"

It is true that word was now brought to him of the Christ that "all men come to Him." But so far was that from appearing as the success of John's work that men were taunting him with it as the trumph of a successful rival. John was learning, more thoroughly perhaps than he had yet understood, that it is not great preaching that the world needs, so much as a great Saviour. And it was not by the success of his ministry in preparing the people to receive Christ, but by its failure, that the great need of such a Christ was shown. And it was yet further to appear that not by Israel's acceptance of their Messiah but by His rejection was the world's salvation to be accomplished. Yet, though he saw his cherished hopes disappointed and the fruits of his labors vanishing before his eyes, because he had done the work God had bidden him to do—done it simply, faithfully, fearlessly, he could say, "This my joy therefore is fulfilled."

The joy of the Christian minister, the joy of the Christian worker, the true joy of every Christian, is not in rewards or greatness or success, but just in finding and doing the work God gives us to do. When we see a man like the late Lord Shaftesbury, with a noble name, an exalted position and an ample fortune, making common cause with bootblacks and costermongers, and using the wealth God had given him for elevating humanity, promoting every good cause, and spreading through every land the blessings Christ came to give; every generous heart must rejoice that it pleased God to treat that man so, and sympathize with him in the joy of using for God the goods that God gave. But was his joy really different from that of Livingstone wearing out his life with starvation and fever and want of all things that he might blaze a pathway along which the heralds of the cross might bring the light of the gospel into the very heart of darkest Africa? Or of Paul, as he preached the gospel by day and made tents by night that ministering to his necessities by his own hands, no suspicion of worldly motives might mar his influence in godless and corrupt Corinth? "It is better for me to die," says he, "than that this glorying be made void." Or was it different from the joy of that widow who went without her dinner that she might cast in her farthing into the Lord's treasury? Or of the mother who conceals her own hunger that she may divide her last crust among her starving children? Our joy, like our life, consisteth not in the abundance of the things we possess.

Appreciation is very sweet to our hearts, and we sometimes think with envy of a ministry like that of Spurgeon that was always thronged with eager hearers, and that brought him in every mail, from all parts of the world, tokens of good will and expressions of cheer from grateful hearts whom he had comforted, or new-born souls that by voice or pen he had brought to the light. But was his joy esssetially different from that of the lonely watcher on some outpost, with no friendly eye to cheer, and no kindly voice to encourage, whose joy is just in the smile of Christ's approval that he stands in his place and does the work that there is none else to do? Think of Brainerd pouring out his soul for Christ in the wilderness, unknown and unrecognized, until, after his early death, Edwards gave forth his journal to the world; and thus Brainard became the father of Carey and the Baptist Missionary Society, and Carey of Judson and the American Board, and that in turn of all our denominational work and agencies. If the joy were in these external rewards, and not in the work itself, there would be hopeless loss to all those to whom appreciation comes only after they are dead, and whose work only begins to yield its fruit in after years.

Mankind gives a just homage to the truly great. It is a great thing to do a great work nobly. We look up with something akin to awe to a colossal figure like that of Luther, for instance, whom we may almost term the maker of this modern age. But as we contemplate the greatness of his work, shall we forget the pious peasant father who took him at his birth and dedicated him to God? Or the wise and devoted mother who carefully trained him in truth and honesty and the fear of God? Or Dame Ursula Cotta who took into her refined and genial home the pauper student singing for bread in the streets? Or old Mathesius who pointed him in his despair to the "forgiveness of sins?" When we look at the mighty river sweeping on in its resistless course, let us not forget the rills that have contributed their tiny currents to swell its volume and make its work possible.

No work done for God can be called small, and he will be most successful in great things that most closely imitates God Himself, who bestowes the same care upon the fashioning of a flower as upon the creation of a world. The doers of great things are rarely conscious of their greatness in the doing of them. When Peter preached the sermon that brought three thousand souls to Christ, he was probably conscious of the greatness of the crisis and by God's help rose to it. But was Andrew conscious of doing anything great when he found his own brother Simon and brought him to Jesus? Yet did not the little thing there include the great—include it as the acorn enfolds the oak? Our Lord was manifestly doing a great thing when he fed the multitudes with the five loaves. But did it appear to be anything great when the little lad gave his loaves to Jesus? Yet the Lord converted his little things into His own great things, and so made the lad a fellow-worker with Him and a sharer of His joy.

Mere ambition is always folly—the folly of noble minds, it may be—but still folly. For when you have gained all the greatness to which you can aspire, there will always be some "Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate" who poisons it all. But to the worker for God, it is not only folly, but supremest folly. For the sole condition of doing great things for God is that we should be emptied of self that we may be filled with Him, and he who spends his energies striving after ecclesiastical honor and influence, must inevitably have the mortification of seeing them come unsought to some humbler man who only tried to do his duty. "Seekest thou great things for thyself? Seek them not." Our joy is not fulfilled in occupying great places, but in filling the places that we do occupy.

But what of success? Success is always sweet to the natural heart. It is sweet, too, to the spiritual man when it comes as the seal of God's favor, and of His acceptance of our work. When success does not come, there should be diligent heart-searchings to see if any fault or failure of ours has hindered the free grace of God. But when our hands are clean and our hearts are pure, when we have honestly and conscientiously done our duty, our joy is not dependent on success. Success after all is a poor criterion, for so much that to us and to the world seems success to God appears failure, and so much of what in our eyes seems failure is in His sight success. The men before the Reformation saw their work end in failure. But was not the success of Luther and Calvin and Knox the success, also, of Wycliffe and Huss? When McKay laid down his life from African fever and Hannington's splendid young manhood was starved to death in a hut reeking with filth and vermin, they left Uganda torn with dissensions and desolated by civil war, and the enemies of the gospel were gloating over the failure of missions in one of its most promising fields. But now when Bishop Tucker—the successor of the noble Hannington—sees peace and order under a British pastorate; sees earnest congregations worshipping in God's house, and promising young men preparing for the holy ministry; when he sees the people buying the word of God faster than the Bible societies can send it, and the Roman Bishop giving them the New Testament—with notes—because they will have it, is not the success in which he rejoices, really the success of McKay's indomitable energy and consumate ability, and of Hannington's heroic endurance and devoted self-sacrifice? When John G. Paton looks at Tanna where he laid to rest the wife of his youth, where his own life had been in jeopardy a thousand times for Christ, and which after his years of prayer and toil and hardship he had at last to abandon; now that it has yielded its harvest to other hands, does he contemplate it with less joy than that with which he looks upon Aniwa which so soon returned him the fruits of his labors? No, the joy of the sower and the joy of the reaper is all one. The joy of him who lays the foundation and of him who brings forth the head-stone with shoutings in the same joy. It is the joy of work done for God. The only real success is just fitting into God's plan and doing the work He gives us to do.

Nor should it be forgotten that our mission is not always to work for God. It is a sublime thought when the Apostle speaks of our being workers together with God. But it is a thought to my mind more sublime when He tells us of the "fellowship of His sufferings." There are many sufferings that Christians endure as the chastisement for their sins. The bitter fruit of sin must be reaped, its bitter dregs drained, that sin may be made hateful and purged out of our hearts and lives. But there are other sufferings that God's saintliest ones are called upon to undergo not for their own sake, but for the sake of others. Bunyan is imprisoned that he may write Pilgrim's Progress; Baxter must be a chronic sufferer that he may write of the Saints' Everlasting Rest; Charlotte Elliott must lie on an invalid's couch that she may write the hymns that have cheered our hearts in pain, and comforted them in sorrow; Jennie Cassidy must suffer life-long pain that the well may learn how to care for the sick, and the sick may learn how to be useful and happy. Dorothea Dix, with life all bright before her, must lose her lover by insanity the the asylums of our land may be reformed. A young missionary must be cut down in his opening promise that the missionary zeal of his church may be aroused. A mother must lose her child that her husband may be brought to Christ. So in one way and another God's people fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ for His body's sake—the Church. And whenever a child of God thus suffers for others' good and blessing, he enters into closer fellowship with Christ, and experiences something of His joy when He sees the travail of His soul and is satisfied. This then is the secret of a happy life: to live contentedly in the place God puts us; to do cheerfully the work He gives; to bear meekly the trials He sends; and to wait patiently for the solution of any mysteries in His dealings with us.

"Serve God and be cheerful. Live nobly,
Do right and do good. Make the best
Of the gifts and the work put before you,
And to God, without fear, leave the rest."

That these considerations may be the practical rule and the sustaining power of our lives, we must recognize that God has some definite mission for us as individuals, and we must ascertain what that mission is. If we would be able to say "my joy," we must be able to say "my work." God's election does not deal with men as masses, but as individuals; and for every individual chosen in love, there is a definite providence ordering their lives, and a definite work set for them to do. There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will. And God has not left us without means for finding out His will. He may not appear to the eye of flesh. He may not speak to us with audible voice, nor lead us by a palpable hand. But His word reveals to us the principles of our action. His providence gives us the conditions under which these principles are to be applied, and His Holy Spirit, given in answer to prayer, will enable us to make the application according to His will. I do not believe that any man faithfully studies God's word and providence, conscientiously follows their leadings as far as he understands them, and with open heart comes to God asking for further light, that He does not receive it. And walking in that light he finds the peace and joy of doing God's will.

O HAPPY HOUSE.

O happy house! where Thou art loved the best,
Dear Friend and Saviour of our race,
Where never comes such welcomed, honored guest,
Where none can ever fill Thy place;
Where every heart goes forth to meet Thee,
Where every ear attends Thy word,
Where every lip with blessing greets Thee,
Where all are waiting on their Lord.

O happy house! where man and wife in heart,
In faith and hope are one,
That neither life nor death can ever part
The holy union here begun.
Where both are sharing one salvation,
And live before Thee, Lord, always,
In gladness or in tribulation,
In happy or in evil days.

O happy house! whose little ones are given
Early to Thee in love and prayer,
To Thee, their Friend, who from the heights of heaven,
Guards them with more than mother's care.
O happy house! where little voices
Their glad hosannas love to raise;
And childhood's lisping tongue rejoices
To bring new songs of love and praise.

O happy house! and happy servitude,
Where all alike one master own;
Where daily duty, in Thy strength pursued,
Is never hard nor toilsome known,
Where each one serves Thee, meek and lowly,
Whatever thine appointment be,
Till common tasks seem great and holy
When they are done as unto Thee.

O happy house! where Thou art not forgot,
Where joy is flowing full and free,
O happy house! where every wound is brought Physician, Comforter, to Thee;
Until at last, earth's day's work ended,
All meet Thee in that home above,
From whence Thou camest, where Thou hast ascended,
The heaven of glory and of love.

FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

[OFFICAL ABSTRACT.]

The Presbytery of Fayetteville met at Rockingham, October 16th, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. W. F. Thom, and constituted with prayer by the retiring moderator, Elder J M McIver. Sixteen ministers and thirty-three elders were present.

Organization: Rev J W Johnston was chosen moderator, and Rev W B Arrowood and Elder W J Currie, temporary clerks.

Visitors: Revs W B Doub, T A Guthrie, A D Betts and Rev N H D Wilson, of the M. E. Church, South, and Rev L Johnson, of the Missionary Baptist church, were invited to sit in the body as visiting brethren, and Rev J B Shearer, D D., of Concord Presbytery, as a corresponding member.

North Carolina Presbyterian: John McLaurin, Esq., one of the proprietors of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN: made an address in the interests of the paper. Addresses commending the paper and urging the importance of extending its circulation, were made also by Rev A J McKelway, Rev J A McMurray and Rev W B Arrowood.

To Organize a New Church: A commission, consisting of Rev A N Ferguson, Rev W B Arrowood, and Elders H McN Lytch and Hector McLean, was appointed to visit Aberdeen, Richmond county, and organize a church there, if the way be clear.

Church and Christian Education: The committee in charge of the work reported progress in raising the subscriptions of stock needed to reopen Floral College as a High School for girls, and the work was ordered to be continued. The officers of the churches of the Presbytery were urged to co-operate with the committee in the work; and the churches visited to secure subscriptions were directed to supply the pulpits of Rev Dr H G Hill, and Rev P R Law, while thus absent. The circular letter of the Trustees of Davidson College was ordered to be read by all the ministers of the Presbytery from their pulpits, and the institution commended to the prayers of the people.

Appointments: A committee was appointed to fix upon more equitable apportionments for the churches and to embrace all the benevolent objects contributed to excepting the Presbyterial Fund. The committee to do the work is Rev S M Rankin, Rev D D McBryde, Rev J S Black and Elders J A McAllister, and J C McCaskill.

Minutes of the Assembly: The overture of the Assembly to change the book with reference to ordination in the foreign field was approved. The overture with reference to a change of the Book of Church Order in the matter of Licensure was referred to a committee consisting of Rev P R Law, Rev H G Hill, D. D., and Elder P C Shaw to report at the next regular meeting.

Presbyterial Sermon: Rev W B Arrowood was appointed to preach the Presbyterial sermon at the next meeting on "The Polity of the Presbyterian Church."

Presbyterial Fund: The churches of the Presbytery were directed to pay one-half of their assessment to the Presbyterial Fund in the fall, and the other half in the spring. The treasurer was directed to correspond with the churches in arrears, to collect dues from those able to pay and to make a fair compromise with those feeble churches that are unable fully to meet their debt to the Fund.

Foreign Missions: An elaborate report on Foreign Missions was read, and adopted. It urged that wherever possible missionary societies be formed comprising the whole membership of a church, with different apartments, if need be, for men, women and children's work. The grouping of churches to support an individual missionary worker in the foreign field, was also recommended, and the safety of the workers in the distant lands commended to the prayers of the churches. Addresses were made on the subject by Candidate L L Little, Revs Dr J B Shearer, P R Law and W B Arrowood.

Ministerial Education: The report on Ministerial Education showed that there were nine names on the roll of candidates for the ministry. Three of them are students in Union Theological Seminary. Five of the candidates were recommended for pecuniary aid during the year. Four hundred and eighteen dollars were contributed to this cause during the past year. The ministers of the Presbytery were enjoined to urge the importance of liberal contributions to this cause in November.

Synodical Orphans' Home: The churches of the Presbytery were directed to appropriate the offerings made Thanksgiving day in November to the Orphans' Home; and sessions and Sabbath-school superintendents were urged to make regular monthly collections in Sabbath-schools for the Home.

Licensure: Candidate L L Little was licensed to preach the gospel as a probationer for the holy ministry.

Calls for Supplies: A call was made for the pastoral services of Rev M D McNeill for one-fourth of his time; one from Bluff church for the pastoral services of Rev A M Hassell for one-half his time; and calls from Ellerbe Springs, Pee Dee, and Wadesville churches, were made for the Pastoral services of Licentiate L L Little, and all the calls were found in order and placed in the hands of the brethren. Lumberton church was permitted to employ Rev D W Fox one-half his time on a salary of $400 a year, and McMillan's Chapel church, Rev A M Hassell for one Sabbath afternoon appointment a month on a salary of $50 a year.

Place of Next Meeting: Gulf, in Chatham county, was chosen as the place for the next regular meeting.

Colportage: The committee on Colportage was directed to employ a colporteur as soon as practicable. The two collections called for each year, one for the General Assembly's coloportage and the other for the Presbyterial colportage were emphasized.

Home Missions: A mass meeting in the interest of Home Missions was held. The report was read by the chairman of the committee in charge of the work, Rev H G Hill, D D., and received. Addresses were made on the subject by Rev A J McKelway, Rev J A McMurray, Rev P R Law and Rev H G Hill, D D. A collection was also made for the cause. The report was adopted. It showed that the support of four local evangelists had been supplemented by this fund, Revs W F Thom, K A McLeod, D W Fox and J A McMurray. Appropriations were made to supplement for the next year the salaries of Rev W F Thom, $50, and Rev J A McMurray, $525. The churches of the Presbytery were urged to raise $800 for the cause, the ensuing year. There was $41.82 in the treasury to the credit of this fund, October 1st, 1894. There will be due from this fund to local evangelists January 1st, 1894, $380.

The amount in the treasury to the credit of Synodical Home Missions October 1st, 1894, was $245.42. It was recommended that $900 or 12½ cents per communicant be raised for this cause in 1895. For the Assembly's Home Missions, $155.60 was raised to be sent the Assembly's treasurer.

For the Invalid Fund, $141.68 was contributed to be sent to the Assembly's treasurer. Only about two-thirds of the amount asked for from this fund has been paid for lack of funds. The following appropriations were recommended: To Rev J P McPherson, $60; Rev James McQueen's family, $75; Mr John H Boble's family, $50, making an aggregate of $185. The labors of candidates and local evangelists were shown to have been much blessed.

Orders for the supply of vacant churches were made as follows: Rev D Fairley, to supply Cypress church, with one Sabbath appointment a month, for six months, on a salary of $200 per annum. That Rev AM Hassel, supply Bethlehem, with one Sabbath a month, on a salary of $100 per annum. That Rev P R Law, supply Bethel church with one Sabbath and sacraments, and Rev D D McBryde, one Sabbath. That Rev A J McKelway supply Galatia church with one Sabbath, and Rev P R Law one Sabbath and sacraments. That Rev H G Hill, D D., supply Ashpole church with one Sabbath and sacraments, and Rev P R Law one Sabbath. That Rev P R Law supply Iona church one Sabbath and sacraments, and Rev H G Hill one Sabbath. That Rev W B Arrowood supply Lebanon with one Sabbath and sacraments, and Rev A N Ferguson one Sabbath. That Rev J W Johnston supply Shiloh church with one Saturday appointment a month, on terms agreeable to him. That Rev M N McIver supply Pittsboro church, with one Sabbath a month, for six months, on a salary of $100 per annum, and Marks Creek on a salary of $60, and Haywood, a Saturday appointment, on terms agreeable to him. That Rev A J McKelway, supply Sherwood with one Sabbath and sacraments, and Rev A M Hassel one Sabbath. That Rev W M Eldridge supply Union church one Sabbath a month on a salary of $550 per annum, and Cameron one Sabbath afternoon per month, on a salary of $100 per annum. That Rev D W Fox supply Rockingham church for a year, one Sabbath per month, on a salary of $200 per annum, and Lumberton church for two Sabbaths a month on a salary of $400.

Presbyterial Evangelist: A committee was appointed and clothed with full powers to raise the needed funds and employ and put in the field a Presbyterial evangelist at an early day as practicable. The committee consists of Rev A J McKelway and Rev P R Law, and Elders N Shaw, Dr J W McNeill and J M McIver.

Presbytery adjourned to meet during Synod at the call of the moderator.

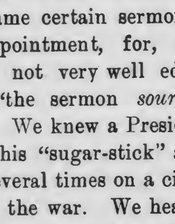
Repeating Sermons.

OUGHT PREACHERS TO TURN OVER THEIR BARREL OR BURN IT?



The scrupulous care with which ministers avoid repeating sermons, and parts of sermons, is not only unnecessary, but positively wrong, as it must keep in the background many of the most vital doctrines, while the lighter moral precepts are made the more common themes for pulpit discourse. The preacher is a teacher, and it is necessary to give line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, there a little. Repetition is a fundamental principle of teaching.—Greensboro Chirstian Advocate.

That is brand-new to us. If there was one thing we thought that preachers did, it was to repeat their sermons. When did the custom fail, grow into positive "innocuous desuetude?" Can it be true? Why, we knew of a Virginian who heard the very able Dr. Stephen Olin preach the same sermon three times in three successive years in three different cities in the North while spending a vacation. When asked why he did this, the wise theologue and preacher said: "Suppose you had several guns and you had one that never failed you, and you saw big game before you, which would you choose?" The reply was, "The certain one." The Doctor said, "I have many sermons, but the one you heard in three cities has never disappointed me, and to be sure, I took that one each time." But this was different from the experience as related to us of a plain, but excellent local preacher. He said he had tried to preach at a particular place and had met with gratifying success for him, and heard that his sermon had given marked satisfaction. Called upon at another place to preach and remembering his success on a former occasion he drew upon the same certain sermon, but with sad, disappointment, for, added the quaint and not very well educated expounder—"the sermon soured on my stomach." We knew a Presiding Elder to preach his "sugar-stick" all around, and even several times on a circuit. This was before the war. We heard one of the most gifted preachers we know of in North Carolina preach the same sermon to the same congregation, three times within two years, and this occurred within the last twenty years. So it is quite new to us that it has come to pass that, it is with "scrupulous care" that preachers avoid repeating sermons. As our long time friend Sam Weller, Jr., was wont to say, "to the contrary quite the reverse." Good sermons deserve repeating when they are original. We heard an intelligent Presbyterian of our city say soon after hearing Bishop Wilson's great sermon at the First Presbyterian church three years ago last summer, that he would willingly walk ten miles if he knew he could hear it repeated precisely as he had heard it that day. But have preachers really fallen into the bad habit of such fecundity as never to repeat sermons or parts of sermons? In truth our hearing is that the fine stereotyped passages, if there be such, are made to do much duty on many occasions. Can our hearing be at fault? Sam Jones, Mr. Pearson, Moody, McNeill, all the great evangelists have a series of discourses they repeat everywhere. Why not? They are good and useful and now and then effective.—Wilmington Messenger.

Good Advice.

The late George W. Childs, editor of the Philadelphia Ledger, was a remarkable man in his day and generation, and made a name and character and left an example before the world which it will be well for all young men to study and practice. He commenced life very poor, but made an immense fortune, and yet died with only a moderate competency for his family, having given away in charities hundreds of thousands more than he saved for himself. He would never accept political or official honors, though frequently tendered to him, and yet died with more honor and national reputation than the highest dignitary in the land of his time. He was a typical American, and his words are worth reading and his observations worth considering. Here are some of them: "I have always believed," said he, "that it is possible to unite success in business with strict moral integrity. I am aware that many people think that the ethics of business or of politics are quite distinct, and that a man may do things in his public employment which he will not think it right to do in his domestic or private life. I do not agree with this view, and if the record of my life has any value, it is in showing that at least it is not necessary to success in business that a man should indulge in 'sharp' practice. But even if it were necessary, still it would not follow that it is worth while. We cannot afford to do or say a mean thing. There are higher satisfactions than the mere getting of money, and riches cannot compensate a man for the consciousness of having lived a dishonorable and selfish life.

"Speaking of selfishness leads one to speak of generosity. I think the habit of generosity may be cultivated, like other habits. And I have felt that it is a great mistake to put off being generous until you are dead. In the first place, you lose the pleasure of witnessing the good that you may do; and, again, no one can administer your gifts for you as well as you can do it for yourself. It is a great pleasure to be brought into personal relations of that kind, and to make people feel that you are not a philanthropist in the abstract. But that you are interested in them personally, and care for their welfare. In that way you benefit them not merely in a natural way, but you make them feel that men are really brothers, and that they were made to help one another. Not only is that feeling agreeable in itself, but it will be apt to prompt them to carry out the principle themselves. Put yourself into all you do and let others feel that you are there. Do not only contribute to a charitable object, but go yourself and help. It may seem an inconvenience at first, but soon you will come to consider it worth any inconvenience."

Slow Poison.

"I don't believe smoking hurts any one," said Chauncey; "look at Uncle Frank, he has smoked for thirty-five years."

Yes, but you must acknowledge that he is not so strong as he used to be."

"Of course not; he is old enough to begin to show his age."

"Not seriously. Some men are still in their prime at his age. He is only fifty. Of course, he can not live forever, but he ought to be able to do good work still. His physician has told him repeatedly that the heart trouble to which he is subject is caused entirely by smoking. Have you never noticed how his hand trembles when he holds a cup of coffee? He acknowledges himself that his nervousness is due to the use of tobacco."

The men supposed to know best about such things are our doctors, and one of our best physicians says, after years of observation, "I am convinced that other things being equal, a man addicted to the use of tobacco is as old at fifty as he would otherwise be at sixty."

Has a man a right to shorten or impair his life any more than he has to commit suicide? One is a longer process than the other, but both are contrary to God's commands.—Ex.

In this country we are better prepared do what John Burns, the great labor leader in England, declares to be their method, namely: To revolutionize by reform rather than to reform by revolution. It is said that Carlyle "believed in a God who lived until the death of Oliver Cromwell;" we must believe in a God who, while he is not, as Napoleon declared, "always on the side of the strongest battalions," is himself not only the battalion, but the Old Guard, which not only never dies, but never surrenders.—Union Signal.

MAGAZINES.

McClure's Magazine: The November number of McClure's maganine will contain two attractive and interesting illustrations. A reproduction of the first painting of Napoleon, by the famous painter Greuze, forms the frontispiece and is, perhaps, the most remarkable of fifteen portraits of him in that magazine. The earliest likeness of Abraham Lincoln, from a daguerreotype is here published for the first time.

The North Carolina Medical Journal for October, Wilmington, N. C., $2.00 a year. This magazine contains much interesting and valuable matter, and original communications from Drs. Battle, Hyatt, Baruch and Lewis.

St. Nicholas for November comes to us attractively bound and filled with matter which will interest and delight the young folks. A Boy of the First Empire, by Eldridge S. Brooks is begun in this number. The Brownies Through the Union, "Locoed," and Queen Victoria's Dogs are among the many attractive features.

Conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge. Published by Century Co., New York. Price, $3 00 a year.

BOOKS.

Hymns of the Ages with Forms of Worship. The Presbyterian Committee of Publication sends us a prettily bound copy of Dr. Kerr's Hymn Book, containing also the Forms of Worship of our Revised Directory. Price not given. This is a useful combination and will, doubtless, be appreciated by many who now use other Books of Forms.

Dram Drinking in New England Sixty Years Ago.

Extract from Autobiographical Reminiscences of the late Rev. Horace D. Walker.

In 1825, when I was a boy of ten, at school in W——, Mass., a movement was inaugurated to improve the common. It lay in front of the church, and it was most rough and unsightly in appearance. The farmers came in from all directions one bright summer day with carts and implements, and school was dismissed that the boys might aid as they could in the good work.

The Center was fairly alive with busy workers when, at eleven o'clock, good old Parson Fisk issued from his house, fronting the common, in his well-known black study gown, carrying in one hand a good-sized tin pail, and in the other a small tin dipper. He moved about the busy throng followed by a layman with a wooden pail and a larger dipper.

All the workers, even boys as small and as young as myself, were invited by the parson to partake of the contents of his pail and welcomed by the layman to draughts from his bucket.

The parson carried new rum, the layman bore cold water. I remember how a taste from the parson's pail, ("fire-water" indeed, since it was neither weakened nor sweetened,) drove me in a hurry to the other pail to cool my poor tongue.

But there were many to whom the parson's rounds were very welcome. Just at twelve I saw one of the prominent young lawyers of the place staggering into his dooryard near the common. He led by the hand his little boy. Just within the gate the father fell utterly helpless in his intoxication.

But at four o'clock the parson went again his hospitable round. John Sullivan, the first Irishman I had ever seen, and whom I well knew, as his wife was employed at my boarding place, was particularly attentive to the parson's ministrations; so much so that he was very much affected by them. As his temper was quickened his legs were weakened, so that one of the Academy boys, whom he assailed, had no difficulty in knocking him down. The combat occurred in the cemetery, from which unsightly heaps of gravel were being taken to fill up hollows in the common. John gathered himself up in hot indignation, and went staggering off to the hearse house, the rear of which stood upon posts.

I saw his elbow thrown out as he turned the corner, and we heard the cry: "He is cutting his throat!" So I ran and looked under the house, where he had crawled. With a dull jackknife and an unsteady hand he was sawing away without much result upon the loose skin of his throat, while men were pulling him out by his heels.

Strange as it seems to-day, not a soul in all the crowd put together the sad fall of the lawyer, the attempted suicide of the Irishman and the parson's tin pail. Every one thought that the good man was doing just the proper and hospitable thing; for drunkenness was general and habitual.

In the vicinity of my home all the farmers whom I can recall, with two exceptions, drank to excess. The cellars were filled with hard, very hard cider, and a mug of it always mulled before the fire. It was the custom to serve grog to farm hands at eleven o'clock; and I remember the warm discussion that was provoked when Captain Mason proposed, it must have been in the thirties, to serve coffee to his men instead of liquor. It was prophesied that he could not get help to run the farm if he persisted, as he did, in his resolution to make the change.

Everybody went for his dram to Captain Paul's tavern, about two miles beyond Captain Mason's. "Little King," the dwarfish cobbler at the foot of the lane, used to travel daily this distance on his weak little legs, but usually he made the trip in the evening. One day some school-girls, neighbors' children, overtook him walking on all sides of the road. Thinking him ill, they took him by either arm to help him home; but they bitterly complained afterward that he had stepped on their best shoes.

One neighbor, an immensely corpulent man, used to be put nightly into his wagon at the tavern, to be delivered at home by his faithful horse. But one night he fell out of his wagon and the horse came home alone. His sons went for their missing parent with a stone drag.

When the great wave of total abstinence sentiment rolled over the country, one of the early agitators, Father Hunt, came to our house and made it his home while lecturing in the vicinity. He was a Virginian, slightly deformed, a man of singular eloquence, who, filled church and gallery wherever he went. He said that my son, then three weeks old, (this was in 1844), should sign the temperance pledge as his children had done. He had a little frame made at the village carpenter's, with a glass fitted at the village store; and he wrote out in his neat hand a pledge for the child that it would never touch what would "make drunk come, and to this I put my hand." Then he inked all the inside of the fat, chubby hand and pressed it upon the paper as a signature to the pledge which, yellow with age, in the original framing, still recalls the temperance agitator of '44.—Independent.

Religious Condition of France.

The will of the late Comte de Paris has one peculiarly striking passage. It is the work of a dying man, conscious that he was "preparing * * * to appear before the Sovereign Judge." He solemnly declares his belief that, if France is to be lifted up, she must become a Christian nation. That is "the last wish of an exile for the country, to which he recommends his children to remain always faithful and devoted." The condition of France as a Christian nation is bad. In spite of all her troubles, which have lasted for more than a century, she is neither Roman Catholic nor Protestant; so many of her men never so much as putting their foot inside a church, being mostly unbelievers. Great was her opportunity at one time. She was offered reformation in the time of Calvin, but neither king nor people would accept it, and the few thousands that did accept were massacred on St. Bartholomew's eve; and by the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes large numbers of the best of her people were forced to leave France forever.—Southern Churchman.

Business and Christ.

BISHOP A. G. HAYGOOD.

I have been asked: "Can business be conducted on strictly Christian principles?"

At first it took my breath. The answer came spontaneously:

"If not, then no business."

That many do not conduct their business on Christian principles is not in the discussion. Many do not keep any of the Ten Commandments they care to break, yet the decalogue abides with death in it for those who break it.

Christ said: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We can't be Christians and so much as keep out of hell on the plane of carnal living. But one can serve God and make an honest living, else the course of nature tends to chaos. Business rightly conducted is a "means of grace," else "we are of all men most miserable," obliged to work for a living for the body and at the same time destroy our souls—ourselves.

Will an infidel find one man who has carried on his business in harmony with the view of Christ, who has starved? Maybe others made more money, but money-getting is no proof that a man has succeeded in this world. Often it is proof of failure. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" That such a question should be asked is in itself terrifying. Have we come to this that a reasonable human being, can, for one moment, entertain such a question? One who seriously entertains it is well nigh gone; death is entered into him. No man is obliged to make money; all are obliged to do right. One can starve in Christian honor. He cannot die in a palace obtained by fraud and keep out of hell.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

Consecrated common-sense applied to aggressive business methods will insure the success of church work as certainly as of secular enterprises.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following change of address:

NORTH CAROLINA.

Red Spring:—Last spring our wide awake young pastor, Rev. S. M. Rankin and his wife, called as many of the children of the congregation together as would come, for the purpose of organizing them into a society. The object of which was to begin work for the orphans at Barium Springs. The plan put in practice then, was the giving, (by the pastor), of five cents to each child as a basis to work on, for six months, when a reckoning would be had; a neat Bible presented the child gaining the most money from the use of the five cents. And also a sermon would be preached to them on that day. The second Sabbath in October was set for the report and the sermon. On last Sabbath several little bright faces filled the front pews, but to the discomfort of old and young, all who had received the basis to work on were not present, which excluded the public announcement of the work and ways of working done by the little ones. Neither, under the circumstances, could the Bible be presented. But nothing hindered the sermon, which was timely, suggestive and highly instructive, from the text, "My little children let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." He emphasized the fact, that these children could do much for the betterment of this community and our country in the next generation, by giving heed to the teaching of this simple text, in loving God, because we are commanded to, and because He has done so much for us, and because of His perfectiveness in character, and to love one another, (everybody), and to speak evil of no one, but always speak for Christ at home or abroad.

J. McL.

Jonesboro:—The Rev. K. A. McLeod writes: "We have just returned from a delightful visit to Richmond, Va., that charming city 'Richmond on the James.' We took in 'The Exposition' which was an entire success and visited all the places of interest in that very interesting city. On our arrival home we were greeted by many friends. And our welcome was a double one. For we had been at home only about two hours when in came two large baskets containing many good things. 'Home, sweet home.'"

VIRGINIA.

Samuel Davies Church:—At our communion at Bethlehem on Sabbath, October 14th, six persons were announced, all from the Sabbath-school, as having been received on profession of faith since the previous communion.—Central Presbyterian.

Front Royal:—A protracted meeting at Front Royal, conducted by Rev. C. W. Stribling, resulted in six additions to the membership. (Ib.)

Mt. Carmel Church, Augusta County:—The session of the Mt. Carmel church, at a meeting held Sunday afternoon, October 14th, received twelve members on profession of their faith in Christ, ten of whom were baptized—the results of services conducted by the pastor the ten days preceding. (Ib.)

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rock Hill:—Rev. Alex. Sprunt, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Rock Hill, celebrated the second anniversary of his pastorate on Sunday, the 21st inst. The work accomplished in that time cannot but be gratifying to Mr. Sprunt. There have been ninety-two additions to the church in the two years, the total membership of the church being now 464. The church under Mr. Sprunt has greatly prospered.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rio Church:—Rev. F. M. Woods, D. D., Rev. C. N. Campbell, D. D., and Rev. E. E. Barclay, have been appointed a committee of Winchester to organize a church at Rio, W. Va., on October 28th, in Rev. Mr. Barclay's field.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. W. H. McLean:—Spent the summer in the Hampshire and Hardy counties' work in the mountains of West Va., and is now on Cheat River in extreme bounds of Winchester Presbytery. (Ib.)

Capon Bridge:—Rev. H. M. White, D. D., of Winchester, has been preaching for a week at Capon Bridge, W. Va. Three additions. (Ib.)

KENTUCKY.

Hebron and Beulah:—Mr. W. E. Beattie, of Louisville Seminary, supplied these churches during the past summer, in a very acceptable manner. He has returned to take his last session in the Seminary, but will supply Hebron twice a month for some time to come; and Mr. W. S. Sibley, of the middle year, will supply Beulah. These arrangements are made with the approval of the Home Mission Committee of Louisville Presbytery.—Christian Observer.

Marion Church:—Enjoyed a very precious communion service, the fifth Sunday of September, Rev. L. O. Spencer assisting and doing the preaching. Four were added to the church, making twenty-five since our last communion. After the sermon on Sunday, a congregational meeting was held, and a unanimous call given to Rev. W. H. Miley, who has been acting as stated supply, to become pastor. The installation will take place the fourth Sunday in October. This will be the first pastor this church has had in more than thirty years. (Ib.)

Missionary Day at the Seminary:—The Faculty of Louisville Seminary has set apart the first Thursday of each month for the study of topics pertaining to Home and Foreign Missions. (Ib.)

ALABAMA.

Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain:—It gives us pleasure to print the following minute from the proceedings of the Synodical Evangelistic Committee. Unlike some resolutions of this nature, we believe these to be entirely sincere and well deserved:

"The Committee of Evangelistic Labor have received, with unfeigned regret, the resignation of our superintendent, the Rev. W. E. McIlwain, to take effect August 15th, 1894. In accepting this resignation, we desire to record our high appreciation of the efficient service which he has rendered during his official connection with the committee. He has filled the office of superintendent with rare ability and fidelity. To his watchful care and devotion to the work entrusted to him is mainly due the signal success that has attended the labors of this Committee. Never at any time during the past two years and a half, notwithstanding the unparalleled depression in financial affairs, have we been without the necessary funds to carry on our work, and his faith, his enthusiasm, and his unselfish, untiring efforts, have never faltered in the fulfillment of the arduous task imposed upon him. As he retires from the position which he has so admirably filled, we desire to assure him of the esteem, the confidence, the love, and the prayers of the brethren in the Lord, who have been associated with him in this evangelistic movement in the Synod of Alabama."—Alabama Presbyterian.

TENNESSEE.

Memphis:—Rev. J. H. Lumpkin, of the Third church, Memphis, has just closed a successful meeting in his church. He began preaching two weeks before his quarterly communion. The first week he preached each night, and mostly to Christians, the second week he preached twice daily, morning and night, till Thursday, when he called in a brother pastor to take the night service off his hands. The people were quiet, earnest, thoughtful, praying. Results: On last Sunday at communion, fourteen united with the church on profession of faith. All but one grown, many were fathers or mothers. The interest was such that it was continued into the third week, till Wednesday night, with a number of other professions. The church is greatly encouraged, and pastor and people are rejoicing. Throughout the meeting, dependence was placed wholly on the preached Word, and prayer. Unto the great Head of the Church, be all the praise.

EDUCATION FOR THE MINISTRY—ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY.

As the time approaches, (November), for the annual collection for Education, I would remind the ministers, sessions and churches of the Presbytery, of the importance of giving prompt and earnest attention to the contributions and collections for that cause.

The facts are as follow touching aid promised to the candidates of Presbytery:

1. We are in arrears for last year to four of our candidates—the amount aggregating not less than fifty dollars.

2. We are under obligations to three candidates for the current scholastic year, to the amount at least of $175, and we will probably need $250. This latter sum should find its way into the presbyterial treasury by the first or middle of December. Many churches, (more than half), sent no contribution in behalf of this cause last year, which fact accounts for the present indebtedness to candidates. We do hope to hear a good account from them this time. If we have prayed the Lord of the Harvest to send forth laborers, and He has heard our prayers; surely our sincerity and gratitude will be attested by cheerfully giving of our means to the necessary equipment of the laborer. I do earnestly and particularly urge upon every minister in charge of a church, or churches, to attend to this important matter at once—and let the money, as soon as collected, be forwarded to I. [Continued from First Page.]

And that this philosophy of life may be more than a mere philosophy, that this joy in doing and suffering God's will may be more than a mere stoicism, we must look to God not merely as an absolute Sovereign, still less as a blind Fate, but as a loving, personal Father. The choice of our work is not the arbitrary decree of a despot, but the loving choice of a wise and tender Father, giving to every child the very best for his needs, and making all things work together for the highest good of each. And that we may thus know God as our Father we must know God in Jesus Christ; that we may know and understand the love that God hath for us, and that we may love Him who first loved us. It is only by a personal, passionate love for Christ, a love in which there mingles all that is best in our love for the human—gratitude to the deliverer, enthusiasm for the Hero, devotion to the friend—and all of which our hearts are capable in the worship of the Divine, that we can know the secret of all joy in service, of all exaltation in sacrifice. "I have but one passion," said Zinzendorf, "it is He, it is He." As Christ's love to the Father enabled Him to say, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me and to finish His work," so our love to Christ enables us to rejoice in His joy and glory, though our part may be toil and sacrifice, disappointment and failure. Ours is not the joy of the bridegroom—that is Christ's part. Our part, like John's, is that of the friend of the bridegroom which standeth and heareth him and rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice. To present the Church as a chaste bride to Christ; so to teach and preach Christ that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus; so to live in Christ that we may rejoice in whatever happens to us that is for the furtherance of the gospel; this is our work, and in this work is our joy fulfilled.

The Master stood in his garden,
Among the lilies fair,
Which his own right-hand had planted
And trained with tenderest care.

He looked at their snowy blossoms,
And marked, with observant eye,
That his flowers were sadly drooping,
For their leaves were parched and dry.

"My lilies need to be watered,"
The heavenly Master said.
"Wherein shall I draw it for them,
And raise each drooping head?"

Close to his feet on the pathway,
Empty and frail and small,
An earthen vessel was lying,
Which seemed of no use at all,

But the Master saw, and raised it
From the dust in which it lay,
And smiled as he gently whispered,
"This shall do my work to-day."

"It is but an earthen vessel,
But it lay so close to me.
It is small, but it is empty:
That is all it needs to be."

So to the fountain he took it,
And filled it full to the brim.
How glad was the earthern vessel
To be of some use to him!

He poured forth the living water
Over his lilies fair,
Until the vessel was empty,
And again he filled it there.

He watered the drooping lilies
Until they revived again;
And the Master saw with pleasure
That his labor had not been vain.

His own hand had drawn the water
Which refreshed the thirsty flowers;
But he used the earthen vessel
To convey the living showers.

And to itself it whispered,
As he laid it aside once more,
"Still will I lie in his pathway,
Just where I did before.

"Close would I keep to the Master,
Empty would I remain,
And perhaps some day he may use me
To water his flowers again."

NOTES FROM SYNOD.

Some days before leaving home, I asked an elder of the First church if he were going to Synod, and he answered, "I don't know; everybody will want to go to Greensboro." Accordingly I was not surprised to find the attendance larger than usual. The attractiveness of the place, the excellent railroad connections, and the charming weather all conspired to draw the delegates from their homes. The opening sermon, an admirable discourse which we gladly publish in place of the usual editorials, was preached by Dr. P. H. Hoge. The music was noticeably good. The large and well trained choir was supported by an organ and three violins; but the sound of the instruments was drowned by the grand swell of voices as they sang, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." It being my first attendance at the Synod of North Carolina, I was much impressed with the close attention to business. There were no long speeches and little warm debate, but all the routine business received close attention and was faithfully attended to. As we heard of the interesting debate in our sister Synod at Danville over the Removal of Union Seminary, a friend remarked "Our sessions are characterized by harmonious dullness." Rather would I say by a close attendance to business. This matter of changing the location of our Seminary was much talked of and excited great interest; but the report of the Directors was accepted as wise, which affirmed that the matter did not at this stage, call for Synodical action.

A matter of special interest and pleasure was the address of Rev. M. Soulier, from the Waldensian Colony in Burke county. This gentleman, in accurate and elegant English, which was rendered more attractive by his foreign accent, presented the Christian greetings of the Waldensian Synod, and then proceeded to speak of the colony under these three heads.

(1.) Why have we come here? (2.) What do we expect to do? (3.) Our present condition. From this interesting address it was gathered that the band, which was sent out, because of overcrowding population in the Vaudois valleys and attracted to our country by the love of religious and civil freedom, is in some present distress. A poor soil with new conditions of climate and farming, has resulted naturally in poor crops. A temperate, industrious, God-fearing people, they will soon adopt themselves to their new surrounding and become thrifty farmers. In the meantime let us help them as we have opportunity. There are fifty families in the colony, containing 218 persons.

It would be pleasant to write something about Union Seminary, Davidson College and the Assembly's Home and School, as they were presented to the Synod; but there is not room in this issue.

Alumnae of Augusta Female Seminary will be interested in a notice which appears in another column.

[For the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.]

TOO MANY CANDIDATES FOR THE MINISTRY.

The number of young men seeking the gospel ministry in our Church at the present time is unusually large. This fact itself awakens in the minds of many of our best people a doubt as to the motives of these young men. If the number were small no suspicion would rest upon them. But as that is not the case, must not many of them be seeking the priest's office that they may eat a piece of bread?

Now the writer proposes to show, from the history of this whole matter, that the Church ought to assume that these young men are really called of God, except in certain individual cases where the life of the candidates proves the contrary. The presumption is that they are truly called.

Twelve years ago there were more deaths in the ministry than licensures, and it was a mere matter of arithmetic as to when the Presbyterian Church would become extinct. Finally the Holy Ghost brought to the remembrance of the Church the words of the Lord Jesus, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth laborers into His harvest." This duty was urged upon the people through the religious press. Then the General Assembly, the Synods, the Presbyteries—all our Church courts—enjoined upon ministers and people the duty of praying the Lord to send us the much needed supply of ministers.

But they will not stop there. They knew it was not worth while to pray unless we put forth effort to secure the things we prayed for. And so pastors were enjoined to preach on this subject and set before the people the needs of the Church, and the claims of the Gospel ministry upon her consecrated men.

And so in all our pulpits, and in all our prayer-meetings, and at our family altar, the Lord was asked to send pastors, and evangelists, for perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the editying of the body of Christ. Now does not the command to pray the Lord of the harvest, imply that He will answer that prayer? Would we not therefore, unless we are unbelieving, expect a great number of candidates?

Again a wise man lays out no more work than he has hands to perform it. In our Church the number of preachers was altogether inadequate to the work to be done. Is it not certain then that God had the men ready to send when His people should ask for them? How do you answer these questions, "O ye of little faith?"

No, the wonder is that after twelve years praying, and working, and waiting, there are still so many vacant pulpits, so great destitution, and so few ministers to do the work of the Lord.

Let us receive gratefully the answers the Lord of the harvest has already given us, and continue our prayer for a still greater number of men to preach the gospel.

N. B. On the first Sabbath in November a collection will be taken to help those of our candidates who are not able to pay their own expenses in full to prepare themselves for the work to which God has called them.

THE OLD PATHS BY DR. McDONALD.

We publish with pleasure the following communication in regard to Dr. McDonald's useful work:

Mr. EDITOR:—In your issue of 13th October, you give a brief review of the "Old Paths," the book just published by the University Press, Nashville, Tenn., in which you make this statement, "It is to be regretted that the author should have incorporated his own views in the book with regard to tithing, as they have never been adopted by the Church."

May I be allowed to say I think you have done the anthor an injustice for this reason; He did not write as the mouth-piece for the Presbyterian Church, but he is arguing for the Old Paths. He believes as a multitude of others believe, that the tithe is one of the old paths. The binding obligation of the tithe law upon the Christian Church is an open question; one that has recently been ably discussed by the Presbyterian Church and a man can be a good Presbyterian and believe or not believe in the tithe law. The author of the Old Paths being a Protestant and not a Romanist, believes the Scriptures, and not the Church, to be the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

Therefore, I beg to differ with you when you say it is to be regretted that there is a chapter on the tithe in the book; that chapter is regarded by some as one of the best in the book.

ALMA LENOX.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D.C., Oct 24, 1894.

The Anti-Saloon League is working earnestly to reduce the number of saloons in Washington by preventing the granting of licenses for the year beginning November 1st, to those which have, during the present license year, violated the law, and by getting residents and property owners on squares upon which are saloons to sign protests against the renewing of their licenses. The new Excise Board, created by act of Congress at the last session, is composed of three well known citizens. They have promised that they would compel every applicant for a liquor license to comply with the law before he gets it. If they live up to that promise there will be a material reduction in the number of saloons, as it will shut out all those who have been convicted of violating the law, and the Anti-Saloon Leagues propose making it very unpleasant for them if they do not live up to it. The Anti-Saloon League is composed of men and women who believe that there should be no such thing in existence as a liquor saloon and that the only correct solution of the rum problem will be found in absolute prohibition, not only of the sale, but also of the manufacture of the accursed stuff, but so long as the law recognizes the saloon by licensing it they cannot prevent its existence, but they can and do lessen the evil done, by compelling the saloon keeper to comply, or at least to pretend to comply with the regulations imposed by law upon the conduct of his business. Up to this time the granting of licenses has been largely a matter of discretion with the authorities, but the new law is explicit and, it is hoped, will be stronger than the influence of the liquor interest, which is always exercised to its fullest extent in behalf of the keepers of law-breaking saloons. The work of the new Excise Board is being carefully watched, and it will soon be apparent whether its members can be intimidated or influenced by the rum power.

Quite a flutter was caused in financial circles by an official opinion given by Solicitor Reeve, of the Treasury Department, to the effect that counties could issue interest bearing bonds of small denominations, to be used as a circulating medium, without violating the banking laws of the United States, and that said bonds would not be liable to the Federal tax of 10 per cent imposed upon the currency of State banks. That opinion was partially submitted to the Attorney General for review, by Secretary Carlisle, and his opinion coincided with that of the Solicitor, that bonds might be issued by counties and used as money without violating Federal banking laws. Secretary Carlisle did not ask the Attorney General to pass upon the question as to whether such county bonds used as money would be liable to the 10 per cent tax, because he does not think there is any doubt about that tax being applicable to any form of money other than that issued by the United Stated government and the National Banks. The opinion of Solicitor Reeve was given in reply to a communication from the Commissioners of a Georgia county, who wished to issue bonds of small denomination to be used as money. Considerable alarm was felt when Solicitor Reeve's opinion was first made public, but since Secretary Carlisle so positively announced that bonds so used would have to pay the 10 per cent tax it has passed away, as that tax is, as it was intended to be, prohibitory.

The annual session of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society began here to-day, under the auspices of the Baltimore branch of the society, which includes the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and a portion of Delaware, and will continue one week. This evening the delegates and missionaries were given a public reception which was largely attended. Among the prominent strangers in attendance is Bishop Thoburn, of India, who will, it is expected, deliver an address before the close of the meetings. This society has eleven branches, covering the entire country, except the extreme Southern States, which are left to the Southern M. E. Church.

The Y. M. C. A., has inaugurated a social purity crusade, which, while it may not make as great a stir as that now being carried on in London, may yet be productive of much good. Rev. Dr. McKim, will preach three Sunday afternoon sermons on social reform, the first, on "Purity of the Body," was delivered last Sunday to a large and much interested audience. After the sermon pledge tickets of the White Cross Army were distributed for signatures and return. This pledge, which may not be familiar to all your readers, reads as follows: "I promise by the help of God, 1. To treat all women with respect and endeavor to protect them from wrong and degradation. 2. To endeavor to put down all indecent language and coarse jests. 3. To maintain the law of purity as equally binding on man and woman. 4. To endeavor to spread these principles among my companions and to help my younger brothers. 5. To use every possible means to fulfill the Commandment, 'Keep thyself pure.'" Do you know any young man, or old man, who would be injured by signing, and keeping that pledge?

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson VI.

Nov. 11th.—The Twelve Chosen.

(Mark iii. 6-19. Commit vss. 13–15.)

Golden Text. I have chosen you and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit.—John xv. 16.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. There is no break between this lesson and the last, the connecting link between the last lesson and the choice of the Twelve being included in the lesson itself. The parallel to the choice of the Twelve is found in Luke vi. 12–16. The list of the Apostles is also given in Matt. x. 1–4 and Acts i. 13.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson:

Opposition organized, vs. 6; withdrawal, vs. 7; increasing fame, vs. 7, 8; abundant works, vss. 10–12; withdrawal from the throng, vs. 9; goes up into the mountain, vs. 13; the call, setting apart and mission of the Twelve, vss. 13–15; their names, vss. 16–19.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 6. Pharisees and Herodians. The Pharisees having failed to convict Him of violation of the Mosaic law, sought alliance with the Herodians, hoping that they would be more successful in bringing him into conflict with the Roman power. These two parties were at opposite poles; the one were religious zealots hating the Roman yoke; the other cared nothing for religious questions and bowed their necks to Rome for the sake of office and patronage. See a similar combination in which the Saducees were included at the close of His life, Matt. xxii. 15-40.

Vs. 7. Withdrew himself, i. e., from Capernaum. Jesus did not spend His time contending with His enemies, but went to those who needed Him—or to the solitary places where those who sought could find.

Vss. 7, 8 Study with Map.

Vs. 9. Sometimes physical necessity demanded that He should withdraw from His friends as well as His enemies. With a boat in attendance he could easily reach a point that it would take the multitudes much longer to reach—going around by land. This would give Him a little respite.

Vss. 10-12. The many miracles explaining the thronging followers.

Vs. 13. A mountain. Tradition says it was the Horns of Hattin, called also, the The Mount of Beatitudes, from the beginning of the Sermon on the Mount that followed the choice of the Twelve. Luke tells us that He spent the night of His arrival there in prayer.

Called unto him whom he would. The apostles were not volunteers, but were selected. Compare the priests, Heb. v. 4. For notes on the mission and biographies of the Apostles see Fifth Step.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's word.

1, The Apostles.

Simon: With John the Baptist at Bethabara, John i. 28, 41; surnamed Peter, vs. 42; of Bethsaida, vs. 44; a fisherman, Luke v. 3; living in Capernaum, Luke iv. 31, 38; forsakes all for Christ, Luke v. 11; one of the innermost three, Mark v. 37; ix. 2; xiv. 33; his confession commended, Matt. xvi. 16, 17; his presumption rebuked, vss. 22, 23; his denial and repentance, Matt. xxvi. 69–75; special message from Jesus after the Resurrection, Mark xvi. 7; special vision of Christ, Luke xxiv. 34; "Lovest thou me," John xxi. 15–17; prophecy of his fate, vs. 18; sermon at Pentecost, Acts ii. 14 etc.; leadership in Jerusalem, Acts iii-v; visits Samaria, viii. 14; preaches to the Gentiles, x; is delivered from prison xii. 1-19; writes epistles from Babylon, 1 Pet. v. 13.

John. One of the first two to follow Jesus, John i. 37 (not named, but the whole story is evidently that of an eye witness); called with Peter, Luke v. 10; wants to call fire from heaven, Luke ix. 54; one of the three (see above): the beloved disciple, John xiii. 23; xix. 20, 24; at the trial, John xviii. 15; at the cross, xix. 26; takes the mother of Jesus, vs. 27; first at the sepulchre, xx. 2-8; fellow-worker with Peter, Acts iii. 1; viii. 14; author of fourth gospel, John xxi. 24; of three epistles, compare John xx. 31, with 1 John i. 3. Note similarity of three epistles with gospel in style, and unbroken testimony of early Church. Also wrote Revelation, Rev i. 4, 9.

James. See early biography of John; one of the three (see above); killed by Herod Agrippa I, Acts xii. 2,

Andrew. One of the first two disciples, John i. 37, 40; brings his brother to Jesus, vs. 41, 42; called with Peter, James and John, Mark i. 16; tells Jesus of lad with loaves, vi. 8, 9; with Philip brings Greeks to Jesus, John xii. 20–22.

Philip. Called by Jesus, John i. 43; of Bethsaida, vs. 44; finds Nathaniel, vss. 45, 46; Jesus asks his counsel, vi. 5; comes to Him about the Greeks, xii. 22; wants to see the Father, xiv. 8, 9.

Bartholomew. Identified with Nathaniel, as he is always mentioned with Philip in the first three gospels as Nathaniel is in the fourth. For his call and character, John i. 45–49. He is with the same group at the last, John xxi. 2. These six were the first called.

Matthew. Called, Matt. ix. 9; also named Levi, Mark ii. 14; a publican, Matt. x. 3; makes a feast for Jesus, Luke v. 29; author of first gospel—title and unbroken tradition.

Thomas. Despondent but faithful, John xi. 16; doubting xiv. 5; xx. 25; convinced, vs. 28; with the group of early disciples after the Resurrection, xxi. 2.

James. Son of Alphæus. Called "the less," to distinguish him from the son of Zebedee, Mark xv. 40. His mother's name was Mary, but he was not the Lord's brother.

Thaddæus. Also called Lebbæus, Matt. x. 3; and Judas, Luke vi. 16. His relation to James is not made certain by the expression of the original. Jude who wrote the epistle was the brother of James the Lord's brother. The Lord's brethren were not Apostles and did not believe on him during his life, John vii. 5. One remark of this Judas is recorded, John xiv. 22.

Simon, the Canaanite, also called Zelotes, probably having belonged to the sect of Zealots, Luke vi. 15.

Judas Iscariot. Iscariot means, Man of Kerioth, treasurer, John xiii. 29; dishonest, xii. 4–6; Betrays Jesus to the priests, xxii. 3, 4; for 30 pieces of silver, Matt. xxvi. 15; with a kiss, vss. 48, 49; his remorse, Matt. xxvii. 3, 4; and suicide, vs. 5; the fearful catastrophe (probaly from the breaking of the rope) Acts i. 18; his final doom, Acts i. 25.

2. The Apostolic Office.
   a. Its importance shown by the Lord's preparation for the choice, Luke vi. 12.
   b. The Training of the Twelve, vs. 14; Mark vi. 31; Mark iv. 34.
   c. Their mission.
      (1.) In common with other ministers—
      To preach. vs, 14; Matt. x 7; Acts vi. 4; Eph. iv. 11, 12.
      To bear rule in the Church, Matt. xviii. 18; 1 Tim. v. 17.
      (2.) In common with other inspired men—
      To preach and teach infallibly, John xvi. 37; 2 Tim. iii. 16.
      To work miracles in testimony of their Divine call, vs. 15, Luke x. 17; Mark xvi. 20; Heb. ii. 34.
      (3.) In common with other personal disciples of Christ—
      To be personal witnesses of the resurrection Acts i. 21, 22; 1 Cor. ix. 1.
      (4.) In distinction from all others—
      To exercise universally binding authority, Matt. xviii. 18; 1 Cor. vii. 17.
      To confer the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, Acts viii. 14–20; xix. 5; Rom. i. 11.

Sixth Step. The practical lesson is Christ's call to personal service and the preparation He gives for that service.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Draw out the reason for selecting the Twelve (a) to make His work permanent in the face of increasing opposition; (b) to concentrate His teaching on the most fitting, in view of the great crowds that thronged him. Gather biographical facts about the leading disciples, and bring out the essential characteristics of the office.

Prize Questions.

NEW QUESTIONS.

111. (a.) Who was the mother of Zebedee's children? (b.) Give an incident in her life.

112. What four men are called Apostles besides the original Twelve?

WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

The attention of church treasurers is called to the action of Presbytery ordering the Home Mission Committee to cancel its engagements if funds to pay its workers were not in hand by Nov. 15th. If you hold any money for Presbyterial Home Missions remit at once to John McLaurin, Treasurer.

PEYTON H. HOGE,
Chairman.

Important Notice!

The meeting of Wilmington Presbytery appointed for Wednesday, November 14th, is hereby for good and sufficient reasons postponed to Wednesday Nov. 21st, at 10 a. m.

PEYTON H. HOGE,
Moderator.

The Presbytery of Wilmington will hold an adjourned meeting in Richland, Onslow county, at 10 a. m., on Wednesday the 14th day of November next.

Evangelistic Work of Fayetteville Presbytery

Brethren of Fayetteville Presbytery:

A special committee was appointed at the last meeting to raise funds for putting an evangelist into the field. Nine charges in the Presbytery have pledged $650 towards his salary. The committee have a man in view who can go at once to work if $250 more is pledged, the money to be paid quarterly during the year.

And now if the ministers and elders who have not responded to the Presbytery's call, will at once canvass their congregations and secure subscriptions with the blessing of God, great good may be done. In the salvation of the perishing, the building up of feeble churches, and the opening of new fields.

We shall be glad to hear from the churches who wish the services of the evangelist at an early date. Address all communications to

Rev. A. J. MCKELWAY,
Fayetteville, N. C.,
Chairman of the Committee.

Tombeckbee Presbytery: Presbytery met at Louisville, Miss., Oct., 11th. There was a good attendance of elders—fourteen answering to the roll; eight ministers were present. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. D. L. Barr. Elder W. J. Stockett, of Okolona, graced the moderator's chair, and the Hon. S. L. Wilson kept the minutes. Rev. W. S. Jacobs was received from South Carolina Presbytery. He is enough like his father to be interested and to interest others in behalf of the orphans. The Columbus people are contemplating building an orphanage. The plan was approved by Presbytery, and Rev. J. E. Jones was chosen trustee for two years. At this meeting we had Rev. F. R. Graves, a most promising young minister, who remained with us as pastor at Aberdeen a year. He goes to Tampa, Fla.

Mr. W. H. Perkins was licensed to preach. Mr. Lamar Ferguson was taken under the care of Presbytery.

A new grouping of the churches was made by which it was hoped more would be supplied with preaching. The overtures from the General Assembly were referred to an "ad interim" committee. There will be an adjourned meeting at Columbus, Nov. 6th, 11 a. m. Presbytery will meet next spring at Newton.

Rev. J. E. Currie and Rev. Jas. Mecklin, D. D., were granted permission to labor in our bounds.

The name of Rev. Z. B. Graves was stricken from the roll.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Daughters of the Revolution of Wilmington, will erect a monument over the remains of Cornelius Harnett, the great Revolutionary patriot and leader, whose remains have, for more than a century past, rested in St. James' churchyard, Wilmington, marked only by a modest stone, now fast crumbling to decay.

Mr. T. C. Gower was drowned on Tuesday, the twenty-third inst., while bathing in the French Broad at his beautiful summer home in Transylvania county. Though seventy-three years, of age, he was still fond of swimming. The city of Greenville has lost its greatest benefactor.

A hailstorm of unusual severity, accompanied by much and very vivid lightning passed over Wilmington on the night of the 26th. The hailstones, some of which were as large as hen's eggs, made a terrific noise on the tin roof, and did some damage in breaking glass. The lightning burnt out the dynamo of the electric light plant, temporarily plunging the city into darkness.

Early last Saturday morning, fire was discovered in the Southern Railway freight warehouse at Asheville. Despite all efforts, the building was burned, together with four loaded cars and four shanty cars. All the freight in the building and every record were totally destroyed. The loss is estimated at $80,000, but is fully insured.

The body of an unknown white man was discovered, about three miles south of Kenly, on the 27th inst. It is supposed to be that of J. A. Ward, of Columbia, S. C.

The North-bound and South-bound mail-trains collided at Henderson, on the 27th. Both engines were damaged and several persons hurt, but not seriously. Had it occurred three minutes earlier, results would have been very serious.

DOMESTIC.

A horrible holocaust occurred at Seattle, Washington, on the morning of the 27th. The West Street hotel burnt, and at least sixteen inmates perished.

Col. Bacheldor, of the War Department, is anxious for all the Southern States to mark the position of their troops at Gettysburg.

A New York photographer has sued the Chicago Blade for $275,000, for publishing a portrait of which he held the copyright. The amount of damages is reckoned at rate of one dollar a copy.

The most disastrous prairie fires in the annals of the State have been raging in Nebraska during the past week. Hundreds of thousands of heads of cattle are supposed to have been burned. The flames traveled westward, fanned by a wind blowing at the rate of seventy miles an hour.

On the twenty-fifth inst., a crank named Richard Goerdeler, called at the house of Dr. Bryant in New York, and requested to see President Cleveland, who was staying there. He was refused admittance. Great excitement was aroused in New York by a rumor that he had made an attempt to assassinate the President. Goerdeler is the same crank who, some years ago, wrote to Emperor William of Germany challenging him to a duel.

The safety deposit vaults of Omaha National Bank have been robbed so dextrously that no clue as to the manner in which it was done is as yet obtainable. Large sums of money have been stolen, but the exact amount cannot be known until all have been examined. All deposits are guaranteed by the bank.

President Cleveland's attitude in the New York campaign, is as yet discreetly concealed. He will not register or vote in New York as stated. He has no legal residence in that State.

FOREIGN.

The latest reports from the Eastern war report the Japanese to have been again victorious, and to have put to flight 3,500 Chinese troops. The Japanese columnns are said to be closing in on the Chinese positions in an effort to capture Moukden by November 3rd, the Mikado's birthday.

It is stated that the universities of Oxford and Cambridge will confer honorary degrees upon the United States Ambassador, Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, when he returns to London from the United States.

The Chinese prisoners, captured by Japan, express themselves as delighted with their treatment, and not at all anxious to get back to China. They have not the faintest conception of patriotism, but declare that they entered the Chinese army for the pay promised them, and which, according to their contract, still runs on even when they are in captivity. They beg their guards to request the Japanese government to see that China pays them regularly, and pays all their back salary.

The hotel Normandie in Montreal burned last week. There were a large number of guests in the hotel and nearly all of them had to be taken out through the windows. The smoke was so dense that nearly a score were rescued in an unconscious condition. Four lives were lost.

Lord Roseberry in a recent address at Sheffield, paid a glowing tribute to the Czar. He said, "We had in him a monarch whose watchword, whose reign and whose character had been a worship of truth and peace." He said that his death would be the removal of one of the greatest, perhaps the greatest, guarantee of peace in the world.

A flower in the bud, living only two months and three weeks, but long enough to unfold a tender beauty and sweetness which are the treasures of household love. Now transferred into the heavenly household it ripens fast into immortal life and beauty. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." J.

Of apoplexy, about 1 o'clock a. m., on the 15th inst., Mrs. SALLIE PURDIE, relict of the late J. W. Purdie, deceased. The call was sudden, but she was ready. Her last work was to hear her Sabbath-school class. Full of life, active, energetic, enthusiastic, foremost for every good work, oh we will miss, sadly miss her! Beth Car church is in mourning, but our loss is her eternal gain.

PASTOR.

At his home, near Sanford, N. C., on October 23d, 1894, in the 61st year of his age, Mr. MATTHEW HENRY MCIVER, who was, in his early life, a ruling elder in Carthage church, and in his latter years for quite a long period of time—perhaps for twenty years or more, a ruling elder in Buffalo church. May God comfort his bereaved wife and children. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

PASTOR.

Our community was greatly shocked on the morning of the 26th of September, to hear of the death of WARNER MERIWETHER WATKINS, in his 52nd year. Mr. Watkins had a stroke of paralysis, a few days before, he never rallied, but passed gently away as a child in sleep. Mr. Watkins was born in Milton, lived here all his life; he was early trained to business by his father, one of the strictest and most successful men in business. His father dying in 1869, he, with his brother Charles, now of Richmond, Va., formed a copartnership, known as W. M. and C. Watkins, and since have been largely engaged in merchandise, also dealers in leaf tobacco. They were the largest buyers in this market, as well as the most extensive merchants. In the death of Mr. Watkins, our community has sustained a great loss, and we know not who will fill it. Mr. Watkins was eminently a good man. No one ever came to him and went away empty. Truly it can be said of him, his "left hand knew not what his right hand did." He was always ready both with counsel and his ample means, to help young men to educate themselves, or start them in business. Especially will the poor miss his charities. Mr. Watkins was a child of the Covenant. He delighted in the study of the Bible, engaged much in prayer, his family altar was not neglected. A kind, loving husband, a very indulgent father, a thoughtful, dutiful son, truly it can be said "a good man has gone from us," we earnestly trust to a happier rest. The writer has known him all his life.

Resolutions of Respect.

At a meeting of the session of the Presbyrian church of Oxford, N. C., the following report of a committee appointed to prepare a minute, relative to the death of Elder D. S. OSBORN, was adopted:

D. S. Osborn was born July 8th, 1817, and died in Oxford, Aug. 3d, 1894. In the year 1867, he was made an elder in the Oxford church, and continued in the active duties of that office until his death.

Resolved 1st. That we record, with deepest sorrow, the death of our late brother and associate in the eldership of this church.

2d. That nevertheless, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him, who doeth all things well, by whom, our brother has been taken from us.

3d. That in his death, our church has lost a most earnest and consistent member, and an efficient, consecrated officer who was ever ready, with means, and his life, to do anything for its advancement. And, in him, our community has lost a most benevolent, godly and exemplary man.

4th. That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved ones who are left behind, and commend them to the God of all grace, comfort and peace.

5th. That this minute be spread in the records of the church, and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, also to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN and the Public Ledger for publication.

FOR THE FAMILY.

FATHER'S CHILD.

My little girl to-night with childish glee,
Although her months had numbered not two score,
Escaped her nurse, and at my study door,
With tiny fingers rapping, spoke to me;
Though faint her words, I heard them tremblingly
Fall from her lips, as if the darkness bore
Its weight upon her. "Father's child." No more
I waited for, but straightway willingly
I brought the sweet intruder into light
With happy laughter. Even so some night,
When, from the nursing earth escaped and free,
My soul shall try in her first infant flight
To seek God's chamber, these two words shall be Those that will make him ope his door to me.

The Boy Problem.

"What shall we do with our boys?" seems to be a greater problem nowadays than "What shall be done with our girls?" The latter have been falling into the line of progress in a remarkably fetching manner of late years and making a place and name for themselves in spite of sex limitations. This encroachment on the field of hitherto exclusive masculine rights by zealous feminine workers has had the effect of throwing the searchlight upon masculine capabilities and alleged superiority and revealing the absence of certain merits whose presence was never questioned in times gone by. Progress has made competition greater and has not reimbursed the srronger sex in any special line of qualifications. The fruit that hangs low in the vineyard is just as often gathered by our girls as by our boys nowadays, and the keeper of the vineyard does avow now and then that the girls are favored workers because certain little feminine eccentricities of thrift and reliability are called into active service and have a recognized monetary value.

The problem of the boy always devolves upon the boy's mother. It is to no ordinary hand that falls the successful rockings and spankings of future Presidents. Men are what women make them and the mother is the one who has the first chance. That mothers are inefficient goes without saying. Her prevailing derelections are not discoverable in the nursery. Mothers are patient and self-sacrificing to a fault. We all know the right kind of a boy's mother. We know her foolish, righteous pride in the youthful scion as she watches him kick his assertive heels through the lace and dimity dear to her feminine heart and with maternal thrills discovers little traits of masculinity in his nature daily. As he grows older she readjusts herself constantly to his needs. All the world knows that no one has much use for a boy but a boy's mother.

Ah—you mothers—you know how it is and your tolerance never becomes exhausted. Do you know a boy who whistles and whoops till your ears ring? Does he bring in mud and dust? Does he go on your errands and forget to return? Does he leave his marbles on the floor—that roll—and roll when you sweep, while you pursue them in weariness and despair? Does he spill the ink and slide down the banister, and does he leave tops and wire in your .work-basket and chocolate-coffee in your machine-drawer? Does he hide his toy pistol in your dining-room clock and sit in the house with his hat on? What does he not do to provoke your tolerance, and what all do you do besides making for him cookies, and tarts, and trousers, and turn-overs, paper hats and kites? Later on you post yourself on fractions and cube root, and then the first thing you know he knows more than you do and is ready to kick over the traces.

The probabilities are that the tolerance of mothers has a good deal to do with certain erroneous ideas that spring in the masculine breast early in life. The girls of the family are brought up with some notion of responsibility and with a capacity for adjusting themselves to the vicissitudes of domestic living. Responsibility, in whatever direction, is developing to character. Feminine unselfishness and devotion which demands nothing in return is a force which militates against the success of the boy at home. The mother is frequently inadequate to counteract by her own influence the questionable forces that dominate the outside world. This point must be always for consideration. As the boys and girls of the present generation come up, the returns are not quite up to the demand. The girls' chins are growing stronger and the boys' chins correspondingly weaker. This fact should afford something for mothers to think about. Men are what women make them.

Sacred Music.

These words of the lamented singer, P. P. Bliss, are as appropriate to-day as when they were uttered by him: "That which ought to have the greatest emphasis just now in regard to sacred music is the need of greater reverence. While a song is being sung, people will pass up a church aisle or a Sunday-school aisle, whisper to each other, move about the room, distribute or collect library books, put on overcoats (if it is a closing song), do a score of things that one would never think of doing during any other kind of prayer. When we are offering praise or prayer to God, whether in meter or without it, a reverence of manner and of spirit should accompany it. Another thing to be enforced, kindred to that we have mentioned, is a greater thoughtfulness of the real meaning of the words we sing. Are they the words of prayer? Of praise? Let an appropriate thought, as well as melody, accompany them. Let songs sometimes be explained or developed, as a Sunday-school lesson would be, to show the fullness of thought and meaning."

Things Useful.

A little flour dredged over a cake before icing it will keep the icing from spreading and running off.

After a room has been newly papered there should be ample opportunity given the paper to dry upon the walls before a fire is built in the apartment.

To Make Pastry Brown.—Sweet milk rubbed on the surface of any pastry, before baking, such as biscuit, gems, shortcakes, or even pastry for fruit pies, will make them brown nicely and give them a flaky appearance.

Sandpaper old walnut frames and give them two coats of enamel or two of stain and one of varnish. If you wish to make a dark wood frame white give it first a coat of common white paint, then three of cream enamel.

Maryland Biscuit: One quart of flour, one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonsful of lard worked into the flour; moisten with sufficient water to make a very stiff dough; work it well, then lay it on a board and pound it until it is smooth and soft, and until the dough cracks as you work it; make into small, flat biscuits, lay them in a pan and bake in a moderate oven. Serve cold.

HOW THE WIND HELPED.

The earth was needing a carpet new,
So she thought, in a moment of doubt,
With a frown on her forehead broad,
Of turning hers wrong side out:

The trees were all shaken with laughing
As they heard this most excellent plan;
They whispered together behind their leaves,
As a lady behind her fan.

The wind, overhearing the matter,
Thought quick of a punishment just;
So shook the trees with angry strength,
Till the leaves fell down like dust.

So the wind gave the earth its carpet,
From the trees, that were shaken with cold
Its colors were green and crimson,
Picked out with the brightest gold.

The Skeptic and the Italian Girl.

She sat behind her neatly arranged fruitstand—a girl of fourteen—absorbed in reading her Bible. She did not hear the footsteps of a gentleman who was passing by; and was startled by this question, "What are you reading that interests you so much?"

She timidly replied, "The Word of God, sir."

"Who told you that the Bible is the Word of God?" he inquired.

"God told me Himself," she replied, with childlike innocence.

"God told you! Impossible! How did He tell you? You have never seen Him, nor talked with him. How then could He tell you that the Bible is His Word?"

For a few seconds the girl seemed confused and was silent. The man, who was a skeptic, and took delight in undermining the faith of people in the Scriptures, felt confident that he had confounded the simple-hearted girl. She soon recovered herself, and her ready wit came to her aid. There was a flash in her dark eyes as she asked; "Sir, who told you there is a sun yonder in the blue sky above us?"

"Who told me?" said the man, smiling somewhat contemptuously, for he fancied that the girl was trying to hide her ignorance under an irrelevant question. "Who told me? Nobody; I don't need to be told. The sun tells this about itself. It warms me, and I love its light. That is telling enough."

"Sir," cried the girl, with intense earnestness, as she stood before him with clasped hands, "you have put it right for both Bible and sun. That is the way God tells me this is His book. I read it, and it warms my heart and gives me light. I love its light, and no one but God can give such light and warmth through the pages of a book. It must be His. I don't want more telling, that's telling enough, sir. As sure as the sun is in heaven, so sure is God shining through this book."

The skeptic was abashed. The earnest faith of the young fruit-seller amazed him. He could adroitly insinuate doubts into the minds of those who had only given an intellectual assent to the truth that the Bible is God's book, but the girl's heart-experience of the power of God's Word was an evidence he could not shake.—Messiah's Herald.

Brave Girls.

Prudence and Endurance Place were twin sisters, who lived in the Cochecho Valley nearly two hundred years ago. At that time the country from Portsmouth to Ossipee was an unbroken wilderness, and settlers were few in the beautiful valley.

The Place family lived in a log house in a small clearing. Indians occasionally called at the house, but Mr Place treated them courteously, and never sent them away empty-handed.

When Prudence and Endurance were fourteen years of age, Mr. and Mrs. Place, with the younger children, went on a visit to Portsmouth, leaving the twins to keep house. During the first day of their home-keeping, the girls gathered the big yellow pumpkins from the field, and laid them in a pile near the back door.

While resting from their labor, they amused themselves by cutting two hideous jack-o'lanterns from large pumpkins, each seeking to out-do the other in carving the grotesque features. They stuck them on poles, fixed the candles inside, and made ready to astonish their father on his return by showing the grinning ogres at the window. He would know what they were, for he had taught them to make jack-o'lanterns.

While Endurance prepared the simple supper and set the house to rights for the night, Prudence went out to drive home the cow and sheep. She had to go farther than she expected, and as she came near a brook she was startled to see three Indians on the other side, talking earnestly, gesticulating, and pointing now and then toward the log house in the clearing.

Prudence was alarmed by their suspicious conduct. Turning back, unseen by them, she fled homeward, and told her sister what she had seen.

"They've found out father and mother are gone away, an' they're coming here to steal, an' p'r'aps kill us," they said to each other.

For a minute the frightened girls knew not what to do. The jack-o'lanterns were lying in a corner of the room; and like an inspiration it came to Endurance that with these horribly grinning faces they could scare away the Indians. Quickly they decided what to do. Near the back door was a pit, dug for storing potatoes, and now covered with boards and brush. Taking their jack o'-lanterns, they scrambled into the pit and concealed the entrance cleverly by drawing the boards and brush into place.

After what seemed hours of waiting and listening, the girls heard stealthy steps about the house, which was in total darkness. Listening intently, they heard the Indians in the garden, evidently searching for them.

Now was the moment for action. The candles were lighted in the jack-o'lanterns, and they were thrust up through the brush. The Indians caught a glimpse of the frightful faces, and, filled with superstitious terror, fled, believing they had seen devils.

In the morning, when Prudence and Endurance ventured forth from their concealment, they found in the garden path a tomahawk and three eagle's feathers.

The spot was ever afterwards regarded with superstitious awe by the Indians, not one of whom was ever known to approach the log house of the Places—Portland Transcript.

St. Martin.

There is a pretty story about a soldier named Martin. One cold night Martin had to walk up and down outside the tents for half the night. The wind blew hard, and Martin drew his cloak around him and shivered. Presently a voice spoke to him, "I am dying of cold and hunger. Give me gold or I perish."

The soldier looked at the shivering form beside him and pitied him; but he had no gold to give.

"I am freezing," pleaded the beggar. "My rags will not cover me."

Martin stopped on his march up and down. He had nothing to give, and he could not leave his post to find anything. A blast of wind blew out the folds of his long cloak. Martin shivered and drew it closer about him.

"I have no cloak and you have one," moaned the poor beggar, as he turned away.

"Wait," cried Martin; and pulling off his cloak, he took his sword and cut it through the middle from top to bottom. "Half for you and half for me," he said. "Take this in the name of Christ."

The beggar thanked him and went away. At last Martin went to his tent to sleep. He drew the blanket around him, and in his slumber he had a wondrous dream. A wonderful form approached the bed and said, "Martin, you gave your cloak to a beggar. I was that beggar. I was rich, but for your sake I became poor. I am your Lord and Saviour. Whatsoever you do in the name of Christ to the poorest of my children, you do it unto me."

Martin wakened then; but ever afterward he remembered the dream, and he went about seeking those who needed help. He did so many good deeds that the people called him St. Martin.—Sunbeam.

God's Shining.

It was Sunday evening, and in the family circle which papa and mamma had gathered around them they had been talking of the planets, the stars, and the heavenly world, which the children were sure they got glimpses of as the stars twinkled.

Just before jumping into bed, Mabel and Gracie brushed aside the prettty white curtain from their bedroom window so that they might get another peep of the "glory."

"I think those stars are like God's eyes looking down on us," said seven-year-old Gracie.

"Oh, but the moon is more like God, it's bigger and brighter!" exclaimed Mabel. "Just think, if he sees us now!"

"I'd like him to see me, and to shine on me always, just like this," said Gracie.

"I'd like to be able to see Him, always," returned Mabel.

God does see you, Gracie, and when you are trying to please Him, He is always shining in blessing upon you, and He will shine into your heart and make you very happy.

And Mabel can see God if she looks, for his hand in everything that is beautiful and fair in the world around us, and in the lives and characters of those who are loving and gentle and noble.—Apples of Gold.

Keeping Him Busy.

Id the spring of 1888 a pair of red foxes took up their home on a Dakota farm. They dug several holes on a knoll in a wheat field, and soon after four "kits," or young foxes, arrived. Every day, while harrowing and sowing wheat in the field, says the farmer, I saw the the two old foxes lying on the little mound in front of their home. The kits rolled about in the sun, played with the busy tails of their parents and enjoyed themselves apparently as much as a group of kittens.

One morning a neighbor came to work in a field adjoining, bringing with him a dog, and the dog, with all the curiosity of his kind, soon began the investigation of both farms.

He was still a long distance from the fox-den when I heard a sharp, warning bark and saw the kits disappear. As I looked, the mother-fox lay on the mound, her ears erect, her nose on the ground, all attention. The father of the family, with his big tail swinging in the wind, trotted toward the dog.

Can he intend to attack him? I wondered. I had never heard of such a thing, and the dog, though not a large one, was still larger than the fox. But reynard knew his business better than I. He approached the intruder until the dog saw him, when both stopped for an instant, and then the dog gave chase.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

A correspondent, writing to us on business, adds these cheering words at the close of his letter:

"A very bright Christian, an invalid, confined to her room—a very intelligent woman—told me last night that she was delighted with the flavor of piety in your editorial work, and assured me that she was praying for you."

The great Apostle to the Gentiles, in spite of his dauntless courage and unusual talents, yearned intensely for the prayers of God's people, and in almost every letter asked to be remembered at the throne of grace. And in my humbler sphere of work, as I contemplate the responsibility that rests upon me, and realize to some extent, my ignorance and weakness, I am very grateful for the prayers of a pious woman. Yes! dear invalid sister, continue to pray for me. I need it.

The Synodical Communion will hereafter occur on the first night of the meeting, and the election of new officers will be postponed to the next morning. This impresses us as a desirable change. For this sweet and solemn service will tend to give a spirit of love and consecration to the whole meeting. And the attendance will be larger on the opening night, because the precious sacrament is administered at that time.

Among the articles, contributed to the paper this week, is an eloquent and pathetic narrative of misery and degradation among the negroes. The incident narrated is very touching, and appeals strongly to the sympathy of every pious heart. The writer, however, proceeds to argue that the existence of such sin and misery at our very doors is an evidence that zeal for Foreign Missions is causing us to neglect the miserable and wicked in our own land. Surely this cannot be the case, because the motives which impel to Foreign Missionary work, (zeal for God's glory, and love for our fellow-men), must render the heart more responsive to the call of misery and sin at home—and the faithful discharge of our duty, renders us stronger and more conscientious in the discharge of every other.

A more legitimate inference, it seems to us, is this: If such is the curse of sin in a Christian land, and such misery and degradation occur, in spite of the restraining influences of religion; how wide-spread and how bitter must be the degradation of the heathen. Even the poor ignorant negress had some inkling of the source of true comfort, as is shown by her words, "Pears like to me, God ought to save us women anyhow, we has to suffer so in this world." Such cases, therefore, should rouse us to be more observant of our opportunities to help the sorrowful and degraded at our doors; but should not lead us to withdraw our sympathies from the heathen, because their degradation is deeper than that of the lowest of our land, and the blessed Saviour, whom we serve, has bidden us, "Preach the gospel to every creature."

The Waldenses by their steadfastness under cruel persecutions, won for themselves the sympathy and admiration of Protestant Christendom. And their heroic endurance has often been the poet's theme. Milton expresses the indignation of England at their butchery in his famous sonnet beginning, "Avenge, O Lord! thy slaughtered saints," whilst Bryant and Wordsworth have also commemorated their sufferings in verse. But there is another aspect of their history we should not overlook. Not only were they sufferers for Jesus' sake; but, through long years of darkness, they were the light of the world. It was because they were teachers of righteousness, and winners of souls, the cruel papacy tried to crush them. This missionary feature of their history is celebrated in a sweet poem by Whittier, The Vaudois Teacher, which we publish this week. This poem has been translated into French by M. De Felice, and was so highly appreciated by the Vaudois themselves, that a letter of thanks was sent Mr. Whittier in the name of the Waldensian Church.

Our contributors this week deserve the thanks of the Editor and readers of the paper. Dr. Harding's "Ink Spots" are always fresh and charming. For some readers there may be too much Latin, but not for all. At Synod, the Editor was taken sharply to task for spoiling a beautiful quotation by printing vale instead of tale; but we earnestly hope that all of our readers were not pained by the blunder. Rev. W. R. Coppedge sends a characteristically clear exposition of the fate of Jephthah's daughter. Rev. G. L. Cook furnishes another bright and timely letter about Beneficiary Education; Rev. S. O. Hall contributes a precious little homily upon "I was brought low, and He helped me;" Rev. J. R. Bridges sends an interesting account of two debates in the Synod of Virginia; and last, but not least, Rev. P. F. Price sends a report of the Missionary Conference in China.

THE IMPRESSION WE MAKE.

Did it never strike you as strange, Mr. Editor, what a large number of ministers of the Word make an impression of being vain, and filled with an idea of their own importance? Of course Old Shoe himself may make the same impression on the minds of some; but that possibility does not prevent him from confessing that often and often the sad and pitiable thought comes into his mind and heart that not a few of the official followers of the meek Jesus have a very proud manner to say the least. This thought may be prompted by my own evil mind, or it may come from the peculiar carriage of my brethren. Every one knows that the impressions one gets are often the fault of the observer. When a boy of fifteen years, I caught a sight of the sainted Dr. Peck upon the streets of Farmville, Va., and I remarked to a friend that Dr. Peck must be a very stiff and proud man. But when I learned to know him and to love him, I found that what I had taken for stiff pride, was in reality the beautiful modesty which was one of the chief ornaments of Dr. Peck's character.

A boy's view of a man upon the street is different, however, from a man's view of men who are his fellow workers. And so, Mr. Editor, I ask again, is it not a strange and unfortunate thing that this impression should so often be made? And whether it is a vice in the heart or an eccentricity of manner only, it is of prime importance that we change the manner and expel the vice. For surely it is a double immersion of the teaching of Christ when the attainment of certain honorable places reacts upon the character of the man and fills him with pride.

Old Shoe.

"I WAS BROUGHT LOW."

BY REV. S. O. HALL.

"I was brought low, and He helped me."—116th Psalm, latter part of 6th verse.

In the first part of this verse, David says, "The Lord preserveth the simple." Now in support of that statement, he seems to say: "I know whereof I affirm. The assertion can be proved. Let me mention a concrete case, give my personal experience. 'I was brought low, and he helped me.'"

His Condition: "I was brought low"

Here is a metaphor taken from water courses that have dried up, utterly failed. He means that he was spent, exhausted, empty, wasted, all resources had failed.

To what particular occasion does he refer? Many times had he been in sore straits.

Throughout this entire psalm he bears personal testimony to the faithfulness of the Lord. It is as a leaf from one's diary. "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow. Then called I upon the name of the Lord; O Lord, I beseech thee, deliver my soul. Gracious is the Lord, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful. The Lord preserveth the simple: I was brought low, and He helped me." He also speaks of his soul being delivered from death; his eyes, from tears; and his feet, from falling.

Surely he refers to the time when he was led to see himself a lost sinner. To no other time in one's life can these words more truthfully or appropriately apply, "I was brought low."

Christian, I am sure that occasion, conviction of sin, has not faded from your memory. It never can.

You did not know what to do. You felt yourself to be a guilty, lost sinner before God. Your sins felt as mountains upon you. The plan of salvation, which had often been explained to you and which it was thought you understood, remained a mystery. Where to go, what to do, you knew not. You were at your wit's end—"brought low."

You inquired the way of life. You were exhorted to repent. This anxious question you propounded, "What must I do to be saved?" The reply came: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

You realized your inability to repent, to believe. You were told to pray for these things. You could not pray. You felt the want of spiritual strength. How weak! "My strength is dried up like a potsherd." "I am become like a bottle in the smoke." "I was brought low." Then Help Came: "And He helped me." This was the order of time: First, "brought low," then "helped." There was no delay. Help came at once. Just so soon as he was brought low, help arrived.

When one finds that he cannot help himself, the needed help is given. When he ceases to strive, becomes hopeless in himself, then does he see the helping hand. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity."

Says one: "It was quick work with me. I had not thought of religious matters for many years. One day, unexpectedly to me, an arrow of conviction pierced my heart. In an instant 'I was brought low, and He helped me.'"

Says another: "My experience was quite different. It was a long, protracted struggle with me."

Now, why this seeming difference of experience? It is not a question of time, but of degree, of sincerity. When brought down to a certain point, then, and not till then, is the needed help sufficiently appreciated.

What was Done: "He helped me." The Revised Version renders this, "He saved me." The help proved to be saving help.

David does not stop with the expression, "I was brought low." This was only a part of his experience. He states a glorious additional truth, "and He saved me."

O the sweetness of this personal experience! I was the one brought low. The saving help came to me. "He saved me."

Oh! that we could more fully appreciate the salvation bestowed. "He saved me." You may say: "The work of saving me was begun when I was being brought low. The saving work was going on all that time, though I knew it not. I was being brought low in order that I might be saved. In fact bringing me low was a part of the work of saving me. As I went down, I went up. Bringing me low was bringing me high. The lower I was brought, the higher I was rising. When I was at my lowest, I was at my highest."

"He saved me." The Lord saves. He it is who brings low. "Salvation is of the Lord."

Why relate his experience?

To encourage himself. Calling to mind the greatest of deliverances makes him feel that succor will be granted on other occasions. Lesser blessings are sure to follow.

Each additional blessing tends to renew courage. "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." "The Lord hath been mindful of us: He will bless us." "Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice."

David would induce others to trust in the Lord. "He saved me" when "I was brought low." He is able to save others. He is willing to save others. O that all would love and serve him too!

In this psalm he gives his experience. He tells why he loves the Lord. He declares his determination to call upon him as long as he lives. He closes this remarkable psalm with these words, "Praise ye the Lord."

And he would glorify the Lord. With all humility he says, "I was brought low." The glory of the salvation he ascribes to the Lord. "He saved me."

"The glory, Lord, from first to last,
Is due to Thee alone;
Aught to ourselves we dare not take,
Or rob Thee of Thy crown,"

INK SPOTS.

When the doctrine of repudiation was in the air, Dr. Bushnell preached on the subject. His text was, "Alas, Master, for it was borrowed." He thus began: "This was an industrious man or he would not have wanted an axe, must have been a poor man or he would not have needed to borrow—must have been an honest man or he would never have explained when it sank in the water, "Alas! Master for it was borrowed."

* * *

On another occasion preaching to business men during a period of financial distress, he took for his text: "And when the ship was caught and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive."

* * *

Dr. Bushnell was one of those men who thought that on all high and deep matters of metaphysics, or theology, language was too vague to teach precise truth, yet was constantly publishing books on these deep subjects to prove that he had found the truth where the Church doctors had missed it; using language for the very purpose for which he invariably taught language could not be used.

And now comes on our Puseyite brother, "with his little volume of nonsense," showing how it is that—He is a Churchman!

How few men in any community see things as they are; the faculty of judgment, discrimination of seeing all around, is the rarest of all faculties. The power of nice and just analysis I believe rarer than even creative power of a high order.

It is a great mistake to confound poetry and rhetoric with eloquence, one fills the soul with sense of beauty, or sublimity, the other moves to action—one addresses the emotions—the other the passions. The power to move men is rarer perhaps than the power to charm men.

Personality is one great element in effective speaking, the will-power of the speaker, seizes on his hearers. It is a species of hypnotism. Preachers of a certain class, poetical minds, may charm, instruct, edify, but 'tis the other sort that make revival preachers; power, personal magnetism, seems to go out from them and he seizes others, and these are as wax in their hands. They are "not only direct and pungent preachers whose aim is to convert souls; other men are all that, who have not their success. They are often not more pious than other men." They have some strange power over audiences. For the most part they are themselves unconscious of the elements which go to make their success; their art does not manifest itself to their consciousness. It is a sort of instinct. It is their gift.

Dr. Phelps, speaking of Albert Barne's power in the pulpit says, "His resources were good sense, good will, and good courage"—no doubt, but a man may have all these and not make a preacher; there was some secret power which imparted life to these. He adds, "Both in matter and manner he was one of the calmest men I ever heard. He stood in the pulpit like a stature, rarely moving anything but his lips and his eyelids, yet for power to feel his way inward to the heart-string of hearers and play upon them at will, I never heard his equal"—and yet Dr. Phelps would refer all this to good sense, &c.; how absurd! Nobody has hit upon or can hit upon the secret in such cases. It lies below analysis—we feel the power, but know not how evolved, or in what it lies.

"It is well for all who teach to remember that it is not "technical apparatus, but natural and manly sentiments and thoughts which make the teacher. It is almost a universal trait in young minds to rebel against being made a means. They dislike being treated as mere stones in the temple of learning—they are possessed by the thought that the individual life is greater than learning;" they must realize that the teacher is quickening and enlarging their own life, and shaping his ends and means to that result."

One hopes something good, clear and really useful, as guides in the questions pertaining to capital and labor and general relations of man in society, will come out of the many essays and books now written on that subject; as yet, it has been mostly churning, with no butter to speak of; mostly the gabble of sentimentalists, or well meaning, but empty heads. There is for most of us no royal road to living as yet; we must get it by labor. Many of our socialistic writers are now engaged in showing us how we may cross the stream by the hopeful method of catching ourselves by the waistband of our trousers and lifting ourselves over, but that will not succeed I take it. It is no hardship to work. I do not think the law has yet been repealed, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

THE VAUDOIS TEACHER.

"The manner in which the Waldenses and heretics disseminated their principles among the Catholic gentry was by carrying with them a box of trinkets or articles of dress. Having entered the houses of the gentry, and disposed of some of their goods, they cautiously intimated that they had commodities far more valuable than these,—inestimable jewels, which they would show if they could be protected from the clergy. They would then give their purchasers a Bible or Testament, and thereby many were deluded into heresy."—R. Saccho, Inquisitor of the twelfth century.

"O lady fair, these silks of mine are beautiful and rare,—
The richest web of the Indian loom, which beauty's queen might wear;
And my pearls are pure as thy own fair neck, with whose radiant light they vie;
I have brought them with me a weary way—will my gentle lady buy?"

And the lady smiled on the worn old man through the dark and clustering curls
Which veiled her brow as she bent to view his silks and glittering pearls;
And she placed their price in the old man's hand, and lightly turned away,
But she paused at the wanderer's earnest call,—"My gentle lady, stay!"

"O lady fair, I have yet a gem which a purer lustre flings,
Than the diamond flash of the jewelled crown on the lofty brow of kings,—
A wonderful pearl of exceeding price, whose virtue shall not decay,
Whose light shall be as a spell to thee and a blessing on thy way!"

The lady glanced at the mirrowing steel where her form of grace was seen,
Where her eye shone clear, and her dark locks waved their clasping pearls between;
"Bring forth thy pearl of exceeding worth, thou traveller gray and old,—
And name the price of thy precious gem, and my page shall count thy gold."

The cloud went off from the pilgrim's brow, as a small and meagre book, Unchased with gold or gem of cost, from his folding robe he took!
"Here lady fair, is the pearl of price, may it prove as such to thee!
Nay—keep thy gold—I ask it not, for the word of God is free!"

The hoary traveller went his way, but the gift he left behind
Hath had its pure and perfect work on that high-born maiden's mind,
And she hath turned from the pride of sin to the lowliness of truth,
And given her human heart to God in its beautiful hour of youth!

And she hath left the gray old halls, where an evil faith had power,
The courtly knights of her father's train, and the maidens of her bower;
And she hath gone to the Vaudois vales by lordly feet untrod,
Where the poor and needy of earth are rich in the perfect love of God!

ABSTRACT OF THE MINUTES OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST ANNUAL SESSION OF THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The Synod of North Carolina held its eighty-first annual session in the First Presbyterian church, Greensboro, N. C., Oct. 23rd, 1894.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. P. H. Hoge, D. D., retiring moderator, from John 3: 29.

There were enrolled during the session, ninety ministers and fifty-three ruling elders.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood, of Fayetteville Presbytery was chosen moderator, and Rev. P. R. Law and Ruling Elder, Hiram Foard, temporary clerks.

Rev. Messrs. S. H. Chester, D. D., W. L. Harrell, B. Soulier, Floyd Alexander, J. K. Hazen, D. D., Thos. R. English, D. D., T. R. Sampson, D. D., E. M. Richardson, D. D., J. N. Craig, Byron Clark and A. J. Tate, were invited to sit as corresponding members; and Rev. Messrs. E. E. Blount, S. H. Hilliard, D. Atkins, D. D., W. M. Bagley, C. A. Thomas and J. D. Andrew, as visiting brethren.

Fraternal greetings, by telegram, were extended to the Synod of Virginia, in session at Danville, Va. To this telegram the following response was received; The Synod of Virginia greet their brethren of North Carolina with sincere Christian affection—"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

On the morning of the second day, the moderator announced the Standing Committees; and the Statistical Reports, Reports on Systematic Beneficence, Narratives on State of Religion from the Presbyteries, the Presbyterial and Synodical Records, Report of Trustees of Synod, Report of Directors of Union Theological Seminary, were referred to their respective committees.

Rev. B. Soulier, of the Waldensian Synod, presented the fraternal greetings of that body. The Synod responded through a special committee: "The Synod of North Carolina returns to the Waldensian Synod a message of hearty good will; commends them to the sympathy and support of our people, and prays the continued blessing of God upon this branch of their noble work."

Rev. Thornton R. Sampson, D. D., addressed the Synod in the interest of the "Assembly's Home and School." In response to this address the "Synod recommends to its ministers to consider carefully whether any form of life insurance would be so valuable as the proposition to give one per cent of their salaries to the support of this institution; and to its stronger churches to assume the maintenance of scholarships."

Rev. R. W. Boyd, Superintendent, addressed the Synod in behalf of the Orphans' Home.

The report of the Committee on Bible Cause was presented, and the following recommendations adopted;

(1.) That the Presbyteries be urged to make this cause more prominent at their regular meetings and especially that they make it a part of the duty of their Presbyterial Agents to forward in each case a copy of the annual written report to the Chairman of the Synod's Committee on Bible Cause.

(2.) That our ministers be urged to inform themselves and their people more thoroughly concerning the work of the American Bible Society and our relation to it.

(3.) That as far as possible the collection for this cause be taken in all our churches at the time named for it by the General Assembly, the third Sabbath in October, or as soon thereafter as practicable.

Rev. J. M. Rose, Jr., Agent, presented the annual report on Ministerial Education; and the following resolution appended thereto was adopted:

Resolved, "That special efforts be made to increase in all our churches the gifts of the people for this important cause, and to this end that pastors be earnestly urged to give due prominence to the collections ordered in the months of November and April, and to inform the people of God of the IMPERATIVE NEED OF INCREASED LIBERALITY."

The annual report on Publication and Colportage contained the following recommendation which was adopted: "That Synod authorize our Colporteur to present the claims of the "Missionary" and the "Children's Missionary" and to secure subscriptions for the same as part of his regular work."

The committee to confer with the A. R. P. Church with a view to union with them, presented a full report, together with the correspondence on the subject; and as there seems no probability of such union being effected at present the committee recommends the following action to the Assembly: "This Assembly reaffirms its cordial desire of closer relations with the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, and hereby expresses its readiness to renew negotiations on this subject in any form agreeable to the Synod of said Church. The Stated Clerk of the Assembly is instructed to furnish a copy of this action to the Stated Clerk of said Associate Reformed Synod."

The annual report of the Regents of the Orphans' Home was presented, and the special committee to whom it was referred, recommended the following, which was adopted:

1. The Synod most heartily commends the diligence and efficiency of the Board of Regents, and endorses fully the internal administration of Rev. R. W. Boyd.

2. We would recommend that the plan of securing pledges for the support of individual children be emphasized; and our churches are hereby advised to undertake this form of effort.

3. With reference to the contemplated building; the following: (a.) That Synod hereby expresses its judgment that a building is urgently needed and at once. (b.) That in addition to such effort as may be made by the Regents, a pastoral letter be sent down, advising each session to lay the matter before the people, to see that the letter is read to the congregation, and to adopt for raising the money such methods as seem wisest for their people.

4. That the report of the Board of Regents be approved, and the retiring Regents be reappointed, viz: John E. Oates, S. C. Rankin and Rev. J. H. Boyd, D. D.

The report on Foreign Missions was presented by Rev. A. T. Graham, Chairman of the Permanent Committee; and the resolutions appended were adopted, viz:

Resolved 1st. That in view of our small number of missionaries, a pastoral letter be addressed to our churches, appealing to our young people to heed this Macedonian cry from heathen lands, "Come over and help us."

2d. That the Treasurers of the Presbyteries and of the churches of this Synod be requested to forward at once to Nashville all money which may be on hand or available for this cause.

3rd. That this Synod pledge itself to do more than ever before to raise the $30,000 asked for by the General Assembly.

Addresses in this connection were made by Rev. S. H. Chester, D. D., Secretary, and others, and a collection was taken amounting to $70.

An invitation to the General Assembly to meet in the First church, Charlotte, N. C., in 1896, was heartily endorsed by Synod.

Rev. J. Rumple, D. D., and P. H. Hoge, D. D., were re-elected directors of Union Theological Seminary; Mr. Geo. W. Watts was elected in place of Mr. C. E. Graham, and Rev. L. B. Turnbull was chosen to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. H. T. Darnall, The Synod also urges Presbyteries to hold adjourned meetings for the examination of candidates in order to prevent a great deal of hurtful absenteeism. The Synod did not take any action in reference to the proposed change of location of the Seminary.

Rev. J. K. Hazen, D. D., addressed the Synod upon the subject of Publication and Colportage; the special committee to respond to this address recommended that whenever our people can procure what they need from our Publication House, on as good terms as elsewhere, that they always purchase from our own house.

The Regents of the Orphans' Home were authorized to prepare and send out a pastoral letter concerning the condition and needs of the home.

Rev. J. N. Craig, D. D., addressed the Synod upon the General Assembly's Home Mission work; Rev. E. M. Richardson, D. D., upon the matter of Ministerial Education; and Rev. Thos. R. English, D. D., touching the condition and prospects of Union Theological Seminary.

The report on Church and Christian Education was presented by Rev. J. B. Shearer, D. D., and the following recommendations adopted:

1. That a circular letter be again addressed to all our churches so as to awaken increased interest in all the departments of education, giving special emphasis to female education.

2. That Synod endeavor to raise for this cause the coming year the sum of $1,500, and that the same be apportioned among the Presbyteries as follows: Orange, $250, Concord, $300, Fayetteville, $300, Wilmington, $200, Mecklenburg, $350, Albemarle, $100.

Rev. Wm. Black, Superintendent, presented the annual report of the Synodical Home Missions Committee. In connection with this report addresses were made by various brethren who are engaged, in whole or in part, in Home Missions work. (This report is in the hands of the Superintendent and will be printed in pamphlet form.) At the conclusion of these addresses a collection was taken for this cause amounting to $119.25.

Rev. Wm. Black was re-elected Superintendent, and Messrs. J. M. Rogers, J. G. Hall, J. W. McNeill, B. F. Hall, C. E. Graham, and J. R. Young were also re-elected members of the Committee on Synodical Home Missions.

The Committee on the Minutes of the General Assembly called attention (1) to the fact that the Assembly urges our ministers and churches to give their support to the Assembly's Home and School at Fredericksburg, Va., and (2) that the Assembly answers in the affirmative the overture from this Synod with reference to the transference of ministers from one Presbytery to another.

COTTOLENE.

It is not

An experiment—but a Proved Success. Thousands of housekeepers who at first thought they never could use any shortening but lard, now use COTTOLENE and couldn't be induced to change, simply because it is better, cheaper and more healthful. The genuine has this trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every pail. Look for it.

An overture was presented from Orange Presbytery relative to the establishment of an Industrial School for the colored people. In answer to this overture the Synod appointed the following Board of Directors:

First Class, to serve three years; Rev. W. D. Morton, D. D., Chairman, Rev. L. B. Turnbull, Rev. E. W. Smith, D. D., J. M. Rogers, Esq., Geo. W. Watts, Esq.

Second Class, to serve two years: Rev. A. J. McKelway, Rev. R. F. Campbell, D. D., W. H. Sprunt, Esq., C. E. Graham, Esq.

Third Class, to serve one year: Rev. C. A. Munroe, Rev. J. M. Rose, Jr., Rev. C. G. Vardelle, Prof. H. L. Smith.

The interests of Davidson College were presented by Prof. H. L. Smith, and the thanks of the Synod were tendered Prof. Smith for his most interesting, instructive and encouraging address.

The annual report on Sabbath-schools was presented by the Agent, and the recommendation appended was adopted: "That the Synod hereby earnestly urge parents and other adult members wherever they can in consistency with other claims, to attend the sessions of the Sunday-schools."

The report on Colored Evangelization was presented by Rev. W. D. Morton, D. D., and the recommendations appended thereto, adopted:

1. That an earnest effort be made to raise $3,000 for this cause by apportionments among the Presbyteries

2. In view of the increased demand for an Evangelist to aid the colored brethren in the Synod, and to open up new points of work, we recommend that efforts be made to secure a suitable man for the whole, or a part of his time, and that the Synodical Agent be authorized to draw on the Secretary of Colored Evangelization for his salary.

3. We urged all of our ministers to bring the spiritual interests of the colored people before their congregations in the month of December and to give their earnest prayers as they appeal to them for their benevolent aid.

That at the instance of the pastor of the church whose hospitality we share, a collection be made to-night for the benefit of the church enterprises of Rev. J. S. Morrow and Rev. S. G. Walker. This collection was made in connection with the evening's services and amounted to $42.67.

After a sermon by Rev. J. H. Boyd, D. D., the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated.

A memorial of Rev. J. L. Currie was read by Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., and of Rev. G. D. Parks by Rev. J. L. Williamson. After remarks by various members of Synod, these memorials were adopted by a rising vote and Synod was led in prayer by Rev. J. Rumple, D. D.

Synod adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, "That the Synod has learned with pleasure that Rev. J. M. Rawlings, D. D., has assumed the position of the editor of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, that from the past successful labors of Bro. Rawlings in several departments of church work, the Synod is encouraged to hope for the enlarged usefulness of the paper, and heartily commends the paper under its new management to the confidence and patronage of our people."

The following changes in the Standing Orders of Synod were adopted:

1. That the Synodical Communion be held immediately after the opening sermon.

2. That the election of officers be held at the beginning of the morning session following.

3. That the popular meeting in the interest of Foreign Missions be held Wednesday night.

4. That the popular meeting in the interest of Home Missions be held Thursday night.

5. That Friday night be given alternately to Sunday-schools and Colored Evangelization.

Judge T. B. Womack was reappointed a Regent of South Atlantic University.

A hearty vote of thanks was adopted by a rising vote, as follows:

"That this Synod hereby endeavor to give some expression of its appreciation of the cordial welcome and delightful hospitality which have been so graciously extended to us by the pastors and people of this church, and of all the churches of Greensboro; that we also extend sincere thanks to the Railroads for reduced rates and other courtesies; and to the representative of the press who has from day to day furnished the papers such satisfactory reports of our work.

By order of Synod there was a sermon each day at 11 a. m., as a part of the Synod's regular sessions.

The Synod adjourned to meet in the Presbyterian church, Fayetteville, N. C., on Tuesday, after the 3rd Sabbath of October 1895, at 7: 30 p. m.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Louisiana Presbytery: Met Oct. 10th, in Bethany church, Miss. Seven ministers and nine elders present. Rev. W. N. Jenkins was elected moderator, and Rev. F. Banks, clerk. Little Plains church, East Balm Range church, was entered, upon its petition, to the roll of Presbytery.

Clinton, La., was chosen as place for spring meeting. Request of Ethel Presbytery (colored), to solicit aid for its school among our churches was granted.

Miss Mattie Tate, now in Seoul, Korea, was selected by Presbytery as the missionary for whom support will be given. Home Mission reports very encouraging. Prospects for reaching our destitute fields more encouraging than ever before.

Amendments: That concerning ordination in the foreign field was adopted. That concerning licensure and ordination was rejected.

Presbytery dissents from and protests against the Assembly's decision in the Means case.

Reports of commissioners approved and diligence commended. Synod of Mississippi was overtured to so change boundary lines as to place Alexandria, (La.,) church in bounds of this Presbytery.

The narrative gives most encouraging reports of progress. The meeting was delightful. Large congregations attending the services.

M. B. SHAW,
Stated Clerk.

North Alabama Presbytery met at Florence, Oct. 9th, 1894. Membership twenty-five—sixteen ministers and nine elders. Rev. Jno. Barbour, was elected moderator and Dr. H. S. Dill, temporary clerk.

Three new churches have been organized since the last meeting—Wyeth City, Albertville and Midway.

A call of the Silver Creek church of Kentucky was presented for the pastoral service of Rev. B. F. Bedinger. After a

ONLY TO-DAY.

Yesterday now is a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight,
With glad days and sad days and bad days which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fullness of sunshine or sorrowful night.

Let them go, since we cannot relieve them,
Cannot undo and cannot atone;
God in his mercy forgive, receive them!
Only the new days are our own.
To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

BOOKS.

We are in receipt of two very attractive and useful booklets, published by Wade & Drummond, 711, Broadway, N. Y. They are:—Dont Worry, by J. R. Miller, D. D. Price 20 cents. Golden Texts, 1895, by Faith Latimer. Price 2 cents.

Miss Jerome's Banners. Published by Lee and Shepard, Boston, Mass. Price 50 cents each: $2.00 for entire set. These banners are artistic and beautiful decorations for the wall, and are appropriate for Christmas and Easter. They are: "The Joy Banner," a wealth of nasturtiums artistically woven in and out through the lines; "The Every-Day Banner," containing thoughts for every day, brightened by the corn flower in delicate tints; "The Rest Banner" is decorated by the sweet pea in many tints; "What Will the Violets Be," is decorated most appropriately with clusters of violets finely grouped. The reading on these banners is as beautiful as the decoration.

MAGAZINES.

"In the Days of Jeanne d'Arc" is the name of Mrs. Catherwood's new novel, now nearly completed for the Century Magazine. The novel is to be brilliantly illustrated, the Franco-American, Castaigne, having undertaken the work.

The leading article of the November Eclectic Magazine is Mr. Gladstone's "True and False Conceptions of the Atonement," "The East End and Crime," an altruistic article by Rev. A. Osborne Jay, and a review of Prof. Drummond's famous "Ascent of Man" are among the more serious numbers in the magazine. This number is unusually attractive. Published by E. R. Pelton, 144 Eighth St., New York. Terms, $5 per year.

The North Carolina University Magazine, for October, 1894, is a highly creditable college publication. Were we to venture a criticism, it would be the lack of light fiction. Among the articles in this number we note, The Powers of Invention, an essay written by James K. Polk, while a Sophomore at the University. The Earth-Worm; Its Habits and Structure, shows considerable biological insight. An Old Letter of Nathaniel Macon is of interest. Published by Students of University, Chapel Hill, N. C. Price $1.50 per year.

THE CHINA MISSION MEETING.

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the China Mission, was held in Shanghai, Sept. 8th–16th, 1894, the business sessions covering five days. The first general meeting of the members of the Mission was at a social gathering in answer to the invitations of the missionaries of the Northern Presbyterian Church, and at the spacious residence of the Rev. J. M. W. Farnham, D. D., on the outskirts of Shanghai. This was a truly pleasant occasion. Refreshments were served on the pretty lawn, where also the children of both missions had free play and a good time, and the occasion ended most happily with an open-air prayer-meeting and the expression by speech and song of the most cordial Christian fellowship. On Saturday evening, Rev. Geo. Hudson, the retiring chairman, conducted religious services, and preached from Jer. 1:17. On Sabbath morning there was an early, preparatory prayer-meeting, conducted by Rev. Hugh White, and members of the Mission, preached in the Shanghai churches. On Sunday afternoon, Dr. Houston preached from John 14:12, and all gathered around the Lord's table. Thus the Mission meeting commenced with devotional meetings, which were continued in the evenings, with special subjects. For instance, the subject Monday evening was, "The Perils in the Spiritual Life of the Missionary," and the leader Rev. J. S. Stuart." All these devotional meetings, at this one reunion of our missionaries during the year were most helpful.

A great deal of important business came before the Mission. Mr. J. W. Paxton was chosen chairman; Mr. C. N. Caldwell treasurer; and Rev. M. B. Grier, temporary clerk. The Mission recommended to the Executive Committee that Mr. Caldwell be placed in Shanghai as the treasurer, secretary and general agent of the Mission. The consideration of this letter, together with hearing of committee reports, occupied more than a day, and the consideration of estimates alone occupied a day. The consideration of the revision of the Assembly's Manual of Foreign Missions, brought up many important questions; and there was long and earnest discussion of the case before the Mission finally gave its voice, advising Rev. Geo. Hudson to change his field of labor to Hangchow. It is possible in this space to indicate only some of these questions involving the interests of a vast and growing work, and the distribution of the funds of the Church committed to our hands.

New Stations. During the year Dr. Houston has opened up a station at Linwu, north of Hangchow; and Suhtsien, a city north of Tsingkiangpu, was occupied in the face of much and marked opposition, and Mr. and Mrs. Patterson could not attend the Mission meeting for fear their absence would endanger their foot-hold there. And Kishing, Kiangyin and Whaiang, toward which cities efforts are being directed, presented hopeful reports, though there are many adversaries.

New Missionaries. Those who are expected this autumn are advised by the Mission to locate as follows: J. R. Wilkinson, M. D., Soochow; Miss Talbot to work with Dr. and Mrs. Venable; Rev. H. W. White, Suhtsien, temporarily; Miss Torrance, Hangchow. The general sentiment among our missionaries is that the fact of war need not prevent outcoming missionaries at all.

Miscellaneous: Sixteen voting members were in attendance and a goodly number of ladies. The Mission now numbers: Stations, 8; missionaries, 46; statistical reports show: churches, 4; chapels, 15; number in schools, 272; persons aided by medicine, 17,252; books and tracts distributed, 52,000. Total communicants, 159; added on examination, 34; contributions by natives, $138.02; native preachers, 9; Bible women, 7. The reports of individual work occupied two forenoons, and were of a most interesting character; first ladies' reports, then men's reports. Forty-one reports were heard. We could not single out one without mentioning many, and the time would fail us. They showed much hard work. If we might be allowed to interpret the general tone it is: "The morning cometh," &c.

P. F. PRICE,
Mission Secretary.

Arguing a Point.

I heard a story the other day about a church member who was being badgered by one of these "coyotes from the bad land." He had expressed his belief in the entire Bible and all there was in it. The unbeliever said to him, "And so you believe everything in the Bible?" "Yes." "I suppose you have read the story of the building of the ark?" "Yes." "About its being so many hundred feet long and so many feet wide, and so many feet high, and big enough to hold all those people and all those animals—elephants and all?" "Yes." "Well, now, what do you think of that story about the Israelites carrying that great, big thing about with them through the wilderness for forty years, more or less?" And the church member who had read the Bible for years but "had not hidden the word in his heart," had nothing to say. He actually did not know the difference between Noah's ark and the ark of God! "Be ready to give a reason for the hope that is in you," but in doubtful disputations, if a point comes up for discussion, and you know what the Bible says upon it, quote it in its own language. Be wary of giving your own interpretation as a substitute, for that is dangerous. Plant your feet upon the solid granite of the Word and do not attempt to build some platform of your own conception and designing and then to stand upon that. Do not try to adjust your Bible to what this or that man says science teaches. Science must adjust itself to the Bible, and though with tardy step and leaden heel she does it, and a few centuries, more or less, may elapse before she does it, do it she must ultimately.—C. F. Dean, in Young Men's Era.

patient and prayerful consideration Presbytery declined to place the call in his hands. Bro. Bedinger is laboring in a county where five years ago we had only a few members and no church; now we have about 135 members and three churches, the result mainly of his faithful work. Hartselle was selected as the place for the next stated meeting.

A committee consisting of Revs. J. G. Snedecor, D. McQueen, R. B. Marrow, and Gen. R. D. Johnston and Judge J. W. Lapsley, were appointed to report on the amendments to the Book of Church Order at the spring meeting.

Rev. D. M. Armentrout was received from Columbia Presbytery, candidate E. L. Butler (colored) was dismissed to the care of Kingston Presbytery (Northern Presbyterian Church), and D. A. Carter to the care of the Presbytery of Nashville, and H.E. Kirk was taken under the care of Presbytery as a candidate.

Special meetings were held in the interest of Foreign Missions, Home Missions and Synod's Orphans' Home at Talladega.

The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Union met in Florence at the same time that Presbytery met. A report from them was made to Presbytery. The Union consists of sixteen societies which last year contributed $363.65. For the coming year they propose to support a missionary, and have selected as their missionary Miss Belle Smith, of the Columbiana church of the Presbytery, who is laboring in China. Their next meeting will be held next fall at Birmingham, Ala.

OBJECTIONS TO BENEFICIARY EDUCATION CONSIDERED.

Many ask help who are able to help themselves. You have often heard that statement. But is it true? The writer once heard an old Methodist minister, commenting on the statement of David, that he had never seen the seed of the righteous begging bread, make this remark: But some will say, "I have heard of the seed of the righteous begging bread many a time." Oh yes, no doubt you have. You can hear anything, but have you ever seen it? David, I suppose, had heard it, but he had never seen it."

The writer has heard of four undoubted cases—and only four. But it has happened that he afterwards came in possession of the facts in three of these cases.

No. 1. A minister's wife, as good a woman as ever lived, reported the supposed facts in regard to this young man. She had been to his father's house. He had a large farm, and a great many cattle, &c., &c. All which was true. But that was some years before; and at the time she was speaking the man was bankrupt, and everything sold for debt.

No. 2. Was the son of a well to do farmer. Now this well to do farmer had died some years before this. Most of his money was in hands that could not be collected. The farm had been sold, and the proceeds divided among quite a number of heirs. This young man had paid his way through the academy and through college, and had eleven dollars left with which to go the seminary.

No. 3. Was in the ministry when the writer first heard of his case. It was said that he was well off. In fact, he owned a farm down in one of the Southern States, and yet he was educated by the Southern Church!

The writer happened a few years afterwards to be for a few days in the very congregation where this minister was brought up, and to his surprise found that there was not a particle of truth in the report.

No. 4. Is a good and successful preacher, of undoubted piety? And in absence of positive proof, it ought to be assured that the report was false.

Now the writer does not pretend to say that all the candidates need the assistance they ask for, but he does say that inasmuch as the the truth concerning the only ones whom he has ever heard called by name, and charged with obtaining unnecessary aid, is as above stated, we ought to pay but little attention to things we merely hear about these young men, and exercise toward them that charity that "believeth all things," and that "thinketh no evil."

But another objection must be considered: There are too many failures. Men are educated by the Church and then go into other business. But are there more failures among those educated by the Church than among those educated by their fathers? The writer is of the opinion that there are not. And this is the ground of his opinion: Of all the young men at the seminary at the time he was there, there were five who did not enter the ministry. Of these, two were helped by the Church, two paid their own expenses, and as to the other, the writer is not informed. Now do you not see that if the fact that two young men, educated by the Church, failed to enter the ministry proves that the Church ought not help its candidates, then the fact two young men educated by their parents failed to enter the ministry, proves that parents ought not educate their sons for the ministry. The argument is just as good in the one case as in the other.

And moreover there are failures in everything that is human. If you are determined not to invest your money in any thing that is liable to failure, then you will never invest at all.

A Strange Sabbath Keeping.

This story is a strange one, certainly, but it may be that the two "heathen" men really kept the spirit of the Sabbath in a nobler way than many people who have been in the habit of going to church regularly all their lives.

Dr. J. G. Paton tells of a visit to a neglected island in the Pacific, where he found, to his amazement, for no missionary was there or had been sent there, a sort of Sabbath keeping.

Two old men, who had a very little knowledge of the truths of the Gospel, were keeping track of the days, and on the first day of each week they laid aside ordinary work, put on a calico shirt kept for the purpose, and sat down to talk to those whom they could call about them. In a simple way they recited the outlines of a wonderful story they had once heard about one Jesus.

Doctor Paton inquired where they had learned this truth, and they answered that long before a missionary had visited the island for a week or two, and had given them each a shirt, and told them something of this story of Jesus.

He asked them if they could remember the name, and they said, "Yes; it was Paton."

Thirty-three years before, he had in his evangelizing tours stopped at this island for a few days, and here, so long after, was the fruit. The calico shirts had been worn but once a week, carefully preseryed for the Lord's day, and the only way to keep the day which they knew was to meet others and tell them what they could remember of the wonderful story.

Temperance in the New Hebrides.

BY THE REV. JAMES H. LAWRIE, MISSIONARY IN ANEITYUM.

On returning to this island after an absence of seventeen months, I found that the temperance question needed our first and most earnest attention.

The intoxicating kava plant is easily cultivated on these islands; the root is chewed and mixed with water, then drunk about sunset until an opiate effect is produced to deaden the senses and produce slumber.

From a religious point of view, the evil lies in this, that it practically becomes the god of the user, hardening his heart against all appeals to love and mercy.

In the case of professing Christians who return to the use of the native kava, private prayer and Bible reading ceases; as a consequence, spiritual life declines.

One of the evidences of advancing civilization (?) here is that, instead of as formerly, every man planting what he needed for his own consumption, the inland tribes have, during the past two seasons, been cultivating large quantities of kava for sale, or as an article of barter with the shore or wage-earning section of the community. When we discovered the state of matters, a meeting of the leading men was called, the probable effect on the morals of the people plainly stated, and the question asked, would they allow the young men to relapse into the pit from which their fathers had been dug?

The office bearers of the church rose nobly to the occasion; they admitted that they needed a leader and that they were quite willing to deal drastically with the evil. Two deputations were formed to visit the affected districts. As the result of four days' moral suasion and corresponding action, 731 large kava plants were rooted out and destroyed—not counting a number of smaller plants which were also rooted out. This work was not accomplished without considerable labor and difficulty; but one encouraging result is an improved attendance at the morning schools and Sabbath services.

Another serious evil which we had to deal with was that one of the white settlers had been giving "grog" liberally as an encouragement to the natives in his employment. This was acting as an excellent bait, and many were being drawn aside.

I reasoned with this settler and explained how the safety of his life and property was in great measure due to missionary teaching, and that if the present course was persisted in, he would ere long regret it. I am thankful to say the man took my advice. The latest importation having been a large cask of rum, he poured it on the ground in the presence of the natives, with the intimation that no more alcoholic liquor would be given out.

The amazed expression of their countenances would have been a study for an artist, when a match was applied and they saw the flame run along the ground in the course of the stream made by the rum. Look! look! they cried; no wonder that the missionary advises us against taking the foreign kava; when it burns like that on the ground, what must be its effects on our inside?—Independent.

"He Has Counted the Cost."

The Harvest Field quotes from the North India Chureh Missionary Gleaner, a letter from Dr. Baumann, as follows: "Yesterday I had the happiness of baptizing a young Mohammedan and his wife and three children. He is an educated merchant who dealt in kinkas, or cloth interwoven with silver or gold threads. By embracing Christianity, however, he has become a beggar, as his father had disinherited him and thrust him out of the house, with nothing on him except his clothes. But he has counted the cost, and is happy in the exchange he has made. He has been coming to me for the last eleven months secretly for instruction, and many have been the efforts to induce him to give up Christ, partly made through Moulvies, partly through the tears of his father, but grace enabled him to remain firm. By this baptism a ripple has been caused on the stagnant waters of Benares."

NORTH CAROLINA.

Burlington :—Rev. A. A. Little did not accept the calls from Burlington, Reidsville and Springwood churches. We regret this very much as he was here and preached two sermons for us, and we were very much pleased with him. * *

Goldsboro :—Last Sabbath was a great day with our church in that place. The church has lost heavily by removals. Nevertheless, they surprised themselves and their friends, by raising enough money to remove the old galleries, building a recess for choir behind the pulpit, fresco the wall and put in new circular seats of an elegant pattern. The church building is both enlarged and improved. The windows are cathedral glass, many of them memorial ones, mute, but touching tributes to loved ones gone. Dr. Marable and wife, and Mrs. McMullin, are among these. There are added a new carpet, new pulpit furniture and pews, all in harmony with the terra cotta frescoing of tasteful design. The exterior of the church has been stuccoed and repainted. The morning and evening services of reopening, were conducted by Rev. F. W. Farries, the pastor beloved, whose zeal and labors are thus rewarded, and a former pastor, Rev. S. H. Isler, with preaching, most cordially received from Rev. A. D. McClure, of Wilmington. A new furnace for heating, and apparatus for lighting by electricity, are being put in, and all is being paid for as the work is done. We congratulate our friends and bid them God speed.

Rev. A. D. McClure :—We clip the following, referring to Rev. A. D. McClure, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, Wilmington, from the columns of the Goldsboro Daily Argus :

"Those who were fortunate enough to be present at the morning services at the Presbyterian church here Sunday, are to be congratulated. The dark clouds and sombre day did not prevent the attendance of a large congregation, and while without there was gloom, within the church, all was cheery, bright and comfortable; and the hearts of the people seemed to be in accord with their pleasant surroundings.

Rev. A. D. McClure preached the sermon, his theme being the power of the Holy Ghost. All that a graceful person, a pure delivery and an impassioned manner could add to the subject was lent to the occasion. But the beauty and sublimity of the sermon consisted, not simply of the graces of oratory or the pathos of eloquence, but chiefly of the wonderful unfolding of the workings of the Holy Spirit, as recorded in the Bible; beginning when He brooded over the earth, as it came fresh from the hands of God; as He sat upon Saul and Jephthah, upon Samson and David; as He transformed the daring but fearful Peter, who shrank from the gentle questioning of a simple maid, into the bold accuser of the ruler of the Jews, who had slain his Lord; as He made, of the timid Knox, one of whom it could be truly said, "He never feared the face of man;" as He inspired the eloquent Whitfield with such power as to stir the hearts of thousands and leave his impress upon other generations; as He is shown forth in the lives of all men who have been touched by Christ's love. The aptness of his illustrations, the pathos of his stories, and the magic of his earnestness charmed and moved all hearers, and we doubt whether there was an untouched heart or dry eye in the whole audience, at the close of what, to this writer, was one of the most interesting and instructive sermons it has been his pleasure to hear in a long while.

Concord :—Rev. W. C. Alexander, the new pastor of the church at Concord, and his family have been cordially and generously welcomed to their new home. Everything possible has been done for their comfort. The manse has been renovated, beautified and, in part, elegantly furnished, and the pantry generously supplied with everything needful. Foremost in this labor of love has been the aged mother of two of our officers, Mrs. E. C. Cannon, also a member of this church, though now a resident of Charlotte, who by her zeal, her piety and her influence, is "bearing fruit in old age." Four new members have recently been received, the pastor has been greeted by large and attentive congregations, and thus has great reason to thank God and take courage."

Danbury :—On the 21st inst., I closed a series of meetings at Danbury, as a result of which there were four persons baptized and received into the communion of the Clark Memorial Presbyterian church.

Yours for the Master,
S. G. WALKER.

"Making Shipwrecks of Souls" :—Dr. Boyd's sermons are ever above the ordinary, but his last night's discourse was the best that has been delivered by him for many weeks. It was a clear, practicable, every-day sermon, and his words carried great force to his hearers. Members of the other churches were out in large numbers, and all were deeply impressed.—Charlotte News.

Buckhorn School House:—Rev. P.R. Law has just closed a meeting here on the outskirts of the Big-Rockfish congregation, which resulted in the revival of the Christians in the vicinity. The congregations increased in size to the end. All regretted that other engagements compelled the preacher to close the meeting when the interest was deepening and widening. There were twelve professions nearly all of whom will unite with our church at the approaching communion the second Sabbath in the month. D. A. M.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Spartanburg :—The church here seems to be prospering. Congregations large and apparently interested. We are just about going into a new Sunday-school room built on to the back of the church. J. H. L.

Rev. W. T. Matthews :—Lately evangelist of South Carolina Presbytery, has accepted a call to the church at Pensacola, Fla., and has been dismissed by South Carolina Presbytery to the Presbytery of Florida.

Enoree Presbytery :—During the recent sessions of the Synod of South Carolina Enoree Presbytery received into its membership Rev. E. C. Murray and D. A. Todd, and dismissed Rev. C. L. Stewart to South Carolina, Presbytery, to which his pastoral charge at Piedmont, S. C., was also transferred by Synod. This gave Enoree Presbytery twenty-five ministers, entitling her to double representation in the next Assembly, provided the number of ministers is maintained. Three of these are missionaries in the foreign field.

Rev. J. E. Stevenson :—Has recently been received into Harmony Presbytery from West Lexington Presbytery, Ky., and has accepted a call to the church at Mayesville.

Lime Stone Church :—Rev. C. E. Robertson was installed pastor of Lime Stone church, Gaffney, S. C., on the 21st October, by a commission of Enoree Presbytery. The same day Messrs. J. G. Bailey and J. G. Goodlock, were installed elders, and Messrs. W. M. Thompson and W. H. Goodman deacons in that church.

VIRGINIA.

Makemie Church, Accomac C. H. :—During the last twelve months, there have been one hundred and ten additions to the churches served by the Rev. Byron Clark. The Makemie church has received seventy new members, has ordained two elders and two deacons, and has expended two thousand dollars.

Glade Spring :—Rev. G. W. Painter, missionary to China for twenty-one years, and now in this country, is making a tour of the churches in Abingdon Presbytery. On Sunday, 21st of October, he visited our church at Glade Spring and delivered two excellent lectures on the social and religious condition of China, which were thoroughly enjoyed and highly appreciated by the large congregations that assembled to hear him. Considerable enthusiasm was aroused on the subject of Foreign Missions and the people responded with a collection of fifty dollars to aid in prosecuting this grand work.—Central Presbyterian.

KENTUCKY.

Marion Church :—Has sent a call to Rev. H. Miley, and Morganfield church has called Rev. J. C. Caldwell.

Perry County :—Dr. Guerrant reports to West Lexington Presbytery, in Perry county, with fifty members. It was enrolled with the name Avawam—Southwestern Presbyterian

LOUISIANA.

An Italian Church :—New Orleans Presbytery reports work auspiciously begun for the establishment of an Italian church. At the meeting on October, 10th, Mr. C. Russo, who has been prosecuting this work, was examined in part for ordination, and the Presbytery adjourned to meet again Oct. 26th, to complete his trials, and ordain him as an evangelist, if the way be clear. On the 26th, Mr. Russo's parts of trial were sustained heartily and with commendation and she was ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry. The Italian congregation has been organized under the name First Italian Presbyterian church and worships for the present in Memorial church. Mr. Russo is himself an Italian.

Organic Union :—New Orleans Presbytery unanimously adopted the following resolution offered by Dr. J. H. Nall :

Resolved, That we do hereby express and record our decided approval of the action of the last General Assembly relative to the question of Organic Union, and, with sincere and courteous regard for brethren who hold different views, we declare our solemn conviction that this whole matter, on each phase of which the mind of the Church has been so distinctly declared, should be considered as settled, and that the church should be henceforth permitted to go forward in its work with vigor and unity, free from agitations which disturb its peace, divert attention from its great commission, and tend to permanent division among ourselves.

This probably was done as an offset to the action of the Kentucky Synod, which expressed its disapproval of the Assembly's action.

A Presbyterian minister (thirty-seven years old), who is married, and has one small child, desires to locate, at once, as pastor of a church, in a good, healthy town, or neighborhood. He is a graduate of Columbia Theological Seminary, and has been preaching for nearly six years. He preaches without notes, and is considered a good pastor. He would be pleased to open a correspondence, with a view to a call, with churches that are desirous of calling a pastor.

Please address, at once, with full particulars, REV. ROBERT M. LATIMER,

THE SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.

Virginians have a reputation, whether deserved or not, of being proud of whatever they have.

They certainly have reason to be proud of their Synod—for it is not only larger generally than our Assembly, but it is abler than the usual run of Assemblies. The recent meeting in Danville was not only largely attended, but was enlivened by two of the most stirring debates that have been heard for many years. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Kerr, of Richmond, his subject being "Obedience to Constituted Authority," based on Rom. 13 : 1.

In electing Rev. Dr. Fleming, of Lynchburg, moderator, the Synod, not only recognized, but put its mark of approval upon the importance and method of Synodical evangelism, as carried on by the committee of which Dr. Fleming is chairman.

The different secretaries were present, and gave addresses, the only one absent being brother Phillips, "the colored secretary" as he is sometimes called. Dr. Chester showed much discretion in making a brief, though comprehensive addresses.

Two of our missionaries, brothers Painter and Grinnan were present and made excellent addresses.

Dr. Campbell, representing the Virginia Bible Society, spoke, and Rev. A. P. Saunders also spoke in behalf of the Assembly's Home and School at Fredericksburg.

You can easily understand then that these many addresses consumed much time, and rendered necessary the long sessions, extending, at times, beyond midnight.

The first great debate took place upon the presentation by Dr. McIlwaine, of Hampden-Sidney College of a resolution committing the Synod to retaining Union Seminary at Hampden-Sidney, upon the condition that a railroad be built from Farmville to Hampden-Sidney and beyond.

Dr. McIlwaine supported his paper in a speech of an hour's length, during which he submitted to a general cross examination by the Synod, proving himself an expert debater and illustrating the Scripture, "A time to keep silence, and a time to speak." His speech made deep impression upon the Synod, which, however, was soon dissipated, when Dr. Moore, of the seminary, replied to him. Dr. Moore proved himself a strong debater, though it is doubtful whether he could have stood any cross-questioning, such as Dr. McIlwaine excels in. He spoke from manuscript and was not interrupted by any questions, as in the beginning he assured the Synod that he was frightened at facing such a body.

After such a confession it would have been the refinement of cruelty to add anything to his embarrassment.

His speech abounded in beautiful passages, inapt sayings, and at times in threadbare sophistries—though in the latter respect he was not alone, for each speaker on either side did much special pleading.

Altogether, Dr. Moore's speech was the speech of Synod, being in excellent spirit and carrying with it the conviction that he, at least, was in dead earnest.

He was followed by Dr. Kerr, Dr. Hoge, and S. T. Martin and others. The debate was brilliant and long, yet its end was melancholy, if not ridiculous—for the Synod finally laid all papers on the table, leaving the matter where it began.

The next important question before the body was a paper prepared by Dr. H. M. White and Dr. A. C. Hopkins, members of the staid and conservative Presbytery of Winchester.

It related to the preaching in our churches of what are known as lay-evangelists.

The paper was carefully drawn up with our Book of Church Order as a basis, so that however nauseous the dose, all were compelled to swallow it.

The debate lasted for nearly five hours, and the vote, owing to the peculiar character of the paper, was practically unanimous. A subsequent examination of the paper however, shows that it will really amount to nothing, for none of the much abused lay-evangelists ever come to any particular church, but always to a union meeting,

The Synod and Presbytery can forbid sucmen entering any pulpit, but that prohibition does not prevent me and my people in our private capacity, from going to the meetings and doing what we can to bring sinners to Christ.

After listening to the speeches in favor of the paper, one was reminded that some powerful engines run on a very narrow gauge. In the Presbyterian church there are two classes of men: One who believes that the great end of life is to bring men to Christ without very much regard to the manner of bringing them—while the other seeks to bring men to Christ, but with them rigid adherence to the constitution is above all else.

It is more than probable that our Lord regards a soul as of more value than many constitutions.

The Synod finally adjourned on Saturday, having been characterized by long sessions, brilliant debates, and unfailing Christian courtesy.

The moderator presided with firmness and courtesy, though he was tried, as few moderators are. The only criticism of the Synod would be that they spent too much time on high constitutional points, and too little time on the great subjects of Home and Foreign Missions. The hospitality of Virginia was elegantly dispensed by the people of Danville, and large crowds in constant attendance attested the general interest in the meeting of Synod in their city.

Next year we meet in Charlestown, West Virginia, the extreme western border of our Synod. J. R. BRIDGES.

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTHER.

The fate of this noble young woman does not appear to be made very clear from the brief record in the eleventh chapter of Judges. A depraved love of the sensational and tragic, doubtless causes us to lean toward the theory that the beautiful young maiden on the very threshold of womanhood was slain by her misguided father, and her body burned on the altar as an offering to God. A touching story that will move almost any one to tears, and called a tradition, though perhaps of recent origin, is used by one of the secret fraternities in conferring one of its degrees. It pictures the father drawing a mantle over the daughter's face that he may not witness the signs of agony when the fatal knife is thrust into her bosom, and the maiden, refusing to die with covered face, as a criminal, but willing to gaze upon the father's hand as he plunges it into her obedient and loving heart. He yields, and with an agonizing effort, kisses his child, looks into her face, and makes the fatal thrust.

This story may seem too beautiful to spoil, but it has not the shadow of a foundation in the Scripture narrative—nor has any theory that implies the sacrifice of the daughter's life. Let us see.

1. King James' translators SEEM to sanction it from the form of Jephthah's vow in verse 31st. But they give us in the margin the alternative of OR for AND, which entirely relieves the difficulty of supposing that her life was spared. The Hebrew vow is in several places so translated.

2. But there are several things in the text which go to show that instead of her being offered as a burnt offering she was dedicated to God's service in a life of perpetual celibacy. This to a Hebrew woman of that period was a far greater sacrifice, both on her part and that of her father, than we in this day can appreciate. To be without posterity was reckoned one of the greatest misfortunes that could befall either man or woman. Hence she says nothing about bewailing her life being cut short, as would have been expected, had she been about to die, but she bewails that she cannot be à wife, meaning doubtless that to her there is no hope of motherhood. Otherwise why should she have chosen the solitude of the mountains, and the exclusive companionship of her own sex for her lamentations? Why should not men be witnesses of a woman's sorrow at the prospect of death?

3. We are told, verse 40th, that the daughters of Israel went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah. But the word rendered lament is nowhere else so translated. To praise would be a far better rendering. The margin says to talk with. This annual convocation of the Israelitish maidens is far more reasonable under the supposition that she was still alive to appreciate the honor they bestowed.

4. The theory of perpetual celibacy is further strengthened by the fact that immediately after the statement that Jephthah performed his vow, it is added "And she knew no man." The rendering of the R. V., "And she had not known man," besides being grammatically incorrect, foists upon the text a needless repitition that is out of accord with its brevity. If she had been slain and burnt, why add that she had not known man, when it had already been stated that she had spent two months in seclusion bewailing her virginity? But if she still lived, there is a manifest propriety in stating that she continued to keep her vow of celibacy by remaining a virgin to the end of life.

5. Jephthah knew that human sacrifices were not only forbidden, but utterly hateful in the eyes of God, and that no vow that he could have made would have justified him in taking his daughter's life. And knowing this he would be only too glad to avail himself of the opportunity to save her. He did not live in an age of spiritual darkness so great as to account for so gross a perversion of God's law. The protest against the wickedness of Eli's sons, not far from this time shows that the worship of the tabernacle was maintained with some degree of purity. The piety of Samuel and his parents show that in this very period of Israel's history the way of righteousness was known. Jephthah's answer to the Ammonites shows that he was acquainted with the law, with which the history of his people was associated. And we are told in verse 29th that he was under the influence of the Spirit of God at the time the vow was made, and therefore must have had some knowledge of Jehovah and His law.

6. The divine approval is placed upon his life, when his name is enrolled in the catalogue of the faithful, Heb. 11: 32, and if he had been guilty of a crime so abominable as offering human sacrifice to God, we should expect that somewhere a limitation to the approval of his life would have been expresed.

If it be said that the failure of the Bible to approve of vows of celibacy is an obstacle in the way of adopting the theory advocated in this article, it may be said in reply, that difficulty in climbing a little mound would afford a poor reason for attempting to scale a steep and lofty precipice, when only one alternative had to be chosen.

Nor does the supposition, that Jephthah's daughter was permitted to live, detract in the least from the beauty of character displayed in her noble sacrifice of her wishes and plans to those of her father. It is still one of the most beautiful instances of filial devotion, and noble self-sacrificing love to be found in the annals of the world, and therein she sets an example worthy of being followed by children of the present age.

THE SYNOD OF ARKANSAS

The Synod of Arkansas met in Batesville on Oct. 23rd, at 7.30 p. m., and closed its sessions on Friday evening, 26th inst.

Harmony and earnestness were characteristic features. The result was business speedily and satisfactorily transacted.

The opening sermon was preached by T. C. Barret, D. D., the retiring moderator, from Matt. 13 : 58, "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." J. C. Williams, of Ouachita Presbytery was chosen moderator, and J. R. Howerton, D. D., temporary clerk.

There were in attendance twenty-one preachers and eleven ruling elders. The subjects that mainly engrosed Synod's attention were (1) Arkansas College, (2) Home Missions, (3) Sabbath-school work, (4) Foreign Missions.

Arkansas College, of course, received the usual commendations, but the Synod has now begun to make an aggressive effort to raise a permanent endowment, which fact was particularly encouraging. One of the resolutions that our people will be particularly interested in, was to the effect that $1,200 be raised by our churches to meet expenses of the current year. Rev. A. G. Jones still has this work in hand and will notify each church of the amount expected from each.

One afternoon was devoted to the discussion of our Home Mission work. One encouraging feature appeared in the fact that more of our churches are now supplied with preaching than is usual, though there is great need of more laborers, If aggressive work is to be done among the vast unexplored regions of our State. The Sabbath-school discussion developed unusual interest in this work, which is hereafter to occupy the Synod's attention on the afternoon of the second day.

Almost an entire evening was devoted to Foreign Missions, The fact that the Synod was holding its sessions in a church that is now supporting a missionary added interest to the occasion. One evening was spent in services commemorative of that eminent servant of God, I. J. Long, D. D,

The forenoon of Friday was spent in visiting the College. Synod requests each church hereafter to send up 10 cents per member with which to defray expenses of all representatives. It is hoped that this equitable arrangement will secure a larger attendance.

Rev. George Summey, D.D., was present and gave an interesting account of the condition and work of our South Western University in Clarksville, Tenn.

A special committee, with S. C. Alexander, D. D., as chairman, was appointed to employ a Synodical Colporteur, if, after correspondence with Dr. Hazen, the way be clear. It was a matter of regret that none of our Secretaries could be with us.

F. M. Gregg, D. D, of the Episcopal church (Diocese of Chicago) addressed the Synod on the National Children's Home Society. Synod heartily approved this good work and commended it to our people. Our people were urged to greater liberality to the work for the negroes; expressed its approval of the Richard Allen Institution, Pine Bluff, and of the Potter School in Cotton Plant.

The next session of Synod will be held in Malvern on October 23rd, 1894 at 7.30 p. m.

R. B. WILLIS,
Stated Clerk.

A COMMON-PLACE STORY OF SUFFERING AND PAIN.

MY DEAR PRESBYTERIAN :—Feeling that I have an hereditary right to relieve my feelings through your columns, I beg you will kindly listen a few moments while I tell you a common-place story of every-day suffering and pain :

"Sunday morning I entered my kitchen to be surprised at the sight of my usually cheerful cook, crouched in a chair weeping bitterly, while blood streamed from an ugly cut on her lip, her whole ill clad frame quivering with pain; as soon as she could speak for sobbing, she told me that on Friday she gave her husband all her week's wages to buy some clothing for herself and food for her children, she saw nothing more of him till Sunday morning he came home, money gone, no clothes, no food. When she asked him about it, he replied with curses, striking her in the mouth, that what she made was his. This woman has been in my employ four months, she is faithful, honest, goodnatured and willing, but very untidy, slow and ignorant, she would just as soon serve a beefsteak in a soup tureen as not; she has a good character and is married to a worthless fellow, who works only enough to get money to drink and gamble with; when he can get her hard earned wages he doesn't work at all. Standing there by her, she looked up at me with hopeless misery in her streaming eyes, "Dere is dem five little children at home, and not even a piece of bread for my poor baby, not a stick of wood to keep them a fire, and dey naked—right now." Her wages are only $1.00 per week, with her ignorance, untidiness and slow ways, she is not worth any more, as wages are here; in the one wretched room that she calls "home," there are five mouths, eternally hungry, to be filled, five human children to be clothed, and kept from freezing, house rent to be paid, even for that miserable shelter, bedding to be provided, not to mention her own clothing, nor considering the time she may be sick, and that small income cease. All this fall, in the chilly mornings, through rain and frost she has walked a mile to her work, her shivering

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson VII.

Nov. 18th.—The Sermon on the Mount.

(Luke vi. 20-31. Commit vss. 27-31.)

Golden Text. As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. —Luke vi. 31.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Matthew says He went up into a mountain (v. 1.) Luke that He came down from the mountain and stood in the plain. There is, however, no discrepancy. The explanation is in the locality, and in the greater detail of Luke. Luke tells us (vs. 12) that He went up into a mountain to pray and in the morning called His disciples to Him and chose the Twelve. He then came down to "a level place"—which is on the mountain, but not on the peaks, or "Horns," where He had retired—and delivers the discourse. Matthew not having mentioned the choice of the Twelve at this point, gives the more general statement, that "He went up into a mountain." So with the attitude. He "stood" while the multitudes were coming to Him for healing (Luke), but "sat" while delivering the discourse (Matthew), which accords with His custom (Luke iv. 20).

There are many differences in the two reports of the discourses. Matthew's report is much longer. The differences are chiefly these: (1) Matthew gives eight beatitudes: Luke four beatitudes and eight "woes;" (2) Luke's beatitudes and woes are a personal address to the disciples; Matthew's are in the form of general statements, only coming to a personal address in vs. 11; (3) Matthew retains many features especially appropriate to a Jewish audience, as the interpretation of the law in vss. 17-38; Luke only gives the principles of universal application found in that interpretation.

Which is the more correct? Both contain nothing but Christ's teaching. Matthew may contain some things not uttered at this time, or that were given in private explanations to to the disciples.

As to the scope and purpose of the discourse: With the choice of the Twelve, we have the kingdom organized. This is the manifesto, or statement of principles, on which the kingdom is based. It does not contain the full gospel. That was impossible until after Christ's death and resurrection. "The discourse tells men what citizenship in the kingdom is; it is from another hill-top near Jerusalem that men must learn how to obtain that citizenship." (M. B. Riddle, in Sunday School Times.)

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: (1.) The beatitudes—the blessings of the children of the kingdom in spite of external adversity, vss. 20-23; (2.) The woes of the prosperous who refuse obedience to the kingdom, vss. 24-26; (3.) Love the governing principle of the kingdom, culminating in the Golden Rule, vss. 27-31.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation.

Vs. 20. On his disciples. It is not the poor in general, nor all the hungry nor the sorrowing, who are pronounced blessed, but those whose temporal adversity had led them to feel their spiritual need, or those who so felt their spiritual need as to give up all to follow Christ, and so become poor, hungry, bereaved and persecuted. These beatitudes are therefore, not to be considered as parallel to those in Matthew. They, with their corresponding "woes" are all amplifications of Matthew's eighth beatitude, the "persecuted," and have reference to the external state of Christ's followers. They, however, are based upon the broader and more spiritual principles that were first enunciated to the multitudes as recorded in Matthew,

Ye poor. Christ came in a time of bitter poverty. The rich were few, and, in most cases, retained their riches by compromise with the wicked who were in authority, or acquired them by extortion. Christ would have few recruits from this class. Then in a time of persecution the rich had too much to lose (Matt. xix. 23, 24) To the neglected classes Christ came, and to the poor the gospel was preached (Matt. xi. 5). This is still the test of the Spirit of Christ in a Church.

Vs. 21. Hunger. Physical hunger is meant as external poverty above. Their willingness to be hungry (1 Cor. iv. 11; 2 Cor. xi. 27) showed the earnestness of their spiritual purpose.

Weep. The reference is to the sorrows that brought them to seek Christ, or to the sorrows that His service brought upon them.

Vs. 22. Hate—Separate—reproach—cast out your name as evil. All referring to the state of persecution into which confession of Christ would bring them, (Matt. v. 10, 11). Compare John ix. 22, 34; xvi. 2.

Vss. 20-23. Kingdom of God.....filled..... laugh... rejoice....reward great in heaven. These are the spiritual compensations for their earthly afflictions. They were not all future consolations. The kingdom of God and its blessings was already theirs (Luke xvii. 21;) filling their hearts with a satisfaction that mere temporal blessings could not bestow (Matt. v. 6; John iv. 14). While the promise of future joy to the mourner (Ps. cxxvi. 5; John xvi. 20), and of heavenly reward (Matt. xxv. 21, 34-36), was even now a source of joy.

Vs. 24. Woe unto you that are rich....full ....laugh....speak well of you. A solemn warning to those to whom much is given that of them shall much be required. And that if they are satisfied with these things, and use them for selfish enjoyment rather than for the good of mankind and the glory of God, they will find themselves without even a drop of water to cool their tongues (Luke xvi. 24-26).

Vs. 27. Love your enemies The principle of the kingdom is now unfolded. The opposition of the world is not to be disarmed by compromise, but by kindness. The constraining motive to this is elsewhere given (vss. 35, 36; Matt. vi. 12, 14).

Vs. 29. To him that smiteth thee, etc. The extreme limit to which love is expected to go; to be literally fulfilled when love demands it and when the ends of love can be reached by it. There is little danger of our fulfilling it too literally.

Vs. 30. Give to every one that asketh. The spirit of Christian giving, that again must be modified in practice only at the demands of love. Giving that injures the recipient is not Christian charity.

Vs. 41. As ye would. The proper rule of all our own actions—not a law that we are to lay down for others. To make this misapplication of the Golden Rule robs it of its gold by making selfishness instead of love its underlying principle. Rightly applied it would revolutionize the world.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson involving the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. Poverty and riches.
   - Neither to be desired in itself, Prov. xxx. 7-9.
   - Riches may be a blessing, Gen. xxiv. 35; Job. xlii. 12.
   - But not to be trusted in, because—
     - a. Uncertain, Prov. xxiii. 5; 1 Tim. vi. 17.
     - b. Unsatisfying, Eccl. v. 10, 11; vi. 1, 2.
     - c. Corrupting, Deut. viii. 11-14; Eccl. v. 13,
     - d. Bringing spiritual poverty, Prov. xiii. 7.
     - e. Cannot be taken with us at death, Ps. xlix. 16, 17; Luke xii. 20.
   - To be used for God, Matt. vi. 19-21; xix. 21; Luke xvi. 9-11; Luke xii. 21.
   - Poverty to be endured—
     - a. With contentment, Phil. iv. 11, 12.
     - b. With trust in God, Matt. vi. 31, 32.
   - Poverty for Christ's sake a blessing, Luke vi. 20-22; Matt. xix. 29.
   - Voluntary poverty not obligatory on the Christian, Acts v. 4.
2. Love the fulfilling of the law.
   - a. The objects of love—
     - Thy neighbor, Lev. xix. 18.
     - The man in need, Luke x. 37.
     - The extreme limit, vs. 27.
   - b. The fruits of love—
     - Doing good, vs. 27; Gal. vi. 10 Heb, xiii. 16.
     - Blessing, vs. 28; Rom. xii. 14; 1 Cor. iv. 12.
     - Praying, vs. 28; Luke xxiii. 34; Acts vii. 60.
     - Yielding, vs. 29; Is. l. 6; 1 Cor. vi. 7.
     - Giving, vs. 30; Deut. xv. 8; Prov. xxi. 26.
   - c. The test of love, vs. 31; Matt. vii. 12; Matt xxii. 39.
   - d. The pattern of love, John xv. 12.

Sixth Step. To prayerfully apply to your own heart the teachings of God's word as to the right attitude towards, and use of, poverty and wealth; and to interpret by your own life Christ's law of love; this is the true learning of the lesson before us.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Get the scene vividly before the minds of scholars; the multitude filling the level place below the topmost "Horns" of the mountain; Jesus curing many, and then taking His seat to teach. Draw out from your scholars the fundamental proposition of Christ's teaching; the superiority of spiritual to temporal blessings; and the fundamental law of His kingdom—the law of love. Apply these two principles as far as you have time, by the use of the Bible Readings.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF OCT. 25.

108 Covetousness, Amos viii. 5.

109. Without State laws, greed of gain leads men to work seven days in the week to their own injury and to the oppression of others.

110. Sabbath laws are consistent with religious liberty (and necessary to it): (a) Because they do not enforce a religious observance of the day; (b) Because they secure to every man the freedom of the day, that he may worship God according to his own conscience.

Note. These questions, requiring independent thought, we have counted as correct all answers that really caught the spirit of the question, however expressed. Correct answers have been received as follows:

Beatrice T. McEachern, 108, 109.
Bettie Overcash, 108, 109, 100.
Chas. E. McMillan, 108, 109, 110.

NEW QUESTIONS.

113. Give an O. T. instance of loving one's enemies.

114. Give an O. T. instance of meekness under cursing.

115. Give two examples from the O. T. of obedience to the Golden Rule.

body clad with one, unlined calico waist. As I stood talking to her, trying to comfort her in her misery and pain, helping her practically first and then trying to advise and guide her, she said "Pears like to me God ought to save us women any how, we has to suffer so in dis world."

The misery of this story is, that it is so very common. All over our country there are thousands of just such cases, little children dependent upon those whose ignorance debars them from living wages, or whose vicious laziness renders them a curse to humanity. Within call of my voice, and of yours there is destitution, misery, ignorance and vice enough to keep every Christian worker in the South busy.

Throughout our land we organize Foreign Mission Societies, we take missionary literature, we invite returned missionaries to lecture to us, and do our level best to work up an interest in the barbaric inhabitants of Some-where-else. We grow cold with horror at hearing of the "baby-towers" of China, where the superfluous child is put to die, and gladly and rightly send those who will teach the miserable, half-starved parents that "where God sends a 'possum, right there He plants a 'simmon tree," or words to that effect, how much do we give to these naked black bodies at our door?

Our little children work with willing hands, deny themselves with Christ-like patience to give their pennies to build a boat for the Congo. We send ministers and teachers to those blacks on the banks of the great river, occasionally we offer up a sacrifice in their behalf, in the shape of a noble life laid down "for Jesus sake." My friends, the Congo rises in the southern part of the United States, and rolls its dark current through the length and breadth of our land, we need no boat to reach those who dwell on its banks, in huts full of dirt, and poverty, ignorance, superstition, disease and children, we need only to put on our hats and go down to Maria's house. L. P. R.

Rockingham, N. C., Oct. 30th, 1894.

To The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Societies Of Wilmington Presbytery,

Please take notice that a conference of delegates of your societies will be held in the rooms of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, Monday and Tuesday afternoons, November 26th and 27th, at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Randolph, so long our missionary in China and Japan, will be with you. A reception will be given her Monday night. This conference is called during welcome week that you may have low railroad rates. Let all delegates notify Mrs. B. F. Hall, whether they can come. Come and have a good meeting. Surely we will.

Your friend,
A. D. McCLURE,
Agent Foreign Missions, Wilmington Presbytery.

Concord Presbytery.

Concord Presbytery held an adjourned meeting in Greensboro, N. C, Oct. 24th, 1894. Rev. W. C. Alexander, was received as a member of this Presbytery from Orange Presbytery.

A call from Concord First church was presented and placed in his hands and accepted by him. A commission consisting of Revs. J. B. Shearer, D. D., J. M. Wharey, D. D., and R. V. Lancaster, was appointed to instal him pastor of that church; Dr. Shearer to preach and preside, Dr. Wharey to charge the people and Rev. R.V. Lancaster to charge the pastor.

An adjourned meeting at Statesville, Nov. 19th, 1894, at 7.30 p. m., was appointed.

STATED CLERK.

Mecklenburg Presbytery.

At the request of Revs. Chalmers Moore, John H. Boyd, D. D., and J. C. Burroughs, an elder of the Second Presbyterian church, I hereby call Mecklenburg Presbytery to meet in the Second Presbyterian church, Charlotte, N. C., on the 12th of November, 1894, at 12 o'clock m., to consider: 1st. The dissolution of pastoral relations between Rev. C. M. Moore, and Hopewell church, and 2nd. To take all necessary steps to send him to the "Bryson City" field.

E. NYE HUTCHISON,
Moderator.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Kinston was visited by a destructive fire on the afternoon of the 5th inst. Four dwellings and the plant of the Kinston Lumber Company, excepting one dry kiln, were destroyed. The total loss, $30,000. Insurance, $11,000.

Joseph G. Brown was elected President of the Citizen's National Bank of Raleigh.

DOMESTIC.

Dr. Talmage has arrived in New York after a tour around the world.

Fifty-seven Chinese in San Francisco have registered and intend to vote.

Cyclists will be pleased to note that the high grade wheels in 1895 will be reduced. The Stearns has been the first to make an announcement of reduction. It has been reduced, for 1895, to $100.

A disastrous accident occurred at Terrell, Texas, on the 3rd inst. An awning, crowded with people to witness a circus parade, collapsed. Four persons were fatally crushed, and one hundred injured.

On the 5th inst., fire was discovered in the holds of seven steamers, loading with cotton, at Savannah, at one time.

There was a heavy snow in New York on the fifth.

The cotton crop in Texas is so large that the farmers will leave thousands of bales ungathered in the fields.

FOREIGN.

The Czar passed away quietly on the 1st inst., at 2.10 p. m. His funeral, will take place between Nov. 16th and Nov. 20., and the wedding of the new Czar, Nicholas II., and Princess Alix will take place a few days afterward.

In view of the importance of the religious question in Russia the following remark, attributed to Nicholas II., is especially interesting: "I am a pious Christian, but my belief in the Saviour does not entitle me to persecute others on account of their faith."

A new Cabinet has been appointed in Spain.

The Synod of Alabama will meet in the Central Church of Montgomery, Nov. 20th 1894, at 7 o'clock p. m.

An Elders' and Deacons' Convention will be held in the same church, on the night preceding the meeting of Synod.

If one hundred representatives and visitors attend the meeting, reduced rates in returning will be granted by the Southern Passenger Association to all who procure certificates from ticket agent at the points where they purchase tickets in going.

W. I. SINNOTT,
Stated Clerk Synod of Alabama.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

On October 31st, 1894, in Greensboro, N. C., at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. W. C. Denny, by Rev. S. O Hall, Mr. ROBERT O. GAMBLE and Miss SERENA M. DENNY.

On October 29th, 1894, at Vidalia, Ga., at the residence of the bride's father, Elder R. F. McIntosh, by Rev. M. MacGillivray, of Mt. Vernon, Ga., Mr. W. D. COURSEY, M. D., and Miss SARAH C. McINTOSH. All of Vidalia.

On October 17th, 1894, Wednesday evening, at the home of the bride's father, in Wilmington, N. C., by Rev. A. D. McClure, Mr. WILLIAM H. McEACHEN and Miss MARY ELIZABETH DAVIS.

DIED.

☞We publish free 10 lines of Obituary Notices, of any kind—Tributes of Respect, Resolutions of Sabbath-schools, Ladies' Societies, &c. And we charge for over 10 lines at rate of 10 cents per line. The cost may be calculated by counting the words in the manuscript, and allowing seven words to the line.

Suddenly on the 26th of October last, Mrs. FANNIE WHITTED, wife of Mr. James McK. Whitted, of Bladen county. Four children, one an infant, are now without a mother and the husband mourns the loss of one very dear to him. Beth Car church is again bereaved, but we mourn not as those who have no hope, for those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.

PASTOR.

At his home in Lumber Bridge, October 26th, A. J. HALL, aged 35 years. He had been a loving and loyal member of Lumber Bridge church about two years. His growth in grace was a subject of general remark. He was an unusally exemplary young man. A useful member of the community is felt to be gone and a void made, hard to fill. He died assuring his pastor he was trusting in his Redeemer. P.

At Shannon, October 15th. Mrs. CYNTHIA ANN, wife of W. H. Hall. She had long been a faithful member of the church. Though unable to express her readiness to meet her Lord as the end drew near and came, her deep piety and her godly life furnish ample ground for the conviction that she entered into rest. May the Lord comfort her bereaved husband and other friends and kindred. P.

On the 14th of October at his home in Rutherfordton, N. C., JOS. C. ERWIN, in the 30th year of his age, after an illness of many months. He was a member of the Presbyterian church in his native town, and died in the faith of the gospel. His last words to his wife were, "The blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed me from all sin." He leaves a wife and two children, an affectionate father, brother and sisters to mourn their loss. Rest in peace. G. A. H.

Near his home at Thermal City, N. C., on the 17th of October, after a few hours of inexpressible suffering, Dr. W. D. JOHNSTON, in the 44th year of his age. While returning from a visit with his family, he was suddenly attacked with something like meningitis, was taken to a small house on the road, and after an hour spoke no more. Dr. Johnston was a faithful physician, a kind and tender husband and father; as modest as a woman, yet firm in his convictions of what was right. The little church at Weaver's has lost a valued member, the community, a good citizen and physician, the Sunday-school, a zealous friend, and his family, a wife and seven children, their earthly protector and support. The God of love take them under his wings. G. A. H.

Concord Presbytery will hold an adjourned meeting in Statesville, N. C., Monday, Nov. 19th, at 7.30 p. m. A full attendance is desired. STATED CLERK.

Orange Presbytery stands adjourned to meet at Mebane, N. C., on Friday, Nov. 16th, 1894, at 9:30 o'clock, a. m.

Rheumatism Twenty Years.

HOLLAND PATENT, N. Y., Oct. 8th, 1894.

Gentlemen: Some time ago you asked me to allow you to use my letter as a testimouial; at that time I was not willing as I wished to test the matter still further. Nearly four months ago I rented an Electropoise of you. I had so little faith in it, that I kept it a profound secret. I used it faithfully, following directions carefully. I now wish to say that I have been benefitted more than I deemed possible in my most extravagant dreams. My disease was rheumatism of over twenty years' standing, commencing gradually and growing worse from year to year. During the last year it had advanced very rapidly; my joints were stiff and sore; my hands were numb; it became difficult to raise my feet from the floor; I was never free from pain; a good night's sleep was "the exception and not the rule." To-day I can go up and down stairs as easily as I could thirty years ago; can walk with ease; the numbness and soreness has gone from my hands and I sleep well. To be sure I sometimes feel twinges of pain and realize that my old enemy is not entirely routed, but I am reasonably sure that I shall be cured in time. If this letter can be of any use to you, I cheerfully place it at your disposal. Yours truly,

MRS. HELEN M. POTTER.

FOR THE FAMILY.

LOVE LIGHTENS LABOR.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn,
And thought with a nervous dread,
Of the piles of clothes to be washed, and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed;
The meals to get for the men in the field,
The children to fix away
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and churned—
And all to be done this day.

It had rained in the night, and all the wood
Was as wet as it could be;
There were puddings and pies to bake, besides
A loaf of cake for tea.
And the day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily, as she said,
"If maidens but knew what good wives know,
They would be in no haste to wed."

"Jenny, what think you I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well;
And a flush crept up to his bronzed brow,
And his eyes half bashfully fell;
"It was this," he said, and coming near,
He smiled, and stooping down
Kissed her cheeks—"'Twas this, that you were the best
And dearest woman in the town!"

The farmer went back to the field, and the wife,
In a smiling and absent way,
Sang snatches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day;
And the pain in her head was forgot, and the clothes
Were white as the foam of the sea;
Her bread was light, and her butter was sweet
And as golden as it could be.

"Just think!" the children all called in a breath,
"Tom Wood has run off to sea!
He wouldn't, we know, if he only had had
As happy a home as we."
The night came down, and the good wife smiled
To herself as she softly said,
"'Tis so sweet to labor for those we love,
It's not strange that maids will wed!"

Love in Domestic Life.

Love is supposed to be the one foundation necessary for the firm building up of domestic happiness. The question arises, Is this true?

Years ago the writer knew a man and a woman who made a love-match. They were deeply, entirely, faithfully in love with each other, and during a score of years of wedded life they so remained. But there was neither peace nor comfort in their domicile. The wife neither knew nor cared to learn how to make the most of their modest income. Debt was hung around her husband's neck till it weighed him to the earth. He felt like a felon dragging a ball and a chain. While himself a man of strict integrity and fastidious refinement, he was often forced to dodge round corners like the renowned Dick Swiveller, in order to elude duns and creditors. When he returned home from the office, weary and spent, he often had personally to cook the dinner, and he always had to cut out the children's frocks and help to make them. This is not a fancy, but is an over-true sketch.

Yet never, in the twenty years, did he cease to love the pretty peach-blossom creature he had married. Faded and washed out, she was always beautiful in his loyal eyes. And never, for one instant, though she fretted and cried, and spoiled dinners, and could not sew, and ran up bills for him to pay, did she cease to love him. On her death-bed she murmured, "You have been as good as an angel, John!"

It was not an exaggerated statement. An angel could have been no more patient, no more gentle, no more tender and kind.

In due course John found another mate. She was a middle-aged widow, a woman with faculty. She could manage affairs; her dinners were perfect; her husband's life was a dream of common-place, material comfort. He prospered exceedingly under her regime, and was "known in the gates among the elders of the land." Nobody seeing the well-dressed, well-brushed, well-fed gentleman, and, remembering his former experience, could avoid a mental congratulation of him.

Yet he never "loved" Joan, and he mourned Esther till the last hour of his life. Who can explain this problem? Love must be the all in all after all.—Selected.

Princess Pudding.—Two-thirds cup of butter, melted, one cup sugar, one large cup flour, three eggs, one-half teaspoon baking powder. Steam two hours.

Things Useful.

That white and delicately tinted book bindings may be cleaned by rubbing the covers with a soft, perfectly fresh piece of chamois skin, dipped in powdered pumice stone.

To clean a wicker chair it is best to use tepid soapsuds made with some good white soap, into which put a large pinch of salt. Then, after washing the whole chair, rinse and dry carefully. A fine polish may be added with a flannel cloth and a tiny bit of oil.

Exterminator for ants and cockroaches: Put two pounds of alum in from three to four quarts of boiling water, and as soon as it is dissolved and while very hot apply it with a brush to every spot, joint or crack where the vermin are likely to appear. Use it on pantry shelves, baseboards and on kitchen floors.

"Angel's Food": Beat very stiff the whites of ten eggs; sift together twice, one-half pound of powdered sugar, five ounces of pastry flour, one even teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and add to the eggs, stirring very gently with a wooden spoon; sprinkle one-half teaspoonful of vanilla powder to it and fill in the regular angel food tins. Soak these moulds in cold water before using; rinse them out and while still damp fill with batter. Bake for three-quarters of an hour and when baked turn moulds upside down. Never grease nor line the moulds with paper; just have them damp and the cakes will fall out when cold. Frost very thin with a delicate, flavored icing.

CROSS-GRAINED, sour, irritable, so that the whole world seems wrong. That's the way you feel when your liver is inactive. You need Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets to stimulate it and correct it, and clear up your system for you. You won't mind the taking of them—they're so small and so natural in their effects. All that you notice with them is the good that they do.

In the permanent cure of Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Indigestion, Sour Stomache, Dizziness, Sick or Bilious Headaches, and every liver, stomach, or bowel disorder, they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or the money is returned.

Don't tinker at your Catarrh with unknown medicines. It's risky and dangerous. You may drive it to the lungs. Get the Remedy that has cured Catarrh for years and years — Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. The makers guarantee it to cure, or benefit, in the worst cases.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

JESUS WAS ONCE A LITTLE CHILD.

Jesus was once a little child,
A little child like me;
Was cradled in His mother's arms,
And sat upon her knee.

Once He was just the age I am,
And was as helpless, too;
He used to sleep and walk and speak,
Just as all children do.

And yet, though He was once a child,
He is the God of all,
And angel hosts before his throne,
In lowly worship fall.

And why was it he chose to be
A child so poor and weak?
It was that I might learn from Him
How blessed are the meek.

It was that I might learn from Him
My parents to obey,
And like the child of Nazareth,
Grow holier every day.

Hunting for Mother.

My! Did you ever see such red, angry cheeks, such flashing eyes, and such a tight little frown as Rosanna shows? And all because mother will not let her go out and play in the hot mid-day sun, when she has been rather ill.

"I think I might go. It's mean I can't go. I wish I was big, and didn't have anybody to keep me," cried the angry little girl.

"Do you wish you didn't have me?" asked mother, sorrowfully.

Rosanna hung her little curly head, but she was still looking angry and sour, and did not say anything.

"Very well," said mother, "you must lie down now, but you won't have me any more to-day."

Rosanna looked rather anxious, but mother did not seem angry. She softly drew off the shoes and stockings, arranged the pillow in the crib-bed, kissed her little girl's cheek, and went out.

But when Rosa waked up, there was no mother. She tried to put on her shoes and stockings herself, but the heel would keep coming in the toes' place, and the seam always turned up in front; so she gave it up.

There is no mother at lunch, no mother all the afternoon, no mother when the long shadows began to fall across the grass, no mother at dinner; and poor little Rosanna felt a lump in her throat, and wanted to cry more than she wanted to eat soup. She dared not ask, for fear it would be found out that she had driven dear mother away; but as soon as dinner was over she slipped down off her high chair, and wandered out into the yard, where it was growing dark, and she could look up and see the stars shining through the trees.

But what was that white thing on the bench by the end door? Could it, O, could it be mother? The little girl sprang forward, and was clasped in mother's arms and held close to her breast.

"O, mother, mother!" she sobbed; "where have you been? I thought maybe God had taken you to heaven, and I felt so bad."

"I have only been spending the day at Uncle John's," said mother, softly; "but I am glad to get back to my baby."

And now that Rosanna knew how it felt to be without mother, she thought she wouldn't mind what that mother told her to do or not to do, just so she could always see the sweet light shining in her eyes.—Sunbeam.

A Child's Idea of Prayer.

Little Nellie, who was only four years old, no sooner saw work laid aside than she ran to her mother's knee and claimed a seat there. Mrs. Lee lifted her to her lap, and went on busily thinking of her duties and cares, while she rocked herself and Nellie to and fro.

For a time Nellie amused herself very quietly by winding a string in and out through her fingers, but presently she began talking to herself in a low tone: "When I say my prayers, God says; 'Hark, angels, while I hear a little noise.'"

Her mother asked her what noise was that.

"A little girl's noise. Then the angels will do just so [shutting her mouth very tightly and keeping very still for a moment], till I say Amen."

Isn't this a sweet thought? I wonder if the children who read this have ever thought how wonderful it is that God always hears their prayers. He is surrounded by thousands of angels, and all praising him with their golden harps; and yet, through all the music and all the praises, he hears the softest prayer of a little child kneeling by the bedside. He must be very loving and very kind to children. We should think he would sometimes forget, and be listening to the beautiful sounds in heaven, instead of the prayer of a little child; but he never hoes. There is never too much singing nor too many praises there for him to dear a little girl's voice. Do you not wonder that children do not pray to Him much more and oftener than they do?—Selected.

Ned, "An Overcomer."

A little yellow and white farmhouse set back from the road, a big red barn behind, and a tall broad elm in front, made a pleasant picture to the gentleman who was coming up to it from the valley below. He was private tutor in a wealthy thy family about a mile from the farm, and he and his pupils had become acquainted with the little family—the mother and three boys—on the hill in the course of their rambles in the country, and a warm liking had grown up between them, for they all loved the flowers and the woods, the wild little animals running about in them, and the birds and insects.

His errand was to say that his boys, Tom and Harry Somers, were to make up a camping party a week later, and Mr. Somers had wished him to invite the Miller boys, Louis and Ned, and little Carl, to be of the company.

"It will cost about five dollars apiece," he said, "and if"—but Carl interrupted.

"O, that is just what we have all got—grandpa's Christmas to us! How nice!"

"Only one week more, remember," said Mr. Knox as he went away, and the happy boys kept saying over and over, "Only one week more too before we start!"

"Where's mamma?" called out Carl the next afternoon, rushing into the sitting-room where she usually sat.

"Hush!" said Topsy, the little colored girl, coming out of the adjoining room; "your ma's sick again; awful bad headache; she's gone to bed. What do you want?"

"Nothing—no matter," said Carl softly, "only to give her these lilies, they are so sweet," and the little boy dropped his treasures disconsolately in a heap upon the table, then ran out and threw himself down under the big tree and whistled just a wee bit to keep the tears back, for he had gone a long way with Jonas the hired man, on purpose to gather them, and now they would be all withered before she ever saw them. By-and-by Ned came along and sat down by him, and was sorry for his mamma and his little brother and for himself, too.

"Let's go and meet Louis," he said after a while, "it's most time for him to come."

So they strolled down the road toward the village, where Louis was learning to set type in the office of the village newspaper. Soon Louis came in sight, and his first question, on seeing the sober faces, was, "What's the matter?"

"O, mamma's sick again, and it's so hot! and nobody but Topsy to get supper," said Ned mournfully.

Louis looked grave. "Why didn't you go and help her then, Neddie boy?" he said.

"O, I forgot that I could! I'll go now and set the table."

"And I'll see to mamma," said Louis.

A good nurse, too, the boy made, shutting out first the glowing rays of the setting sun by a lowered shade and then a wet bandage about the hot brow, and a gentle fanning soon soothed her to sleep, sweet sleep caused by her dear boy's loving care for her.

After supper the boys went out under the dear old tree to be near mamma, and yet not so near as to waken her.

"She ought to go and see grandma and get rested," said Carl at last. "I heard old Mrs. Peters tell her so yesterday; and she said, O, I can't; I can't afford it anyway."

Louis started up, an idea had struck him. "Boys," he said, "she just must go. She keeps having these sick turns all the time; its working so much in the heat. There is one way she can afford it; we can afford it for her!"

"How?" said Ned.

"This way," said Louis, taking out his portemonnaie and slipping from it a little bit of shining gold; "this will do it—or it will help!"

"It won't take all to that go to grandma's!" said Ned.

"No," said Louis, "but you know we must have some one to do the work—see to the milk and the fruit and every thing. We can get Mrs. Foster for three dollars a week, and mamma would feel easy to leave us with her. She ought to stay a month, to get real well, and that would cost twelve dollars; and then three for going and coming would make just fifteen. Eh?"

"O, good! good!" said little Carl, jumping up. "I'll go right in and get my gold piece and"—

"Stop, Carl," said Louis, "you might wake mamma; and besides, what does Ned say?"

"I'll go off for a walk, I think," said Ned, who had risen to his feet, and whose face looked very hot and unhappy; and off he went down the green lane, and toward a quiet spot on the hillside, where was a white stone sewith a name carved on it. Louis looked after him with a smile; he understood his brother. By-and-by, leaving Carl with Topsy, he too went down the lane.

He found Ned lying on the ground beside the dear father's grave, sobbing.

"Why, Neddie boy, don't," said Louis, dropping down beside him, "I can't bear to see you feel so; I guess there will be some way—"

"O, Louis, it's not that now! It was at first, I did so want to go, and you and Carl too; but after I came here and remembered what papa said to me all alone that night, and then—O, Louis, what must he think of me not to take care of mamma first?"

"Look at the stone again, Ned—what he wanted put on it, you know: 'He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment.' He will be ever so much more glad that you want to do it now, I am sure, for you know that he told us that we must 'overcome,'"

Then the boys sat quite still with bowed heads and clasped hands, and their Father in heaven knew that a victory had been won, and that Ned was an "overcomer."—Child's Paper.

Say Soes.

Those who walk most are generally healthiest; the road to perfect health is too narrow for wheels.

Flour absorbs odors easily and should therefore not be kept where onions, fish, cheese or odorous substances are.

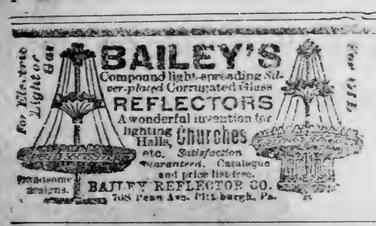
Children who Suffer from scrofulous, skin or scalp diseases, ought to be given Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for purifying the blood. For children who are puny, pale or weak, the "Discovery" is a tonic which builds up both flesh and strength. What is said of it for children applies equally to adults. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, rouses every organ into natural action, and brings back health and strength. In recovering from "grippe," or in convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, and other wasting diseases, it speedily and surely invigorates and builds up the whole system.



For all diseases caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, as Dyspepsia and Biliousness, if it doesn't cure in every case, the money is returned.

Glass globes should be dusted every day with the soft cloth that cleans the rest of the glass. Once a week they should be washed in warm soapsuds, rinsed in clear water and dried.

A Chance to Make Money

The times are hard, but there always seems to be opportunities for those who are willing to work. In the past month I have made $175 above all expenses, selling Climax Dish Washers, and have attended to my regular business besides. I never saw anything that gave as general satisfaction. One should not complain where they can make over $6 a day, right at home. I have not canvassed any, so anxious are people for Climax Dish Washers, that they send after them; any lady or gentleman can do well as I am doing, for any one can sell what every one wants to buy. I think we should inform each other through the newspapers of opportunities like this, as there are many willing to work if they knew of an opening. For full particulars, address the Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio. After you have tried the business a week, publish the results for the benefit of others.

New Series Presbyterian Sabbath-School Papers.

Greatly Enlarged, Much Improved, New Features.

Beginning with the Fourth Quarter, the Presbyterian Committee of Publication are pleased to announce that their Sabbath-School Papers will be greatly enlarged, and so much improved that no publications of like character will be more helpful in themselves or handsome in appearance—their desire being to make them in all respects so superior that it will be to the advantage of all the Schools of the Southern Presbyterian Church to use them. They have added another Quarterly to their list of publications, and no doubt the Teachers of the Infant Class will welcome it—the PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

Notwithstanding the enlargement, the terms of subscription will remain the same as heretofore, enabling them to say that they are the cheapest publications published for the Sunday Schools of any denomination. Samples sent on application.

OUR INDIANS.

Many scholars believe that the Indians have not decreased in number since the white man came to this country; but that there are more of them now than there were in the days of Capt. Smith. By tribal wars, and pestilence their numbers had been reduced until most of the continent was, at that time, an uninhabited wilderness, and there was only a fringe of population along the seaboard and on the rivers where the means of subsistence were easily obtained. Col. Mallery, of the U. S. Army, in a paper read before the American Society for the advancement of science, states that while many tribes have decreased in number, and some have even become extinct, others have increased very decidedly. He believes that the Indians have at last been brought under influences which tend to prolong and preserve life and consequently that the popular idea is erroneous which regards their extinction as merely a question of time.

By the census of 1880, there are in the United States 303,000 Indians, who in land are very rich. In the Indian Territory, 7,800 of them have a territory twice as large as South Carolina, which furnishes 500 acres of magnificent land per head. And the Indians of the northwest have also large areas of land, though it is not so fertile.

It is easy to criticise the Government; but the problem, at best an intricate and perplexing one, has been rendered more difficult of solution by the meanness and cupidity of the whites. "Unscrupulous greed has hovered about the Indian reservations, as waiting buzzards hover near the wounded creature, upon whose flesh they would fatten." Wise and kindly provisions of the Government have been thwarted by the baseness of agents, and by the encroachments of the white people. Savages, wrought up by a sense of injustice, and burning for revenge, have retaliated upon the settlers, (the guilty and the innocent alike), with cruel massacre. Then the Government sends the troops and the Indians are exterminated.

Yet in spite of this continual clash of interests, the Indians have made great advances in civilization, and many of them have been brought to Christ. Some remain savage, but most of them wear breeches instead of paint and feathers, and live in houses and send their children to school. On the second and third pages of this paper, are two selected articles which suggested this editorial. Do not be deterred from reading them by their length. For some years the hearts of the Indians have been comparatively friendly to the whites, and the work of missions has been progressing rapidly, though silently, among them. The Episcopal Church has been doing a great work in the northwest—while the Baptists and Methodists have greatly increased their membership in the Indian Territory. The Presbyterian Church reports 2,400 members in the "Territory," and that field is no longer regarded as a Foreign Mission.

TRAVELING SALESMEN.

Dear Sir:—As a travelling salesman, I think I discover one great mistake in Christians. That is in not having a representative from each church to visit the hotels and invite strangers to attend services. And in not having their church paper in the hotels for the accommodation of men who don't wish to read political newspapers on the Sabbath.

Consider this and if you think worthy, give the suggestion to your people.

A Subscriber to Your Paper.

We know several churches, which send every Sunday to the hotels and boarding house, and invite travelers to attend their services; but we are not aware of any that undertake to furnish religious reading for the Sabbath. The drummer is strongly tempted to spend his Sundays writing up his correspondence, or reading any literature that may be at hand. It would be easy to collect the church papers after they have been read by the subscribers, and we hope that some of our readers will act upon our correspondent's suggestion.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In commenting last week upon the articles contributed to the paper, no reference was made to the letter of "Old Shoe;" because it came in after the notice was written. "Old Shoe" is not alone in supposing that he perceives indications of vanity and pride in ministers. An eminent scientist when I took him to task for speaking of the vanity of preachers, assured me that he had a high opinion of ministers of the gospel and recognized that they were far above the average of men in unselfishness and purity; but his observation lead him to believe that they were peculiarly liable to vanity, which was rendered more conspicuous by their other virtues.

Surely, we do well to heed such admonitions. It is not often that we receive them. Every thoughtful person must perceive that there are peculiar influences affecting the minister, and tending to make him "think more highly of himself than he ought to think." The deference shown us by almost every one, the admiration and affection manifested by members of our churches, the flatteries of indiscreet admirers, the lack of criticism, all tend to foster self-esteem. Let us, therefore, look above these things to Jesus, and acquire the habit of measuring our worth by the standard He has given. This surely will keep us humble.

Foreign Missions: There has been an unexpected falling off in the contributions for this cause, and Dr. Chester in a card, published elsewhere, informs us that it has been necessary to borrow money to pay the salaries of our missionaries. The financial stringency is distressing, and many of us are feeling it in our own homes and business. But let us remember that it was "in a great trial of afflictions" that the poverty of the Macedonian churches "abounded unto the riches of their liberality." And let us take courage and emulate their example. Let the pastor, if he has not already done so, present the cause earnestly and fully to his people, and let every church member consider whether he cannot give something more. We are able to meet this exigency if we have love and consecration in our hearts.

"I would give everything in the world to be a Christian." The words came from the lips of an old merchant as he sat with his pastor in the back room of the store. His tone and manner indicated that he felt deeply what he was saying. Yet he was a worldly man, absorbed in his business, neglectful of the means of grace; and even impatient of his pastor's repeated efforts to engage him in conversation about the salvation of his soul. How shall we explain such a case? He was not lying; he was probably deceiving himself, like Balaam, when he cried, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and my last end be like his." At the time, evidently, he realized that his condition was hopeless and dreadful, and felt that assurance of a happy eternity would be precious. Yet these feelings were transient. They did not check the current of his worldly aspirations, nor bring him to his knees before God. He was deceiving himself, as many another has done, with the delusion that he would give anything in the world to be saved, when really he was rejecting the salvation which God offers. Dear unconverted reader, (for this article is written for such, and I pray and hope that some may read it)—Dear unconverted reader, have you any yearning to be a Christian? Do not rest satisfied, nor feel virtuous because of your aspirations. Many have gone steadily down to hell with such longings in the heart for happiness and heaven. Seek the counsel of your pastor or pious friend. Get down upon your knees, and confess your sins and ask for a heart to repent and believe.

Gen. Booth, the commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army has been in this country for some weeks, and has been receiving enthusiastic ovations in the Northern cities. In New York he was welcomed and introduced to a large mass-meeting by Hon. Chauncey Depew, and in Philadelphia by Hon. John Wanamaker. In Boston also, thousands gathered to hear him. He is represented as a feeble old man, of unassuming manner; but eloquent and powerful in speaking, because of his earnestness and simple purpose. He is still advocating the colonization scheme for the relief of the poor of London, which he set forth in his book, In Darkest England. The success of his methods with their fantastic accompaniments, should teach us that God pays more regard to simple faith, and sincerity of purpose, than to learning and wisdom. No doubt, the sensational parades and singing have gained a hearing for the army; but the good accomplished must be attributed to the loving hearts and humble faith of the ignorant soldiers.

THE REMOVAL OF UNION SEMINARY.

There is evident need of a plain statement as to the real action of the Synod of Virginia at its recent meeting concerning this important enterprise. What did the Synod of Virginia do? Many are asking this question. Many confused and obscure statements have been made. Even lucid "Rusticus" did not give the exact point of the Synod's vote.

The Synod refused by an overwhelming vote to pass the resolutions which were intended to fasten the Seminary to its present site. The Synod was asked to arrest the movement looking to the removal of the Seminary. This it declined to do, thus leaving the way for removal, if the authorities see fit, and permitting the directors of the Seminary to proceed with their investigation of other proposed sites.

This outcome may seem "melancholy if not ridiculous" to some, but it does not seem so to the Faculty of the Seminary and the Board of Directors and the Synod of Virginia. The action taken is the very action desired by the Faculty and the Board. Such is an accurate statement of the result of the Synod's vote on the question of removal. The friends of removal were perfectly satisfied with the action taken, and see in it nothing "melancholy" or "ridiculous," but rather that the Synod turned its face toward the morning for which so many of us have long been hoping.

A. R. Cocke.

INK SPOTS.

Mrs. Spencer, in a letter from Cambridge to the North Carolinian, giving an account of her visit to the graves of Lowell and Longfellow, gives her verdict in favor of the latter over the former as a poet. I think she is right in this—with the exception of the Bigelow Papers, (which abound in humor, caustic wit and satire, and are, in fact, political disquisitions in verse,) Lowell does not seem to me to reach any marked excellence as a poet, There seems no distinctive characteristic in Lowell's poetry, as in Longfellow, Bryant, or Emerson. It appears to me his poetry might have been written by anybody else that had the same intellectual power. He has written pathetic things and pretty things, but they all only rise to a certain level. He produced no really great poem, or body of poetry that charms; poetry which we return to again and again. Even admitting that, here and there, he has given an exquisite poem, the mass of his poetry does not rise high. His "Commemoration Ode" and "Centennial Ode," much praised, as they are, seem to me only a sort of glorified Fourth of July orations. America has produced no great poet, but considering the mass and variety and sweet sentiment and grace and finish of style, Longfellow seems the best exponent of what we have done in poetry.

I am sure this is not the prejudice of an intense Southerner, for I regard Mr. Lowell as the finest critic and essayist our country has produced; nor do I know any English critic his superior. I would advise all young scholars, really reading men and women, to read all of Lowell's essays. For penetration, cutting right into the heart of the matter, for bright and original sayings, exquisite imagery, poetic fancies—none equal him. I believe Steadman is right in saying a selection of apothegms and maxims could be made from Lowell's prose, which for original thought and wise teaching "would be worth more than any writing since Landor's." This same Steadman, by the way, is immeasurably below Lowell as a critic. Moses Coit Tyler is the only American who equals him in freshness of thought and vigor of phrase. Steadman seems to labor to get out what he means, Lowell gives one stroke and the work is done.

* * *

Mr. Lowell, in his poetry, went into the anti-slavery and general philanthropy business with great fervor. That sensational crank, Mr. Stead, attributes much of his enthusiasm for freedom and humanity in general to Lowell's poems in that line.

* * *

But when one considers what sort of people come to the front in our country, how our cities are governed, and how crass ignorance asserts itself in our legislation, one comes to the conclusion that we had better cease glorifying "freedom and humanity" and learn that the object of government is good laws, honest and upright people, and intelligent legislation, and address ourselves to our duties, and talk less about freedom and the blessings of unlimited suffrage.

* * *

The profoundest truth in all the universe is the existence of God, because all other truths, or facts, rest on that as their foundation—none other would have been if God did not exist. The second profoundest truth, or fact, is the resurrection of our Lord Christ, for the administration of the whole universe is in his hands as the God-Man; and the final destiny of all men, perhaps of all beings, are more or less dependent on Christ's dominion based on his resurrection. The whole attitude of the universe was changed when Christ rose and ascended to Heaven. A Power in a new form began to rule and guide the universe. The resurrection of our Lord, then is the most momentous fact, the profoundest truth since creation began. No wonder the Apostles made this the central fact in their preaching. It is foolish to talk about Christianity remaining if we discard miracles. Its very existence depends on a great miracle, the resurrection from the dead.

* * *

What gave the Apostles power was that they stood on a truth, the greatest fact. "In science, in politics, in history, in law courts, in religion your fact is imperial, no matter what else goes, your fact remains. Men preached in the power of a fact—the resurrection. They traveled the world in that power, died in that power, changed the face of the world because Christ's rising from the dead was a fact. Life to-day is manful, hopeful, helpful, courageous, prayerful, patient, because we are in a world redeemed by the fact that Christ rose from the grave, and on this fact we can so live that when the hour comes to depart we shall find the curtains lifted on no darkness, but the road aglow with the footsteps of Him who walked that way before us, and shivered all the night of death with the splendor and power of His resurrection."

"Christ walked under a shadow in His day. If one had asked at that time, 'Where are the secrets of power in the world?' Any Jew would have pointed to the old temple and said: 'There are the secrets of the world's power.' If you had asked the same question from a Greek, he would have said: 'Have you been in Athens? Have you seen her temples, seen her art, read her literature? Have you entered into the depths of the learning of Plato and Aristotle? The world's history is wrapped up in Athenian art and literature.'

If you had asked a Roman, 'Where are hid the secrets of the world's power? he would have said, 'Jews and Greeks are blinded as to where this power is found, both are filled with superstition. That power is centered in Rome, where greatness is unequaled,—and how Greek, Jew and Roman would have sneered and laughed if one had at that day pointed to Jesus Christ who was to be crucified, and said, 'In that man is the secret of the whole world's power.'

But Jews, Greeks, Romans, with their philosophies, their governments, and their power have gone down, while he they thought a mere shadow has risen into greater and greater power until it fills the world."

Christianity is the only system of truth, the only religion, which recognizes the facts and characteristics of humanity as they are, and yet places before us an ideal of what humanity should be. Stoicism did not really recognize the facts of the human soul, it ignored them, and tried not to see them, and placed before man an ideal that could not be, while man was man. Epicureanism recognized the facts of the soul as men now are, and ignored what man ought to be. Squared its philosophy and requirements to humanity as it is.

Platonism aimed at an ideal, but fell far short of that ideal, (though higher than aught else,) because it contemplated only such an ideal as fallen man could originate; it could not contemplate man from any higher platform than the common humanity which it shared. Christianity, alone, coming from Heaven, could see man as he is, and tell him what God would have him be. It contemplated humanity from a platform above humanity. It therefore could not only see what man is, but what he should be.

"Some men owe their confidence no so much to enthusiasm as to their ignorance, Nothing produces so much positiveness as narrowness of views. No difficulties ever strike that mind which looks only at one side of the question. No doubts disturb him who will not inquire."

OUR INDIANS.

Many scholars believe that the Indians have not decreased in number since the white man came to this country; but that there are more of them now than there were in the days of Capt. Smith. By tribal wars, and pestilence their numbers had been reduced until most of the continent was, at that time, an uninhabited wilderness, and there was only a fringe of population along the seaboard and on the rivers where the means of subsistence were easily obtained. Col. Mallery, of the U. S. Army, in a paper read before the American Society for the advancement of science, states that while many tribes have decreased in number, and some have even become extinct, others have increased very decidedly. He believes that the Indians have at last been brought under influences which tend to prolong and preserve life and consequently that the popular idea is erroneous which regards their extinction as merely a question of time.

By the census of 1880, there are in the United States 303,000 Indians, who in land are very rich. In the Indian Territory, 7,800 of them have a territory twice as large as South Carolina, which furnishes 500 acres of magnificent land per head. And the Indians of the northwest have also large areas of land, though it is not so fertile.

It is easy to criticise the Government; but the problem, at best an intricate and perplexing one, has been rendered more difficult of solution by the meanness and cupidity of the whites. "Unscrupulous greed has hovered about the Indian reservations, as waiting buzzards hover near the wounded creature, upon whose flesh they would fatten." Wise and kindly provisions of the Government have been thwarted by the baseness of agents, and by the encroachments of the white people. Savages, wrought up by a sense of injustice, and burning for revenge, have retaliated upon the settlers, (the guilty and the innocent alike), with cruel massacre. Then the Government sends the troops and the Indians are exterminated.

Yet in spite of this continual clash of interests, the Indians have made great advances in civilization, and many of them have been brought to Christ. Some remain savage, but most of them wear breeches instead of paint and feathers, and live in houses and send their children to school. On the second and third pages of this paper, are two selected articles which suggested this editorial. Do not be deterred from reading them by their length. For some years the hearts of the Indians have been comparatively friendly to the whites, and the work of missions has been progressing rapidly, though silently, among them. The Episcopal Church has been doing a great work in the northwest—while the Baptists and Methodists have greatly increased their membership in the Indian Territory. The Presbyterian Church reports 2,400 members in the "Territory," and that field is no longer regarded as a Foreign Mission.

TRAVELING SALESMEN.

Dear Sir:—As a travelling salesman, I think I discover one great mistake in Christians. That is in not having a representative from each church to visit the hotels and invite strangers to attend services. And in not having their church paper in the hotels for the accommodation of men who don't wish to read political newspapers on the Sabbath. Consider this and if you think worthy, give the suggestion to your people.

A Subscriber to Your Paper.

We know several churches, which send every Sunday to the hotels and boarding house, and invite travelers to attend their services; but we are not aware of any that undertake to furnish religious reading for the Sabbath. The drummer is strongly tempted to spend his Sundays writing up his correspondence, or reading any literature that may be at hand. It would be easy to collect the church papers after they have been read by the subscribers, and we hope that some of our readers will act upon our correspondent's suggestion.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In commenting last week upon the articles contributed to the paper, no reference was made to the letter of "Old Shoe;" because it came in after the notice was written. "Old Shoe" is not alone in supposing that he perceives indications of vanity and pride in ministers. An eminent scientist when I took him to task for speaking of the vanity of preachers, assured me that he had a high opinion of ministers of the gospel and recognized that they were far above the average of men in unselfishness and purity; but his observation lead him to believe that they were peculiarly liable to vanity, which was rendered more conspicuous by their other virtues.

Surely, we do well to heed such admonitions. It is not often that we receive them. Every thoughtful person must perceive that there are peculiar influences affecting the minister, and tending to make him "think more highly of himself than he ought to think." The deference shown us by almost every one, the admiration and affection manifested by members of our churches, the flatteries of indiscreet admirers, the lack of criticism, all tend to foster self-esteem. Let us, therefore, look above these things to Jesus, and acquire the habit of measuring our worth by the standard He has given. This surely will keep us humble.

Foreign Missions: There has been an unexpected falling off in the contributions for this cause, and Dr. Chester in a card, published elsewhere, informs us that it has been necessary to borrow money to pay the salaries of our missionaries. The financial stringency is distressing, and many of us are feeling it in our own homes and business. But let us remember that it was "in a great trial of afflictions" that the poverty of the Macedonian churches "abounded unto the riches of their liberality." And let us take courage and emulate their example. Let the pastor, if he has not already done so, present the cause earnestly and fully to his people, and let every church member consider whether he cannot give something more. We are able to meet this exigency if we have love and consecration in our hearts.

"I would give everything in the world to be a Christian." The words came from the lips of an old merchant as he sat with his pastor in the back room of the store. His tone and manner indicated that he felt deeply what he was saying. Yet he was a worldly man, absorbed in his business, neglectful of the means of grace; and even impatient of his pastor's repeated efforts to engage him in conversation about the salvation of his soul. How shall we explain such a case? He was not lying; he was probably deceiving himself, like Balaam, when he cried, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and my last end be like his." At the time, evidently, he realized that his condition was hopeless and dreadful, and felt that assurance of a happy eternity would be precious. Yet these feelings were transient. They did not check the current of his worldly aspirations, nor bring him to his knees before God. He was deceiving himself, as many another has done, with the delusion that he would give anything in the world to be saved, when really he was rejecting the salvation which God offers. Dear unconverted reader, (for this article is written for such, and I pray and hope that some may read it)—Dear unconverted reader, have you any yearning to be a Christian? Do not rest satisfied, nor feel virtuous because of your aspirations. Many have gone steadily down to hell with such longings in the heart for happiness and heaven. Seek the counsel of your pastor or pious friend. Get down upon your knees, and confess your sins and ask for a heart to repent and believe.

Gen. Booth, the commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army has been in this country for some weeks, and has been receiving enthusiastic ovations in the Northern cities. In New York he was welcomed and introduced to a large mass-meeting by Hon. Chauncey Depew, and in Philadelphia by Hon. John Wanamaker. In Boston also, thousands gathered to hear him. He is represented as a feeble old man, of unassuming manner; but eloquent and powerful in speaking, because of his earnestness and simple purpose. He is still advocating the colonization scheme for the relief of the poor of London, which he set forth in his book, In Darkest England. The success of his methods with their fantastic accompaniments, should teach us that God pays more regard to simple faith, and sincerity of purpose, than to learning and wisdom. No doubt, the sensational parades and singing have gained a hearing for the army; but the good accomplished must be attributed to the loving hearts and humble faith of the ignorant soldiers.

THE REMOVAL OF UNION SEMINARY.

There is evident need of a plain statement as to the real action of the Synod of Virginia at its recent meeting concerning this important enterprise. What did the Synod of Virginia do? Many are asking this question. Many confused and obscure statements have been made. Even lucid "Rusticus" did not give the exact point of the Synod's vote.

The Synod refused by an overwhelming vote to pass the resolutions which were intended to fasten the Seminary to its present site. The Synod was asked to arrest the movement looking to the removal of the Seminary. This it declined to do, thus leaving the way for removal, if the authorities see fit, and permitting the directors of the Seminary to proceed with their investigation of other proposed sites.

This outcome may seem "melancholy if not ridiculous" to some, but it does not seem so to the Faculty of the Seminary and the Board of Directors and the Synod of Virginia. The action taken is the very action desired by the Faculty and the Board. Such is an accurate statement of the result of the Synod's vote on the question of removal. The friends of removal were perfectly satisfied with the action taken, and see in it nothing "melancholy" or "ridiculous," but rather that the Synod turned its face toward the morning for which so many of us have long been hoping.

INK SPOTS.

Mrs. Spencer, in a letter from Cambridge to the North Carolinian, giving an account of her visit to the graves of Lowell and Longfellow, gives her verdict in favor of the latter over the former as a poet. I think she is right in this—with the exception of the Bigelow Papers, (which abound in humor, caustic wit and satire, and are, in fact, political disquisitions in verse,) Lowell does not seem to me to reach any marked excellence as a poet. There seems no distinctive characteristic in Lowell's poetry, as in Longfellow, Bryant, or Emerson. It appears to me his poetry might have been written by anybody else that had the same intellectual power. He has written pathetic things and pretty things, but they all only rise to a certain level. He produced no really great poem, or body of poetry that charms; poetry which we return to again and again. Even admitting that, here and there, he has given an exquisite poem, the mass of his poetry does not rise high. His "Commemoration Ode" and "Centennial Ode," much praised, as they are, seem to me only a sort of glorified Fourth of July orations. America has produced no great poet, but considering the mass and variety and sweet sentiment and grace and finish of style, Longfellow seems the best exponent of what we have done in poetry.

I am sure this is not the prejudice of an intense Southerner, for I regard Mr. Lowell as the finest critic and essayist our country has produced; nor do I know any English critic his superior. I would advise all young scholars, really reading men and women, to read all of Lowell's essays. For penetration, cutting right into the heart of the matter, for bright and original sayings, exquisite imagery, poetic fancies—none equal him. I believe Steadman is right in saying a selection of apothegms and maxims could be made from Lowell's prose, which for original thought and wise teaching "would be worth more than any writing since Landor's." This same Steadman, by the way, is immeasurably below Lowell as a critic. Moses Coit Tyler is the only American who equals him in freshness of thought and vigor of phrase. Steadman seems to labor to get out what he means, Lowell gives one stroke and the work is done.

* * *

Mr. Lowell, in his poetry, went into the anti-slavery and general philanthropy business with great fervor. That sensational crank, Mr. Stead, attributes much of his enthusiasm for freedom and humanity in general to Lowell's poems in that line.

* * *

But when one considers what sort of people come to the front in our country, how our cities are governed, and how crass ignorance asserts itself in our legislation, one comes to the conclusion that we had better cease glorifying "freedom and humanity" and learn that the object of government is good laws, honest and upright people, and intelligent legislation, and address ourselves to our duties, and talk less about freedom and the blessings of unlimited suffrage.

* * *

The profoundest truth in all the universe is the existence of God, because all other truths, or facts, rest on that as their foundation—none other would have been if God did not exist. The second profoundest truth, or fact, is the resurrection of our Lord Christ, for the administration of the whole universe is in his hands as the God-Man; and the final destiny of all men, perhaps of all beings, are more or less dependent on Christ's dominion based on his resurrection. The whole attitude of the universe was changed when Christ rose and ascended to Heaven. A Power in a new form began to rule and guide the universe. The resurrection of our Lord, then is the most momentous fact, the profoundest truth since creation began. No wonder the Apostles made this the central fact in their preaching. It is foolish to talk about Christianity remaining if we discard miracles. Its very existence depends on a great miracle, the resurrection from the dead.

* * *

What gave the Apostles power was that they stood on a truth, the greatest fact. "In science, in politics, in history, in law courts, in religion your fact is imperial, no matter what else goes, your fact remains. Men preached in the power of a fact—the resurrection. They traveled the world in that power, died in that power, changed the face of the world because Christ's rising from the dead was a fact. Life to-day is manful, hopeful, helpful, courageous, prayerful, patient, because we are in a world redeemed by the fact that Christ rose from the grave, and on this fact we can so live that when the hour comes to depart we shall find the curtains lifted on no darkness, but the road aglow with the footsteps of Him who walked that way before us, and shivered all the night of death with the splendor and power of His resurrection."

"Christ walked under a shadow in His day. If one had asked at that time, 'Where are the secrets of power in the world?' Any Jew would have pointed to the old temple and said: 'There are the secrets of the world's power.' If you had asked the same question from a Greek, he would have said: 'Have you been in Athens? Have you seen her temples, seen her art, read her literature? Have you entered into the depths of the learning of Plato and Aristotle? The world's history is wrapped up in Athenian art and literature.'

If you had asked a Roman, 'Where are hid the secrets of the world's power? he would have said, 'Jews and Greeks are blinded as to where this power is found, both are filled with superstition. That power is centered in Rome, where greatness is unequaled,—and how Greek, Jew and Roman would have sneered and laughed if one had at that day pointed to Jesus Christ who was to be crucified, and said, 'In that man is the secret of the whole world's power.'

But Jews, Greeks, Romans, with their philosophies, their governments, and their power have gone down, while he they thought a mere shadow has risen into greater and greater power until it fills the world."

Christianity is the only system of truth, the only religion, which recognizes the facts and characteristics of humanity as they are, and yet places before us an ideal of what humanity should be. Stoicism did not really recognize the facts of the human soul, it ignored them, and tried not to see them, and placed before man an ideal that could not be, while man was man. Epicureanism recognized the facts of the soul as men now are, and ignored what man ought to be. Squared its philosophy and requirements to humanity as it is.

Platonism aimed at an ideal, but fell far short of that ideal, (though higher than aught else,) because it contemplated only such an ideal as fallen man could originate; it could not contemplate man from any higher platform than the common humanity which it shared. Christianity, alone, coming from Heaven, could see man as he is, and tell him what God would have him be. It contemplated humanity from a platform above humanity. It therefore could not only see what man is, but what he should be.

"Some men owe their confidence no so much to enthusiasm as to their ignorance, Nothing produces so much positiveness as narrowness of views. No difficulties ever strike that mind which looks only at one side of the question. No doubts disturb him who will not inquire."

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following change of address:

J. E. L. Winecoff, from LaGrange, N. C., to Concord, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Wilmington:—At the First Church the communion was administered, and Dr. Hoge preached an appropriate sermon to a large and attentive congregation, Six persons were received into membership upon profession of faith, all attendants at Immanuel chapel.

At Immanuel Chapel, Dr. Rawlings preached at night, and baptized two adults and six children. The session has secured Dr. Rawlings to preach regularly at Immanuel chapel this winter, and he has entered upon the work.

At St. Andrews the communion service is held the first Sunday of December and the additions will be reported then.

Rev. Jonas Barclay, declines the call to Mulberry church, in Mecklenburg Presbytery.

Burgaw:—If you will allow me, through your columns, I want to express my thanks and gratitude, to the good people of Burgaw and surrounding country, for their kind remembrance of their preacher and his family in the past few days. We had been boarding ever since we have been here and we concluded to get in a house of our own on the first of November. We had no sooner gotten in the house than bundles and bags and boxes came in, sent by the generous hearts of love. It is very highly appreciated by us and we hope that they will find it so, when it shall be the privilege of their preacher to preach for them. It is a great blessing that showes such expression of love. May God bless them richly by bestowing upon them great spiritual blessings.

Yours in Christ,
G. W. MacMillan.

Asbury:—On Sunday, November 4th, the new church at Asbury, Stokes county, was solemnly dedicated to the worship of God. A large crowd was present. Rev R. E. Caldwell, of Winston preached the dedication sermon and conducted appropriate services. The meeting had begun on Thursday preceding. Four were received to the communion of the church, making thirty-three in all who are members of this new church. The other twenty-nine were received in August, as the result of a meeting in which we were assisted by Mr. L. A. Coulter and Rev. A. S. Caldwell. When that meeting was held we had merely a stand in the woods. To-day we have a new and tasteful church 30x45. May the Lord who has thus blessed the beginning of this church continue to give it many tokens of His favor.

Winston, First Church:—This congregation is ready unto every good work. On last Sunday after preaching we spoke to them of the Stokes county mission and a sufficient number joined the Extra-cent-a-day Band to furnish $350 toward Bro. Miller's salary. Great is the power of littles. See Zech. 4:10.

Egbert W. Smith.

Buffalo and Midway:—As the visible result of the meeting at Bethel church, held in August, fifteen young persons were received on profession of faith, into full membership in that church, on the 9th of September. The meeting at Midway was held the first week in October, lasting for five days, after which three profession, of faith in Christ were made, and those making them were admitted to full membership in that church. The meeting at Buffalo church began with preparatory services on Saturday before the first Sabbath in October, and were continued until the next Saturday, with the exception of that stormy Tuesday. At the end of those services, six young persons were received into full membership in that church. All of these young persons were members of the Sabbath-schools in connection with the churches which they joined. The pastor did all the preaching himself, in the three meetings—thirty-seven sermons—and had the joy of seeing twenty-four young persons "stand up for Jesus," among whom were two of his own children, a son and a daughter.

VIRGINIA.

Rev. John Ruff:—The commissioners appointed by Peaks, Montvale, and Laurel Grove churches to show cause why their pastoral relation with Mr. Ruff should not be dissolved, were heard at a meeting of Montgomery Presbytery during Synod. The commissioners from Lexington Presbytery were heard also, and the Presbytery decided not to dissolve the existing relation.

Rev. J. R. Bridges, of Salem, Va., has received a unanimous call to Steele Creek church, Mecklenburg Presbytery, North Carolina. This is, we believe, the largest country church in connection with our Assembly. It reports 510 members, He has not yet given any final decision.—Central Presbyterian.

Rural Retreat:—Rev. B. W. Mebane, of Radford, preached for five nights at this place. The sermons were strong and forcible presentations of the gospel, and produced a deep impression on all who heard them. On the following Sunday five were received into the membership of the church, two by letter from the M. E. Church, South, and three on profession. Eighteen have been received into this church since April 1st.—Ib.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Alderson:—The Rev. J. H. Lewis, under direction of his physician, will not be able to preach for some months to come. Rev. George L. Lyle will be in this field and preach for Mr. Lewis during his enforced retirement.—Central Presbyterian.

KENTUCKY.

Millersburg:—Seven persons have been received recently into this church. Most of them on profession of faith. Others are expected to unite soon. Rev. J. G. Anderson pastor,

Corbin:—Rev. Henry Miller, closed a ten days meeting, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hopper, at Corbin, Monday night, October 29th. There were ten additions to our church, and $350 was raised towards a $500 chapel. Corbin now has about 800 inhabitants, and is forty five miles from Middlesboro.—Christian Observer.

Sturgis:—On October 15th, a meeting was begun at Sturgis, continuing twelve days. The pastor, Rev. R. H. Adams, was assisted by Elder John Barkley and Rev. M. B. Porter, both of Greenville, Ky. Mr Barkley conducted the day services and the children's meetings. Mr. Porter came Friday night, and preached every night till the close of the meeting. His clear, practical exposition of of the pure gospel had a telling effect on the community.

Mr. Barkley did very efficient work by personal and house to house visitation. As an immediate result of the meeting there were ten professions and two restorations. Of this number, seven have united with the Presbyterian church.—Ib.

E. H. H. ON LAY EVANGELISM.

Editor Presbyterian: I have a high regard and affection for Brother Bridges, of Salem, Va. He is a capital preacher, a first-rate organizer and church worker. I recommend him heartily to any vacant church. He writes sharp and pungent things, and he has written in his article on the Virginia Synod, in your issue of November 8th, what he ought to be ashamed of and repent in ashes, (real good strong ashes), and real good skin-hurting sackcloth. Criticising the action of the Synod in forbidding the use of its churches by lay evangelists, he writes: "One party believes the great end of life is to bring men to Christ—the other to bring men to Christ, but with them rigid adherence to the Constitution is above all else. It is more than probable our Lord regards a soul of more value than many constitutions."

Now Brother Bridges knows, or ought to know, that the Synod objects to opening its churches to these men, because they are not responsible to any authority. No one knows what they may teach, and because the Church believes that the methods they use are injurious, and that while their preaching may bring, and no doubt does bring some souls to Christ, their high pressure methods tend to produce temporary conviction and spurious conversions, and introduce into our churches methods really hurtful to the cause of Christ.

The Church believes that the methods and preaching of a certain class of men tend to produce more spurious convertions than real ones, hence that the result in the end is baneful. "It is not rigid adherence to the Constitution," but the desire to see men really converted, and the fear that certain methods lead men to false hopes, that prompted the Synod to its action, as well as desire to guard its people from false teaching and the introduction of unseemly elements into church worship.

This action does not prevent any Presbyterian from worshipping wherever he pleases or joining in any meeting he wishes to.

Some brother asked if the action of the Synod would prevent him from joining in the lay evangelist meeting, and standing up and shaking hands, etc., whereupon some one remarked, privately, "Oh, no, it does not prevent any Presbyterian from making as big a fool of himself as he chooses, outside of a Presbyterian church."

GOD A FAILURE.

A sermon was recently preached in one of our cities. The occasion was one of special interest. The congregation was immense. The preacher was one of the most prominent in our State, and at this time was "at his best." After referring to the fact that Satan had destroyed the Paradise which God first built for man, he exclaimed, "God's fight with the devil was a failure. Then Christ came along." This sentence was culled by a reporter and scattered over the State through the medium of a daily paper.

The publicity it has received challenges attention. The errors in the sentence are so glaring that it seems a few things ought to be said. It is impudent. To say that anything God has done, or attempted to do, is or was a failure, requires more self-assurance and disrespect to God than most Christian men possess. How insolent it seems for any man to arrogate to himself the right to sit in judgment on the works of the Almighty, and shamelessly to declare that this or that is a failure! Such expressions smack more of arrogance than the humility which should characterize the utterance of the creature.

It is founded on a misconception. By what authority does the preacher so completely divorce Christ and God? By what revelation is it made clear that they are two and not one? Scripture tells us that Christ is really and truly God, that he is one with the Father. Why restrict the term God to one person of the trinity? Does he forget that the Jehovah of the Old Testament is none other than the second person of the trinity who afterwards became incarnate as Jesus of Nazareth? The same God that spoke the world into being, and created man in his image, also resisted the wiles of the tempter in the wilderness of Judea. The same God that walked in the garden of Eden in the cool of the day, also knelt in Gethsemane's garden and gained there a glorious victory over the power of darkness.

It is positively and utterly untrue. God has never failed. He never will fail. It never was necessary for Him to call in assistance in order to manage the devil. That dark chapter in the history of our race, the scene of which is laid in Eden, is a record of our failure and not of God's. It was our fight that was lost, our failure that was recorded. And when this fight was regained by Christ, it was done not as God, but as man. He refused to use His miraculous power, or to call upon the hosts of heaven in His behalf. But as man he faced the tempter, and as man He won the victory which man before had lost. We have no right to call it God's fight, nor to place on Him the responsibility of our failure.

This kind of expression is becoming lamentably common. The tendency in this direction is spreading like a contagion, and should be zealously resisted. The cause seems to be twofold. The restless desire on the part of the congregation for spicy sentences, regardless of truth or falsity of the sentiments expressed. The more dangerously near the border line of profanity and blasphemy, the speaker can swing, the more popular he becomes. And then there seems to be a morbid ambition on the part of some preachers to say something startlingly new. The effort to lug in expressions of this character is sometimes positively painful to the better portion of their hearers. On such occasions we preach ourselves and not the Lord. Stand back, and let the Almighty speak!

SYNODICAL REPORT.

Report on the State of Religion in the Synod of North Carolina, and Address to the Churches.

To the churches of the Synod of North Carolina. Greeting! May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you and abide.

With gratitude, we note from the reports of the Presbyteries, that there continues the same fidelity of the officers to their respective duties, which has often been reported heretofore. In a few churches only has there been a decline in attendance, in the great majority, a most gratifying state of things is reported. The increase in the number of prayer-meetings, and quickened interest in them are tokens for good. In Fayetteville Presbytery, one church reports within its bounds as many as four regular weekly prayer-meetings.

There has been likewise an increase in the number of Sabbath-schools—and in some quarters renewed fidelity in teaching the Bible thoroughly. One church reports six Mission Sabbath-schools.

In the matter of Sabbath Observance, there seems no flagrant violation of the command to keep the day holy—and from some sections a most gratifying report is given. But we notice with concern the insinuating increase of social visiting, especially in the country congregations, and the growing fondness, in the towns, of the Sunday newspapers.

Family Worship:—Here seems to be the place where the pulse of Christian life beats low: and parental duty in faithful religious training is too much neglected, or delegated too exclusively to the Sabbath-school.

In one case only does intemperance seem to have given trouble, and worldly amusements do not appear to vex the righteous souls of the members of church sessions, as once was the frequent lament.

The work among the colored people is reported at an ominous stand still throughout the Synod.*

The worship of God by giving of our substance for supporting the work of the Church, and for prosecuting the various and special causes of beneficence, is more systematic and settled. While there has been failure in some quarters to meet certain obligations—it seems to be due to the providential conditions prevailing, rather than to lack of the grace of giving.

We are sorry that quite a number of churches make no report to Presbytery on the State of Religion, and also no Statistical Report.

In every Presbytery a glad emphasis is given to the fact that upon a large number of churches the Spirit in his power has been felt—in the numbers received into membership—in the quickening given to many departments of church work—in increased liberality—in deeper piety. For all of these blessed results of God's presence, we would give devout thanks.

The Synod would most affectionately urge the churches to increasing faithfulness to their increasing responsibilities; in family worship, to strengthen those things that remain that are ready to die; in Christian giving to honor their blessed Lord—and in all spiritual life and service, to address themselves to higher attainments—to the glory of God and toward the symmetrical evangelization of the world, at home and abroad.

J. N. H. Summerell,
Chairman.

*The above report was made from the reports of the Presbyteries. The Synod took such action in Greensboro with reference to Colored Evangelization, that the statement in this report no longer remains true to the present facts.

TO OUR FRIENDS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Dear Brethren:—Will you please permit us to lay before you some facts and solicit your help in an enterprise we are about to undertake.

For several years our little congregation have worshiped in a neat, but small church, at the West End of Hampton. The lot was given to us there, but it has long been obvious that the location was a very unfortunate one, and yet we were unable to do any better.

We have now however, purchased a very desirable lot, nearer the centre of the town, on which we propose to build a new and better church, and have sold the present house for a small sum, not by any means sufficient to build the new one. As we are few in number and none of us in affluent circumstances, it will be fully as much as the congregation can do at present to meet the payments on the lot. We are therefore, practically out of doors, and are almost compelled to call on our friends for assistance. We do not propose to build extravagantly, yet we do want to erect a building that will be a credit to the Presbyterians of the town. Our people are struggling very hard and doing all they are able to do, but we need help. Any amount you may feel yourself able to give will greatly assist us and will be most thankfully received. Will you be kind enough to consider our plea and respond at an early day, as we want to commence the work as soon as possible.

Truly yours,
H. T. Darnall.

Hampton, Va., Nov. 9th, 1894.

AN APPEAL.

To the Members of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Dear Brethren: The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions find the great work which you have committed to them at a stand for lack of money to carry it on.

Last year in our extremity, in spite of hard times, you came to our help and supplied our treasury, so that we closed the year with a balance of $9,000. This was the wonder and inspiration of the other agencies engaged in this great work. We stated to the General Assembly that it would require $155,000 to carry on the work for this year. As you gave $143,000 last year, this would be only $12,000 more, ond we have sent many more workers to the field.

We have cut down expenses at every point. But the collections for October, 1894, are $556 less than for October, 1893, and the total increase for this year is $8,928. On the 5th of October the Executive Committee borrowed $10,000 with which to make part payment on our missionaries' salaries due October 1st.

We are thus confronted with the necessity of recalling some of our missionaries, and abandoning some of our fields, or seeing the missionaries suffer lor the necessities of life. We are forced to lay these facts before you. Are you willing that we should retreat in the face of the enemy, recall our men, give up ground that has been won by years of labor, sacrifice and expense? Shall all of our past efforts and sufferings go for nothing? Surely our beloved Church will not dishonor her past noble record.

We appeal for large donations from individuals who have God's means in trust, and for smaller gifts from those to whom God has entrusted little. We appeal to all the churches that have not taken the annual collection for October, not to neglect it; and to all treasurers of churches, societies or Sabbath-schools, to send promptly the collections.

We ask also that all pray earnestly to God to avert the disaster that threatens us. Brethren, hitherto the Lord has blessed us, and we have thankfully spoken words of encouragement. But now when we speak words of warning and distress, you may be assured that we do so only because of the peril that confronts us. May God encourage you to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Yours in the work,

Chairman.

SYNODICAL REPORT.

REPORT OF AGENT OF PUBLICATION AND COLPORTAGE.

Your agent finds that in the years 1890-8, there was a steady increase in the contributions to this cause. But during the year now reported and closing, there is a sudden and large falling off. This cannot be due to any local causes as the proportion is about the same in each Presbytery. Three reasons may be assigned for this: 1st. The stringency of the times in financial values and incomes. 2nd. The fact that this cause has never had full justice nor received deserved support from our people as an educated and educating people. 3rd. As part reason of the former that the Assembly's work has been so quietly managed and in such business methods and with so little appeal to the people, that we do not give it the attention we should. Now, however, something must be done. Our ministers and churches must increase their gifts to this cause or we shall suffer greatly and cause greater suffering to our frontier fields.

Our colporteur, Rev. D. T. Towles, has during this year, as last, lost several months from sickness. This is to be regretted both for our sympathy with him in his suffering and loss of time and earnings, and the loss sustained for his valuable services wherever he could have gone. He has been very faithful and acceptable in the number of sermons he has preached, prayer-meeting and Sabbath-school addresses he has made. These number 35 since the last of May. He has in this time visited ten Sabbath-schools and 1,422 families. He has traveled 1,266 miles during 127 days of service. He has sold books from our publication house, amounting to $201.28; Bibles and parts, $202 48; Books, donated, $9.46, making a total of $413.22. The value of this work cannot be stated in words. Its educational value will run far and wide in coming years. In addition to his reports to Dr. Hazen in Richmond, Va., Bro. Towles has made monthly reports to your agent, and has worked under his direction on full sanction.

In accordance with its uniform desire our committee of the General Assembly has recently enlarged the size, increased the value, raised the standard and improved the appearance and general make-up and matter of our Sabbath-school helps so as to put them with the best and at prices lower than others of equal grade and scholarship.

The Missionary, of the Church, is steadily being improved, and The Children's Missionary is being now issued monthly at a mere nominal cost of twenty-five cents a year, or a little over two cents a month for sixteen pages well prepared and illustrated.

Our Assembly has now put its approval upon two valuable Church hymn books, "Psalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs," by Dr. Chas. S. Robinson, which has great value and meets the wants of many, and, "The Hymns of the Ages," by Dr. Kerr—one of the pastors of our Church, and more nearly a recast of our Psalms and Hymns. In addition to these our committee has issued a larger number of valuable works from several of our ablest preachers, teachers and and writers. Any or all of these may be had of our Publication house at Richmond. These, or any good books may be secured direct from Dr. Hazen or through our colporteur.

Your agent would recommend: That Synod authorize our colporteur to present the claims of The Missionary and The Children's Missionary and secure subscriptions for the same as part of his regular work.

A. D. McClure,
Agent.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met at the Mission Rooms in regular session on Monday, Nov. 5th, at 9:30 a. m.

Reports were received and laid before the Committee from all the missions except Africa. The brethren in China all express their freedom from apprehension as to their personal safety, and insist on our sending forward all the reinforcements that are ready to go.

Dr. J. R. Wilkinson and family, and Rev. B. H. Franklin, whose support has been specially provided for, were instructed to proceed at once to their fields. Dr. Wilkinson will go to take charge of the hospital work, which is being organized at Soochow under the care of Rev. John W. Davis, D. D.

Mr. Franklin also goes to China. His special field has not been assigned, but he will go temporarily to Hangchow, where he can be in reach of American gun boats for the present.

Dr. Houston will take charge of the work at Lin-wu, a station thirty miles north of Hangchow.

Mrs. Stuart having completed her second ten years of service, will return home next year for her vacation.

The Treasurer read his report, which showed that the contributions for October, 1894, were $7,556 less than for October, 1892; and that the receipts for the year to November 1st, were $8,928 less than the receipts for last year at the same date.

As we have a good many more missionaries in the field than we had at this date last year, this shortage of receipts compels a large reduction for all the missions, in the amount appropriated for the carrying on of their work. This of course must greatly hamper them, and in some instances almost tie their

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson VII.

Nov. 25th.—Opposition to Christ.

(Mark iii. 22-35. Commit vss. 23-26.)
Compare Matt. xii. 22-50.

Golden Text. He came unto His own and His own received Him not.—John i. 11.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Immediately after the Sermon on the Mount, occurred the healing of the centurion's servant (Luke vii. 1-10), followed by his visit to Nain and the raising of the widow's son (ibid. 11-17); at about this time came the messengers from John and our Lord's testimony to him (ibid. 18-35—so Lesson IX should have come before this lesson); the discourse in Matt. xi. 16-30 seems to have followed His testimony to John, closing with the tender invitation, "Come unto Me all ye that labor." These words probably encouraged the "woman that was a sinner" to come to him in the Pharisee's house (Luke vii. 36-50). This is followed by our Lord's Second Preaching Tour in Galilee, on which He is accompanied by the Twelve and by a company of women (Luke viii 1-3). The Twelve constituted His "staff," the women, His "commissary department." Thus humbly did the conquest of the world by the organized kingdom of God begin. It was on His return to Capernaum from this tour that He was met by the hostile delegation from the Sanhedrim with their foul theory of His wonderful works. Read rapidly in the order above cited the passages referred to.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson:

The delegation from Jerusalem and their theory, vs. 22; its absurdity shown, vss. 23-27; the true explanation, vs. 27; the fearful guilt of His accusers, vss. 28-30; well meaning, but misguided interference, vs. 31, 32, compare vss. 20, 21; spiritual kinship with Christ, vss. 33-35.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation:

Vs. 22. That came down from Jerusalem—apparently for the purpose of investigating, or opposing His progress.

Beelzebub. A Phoenician divinity (lit. the Lord of flies) whose name was used in contempt by the Jews for Satan. The original has Beelzebul, a yet more contemptuous term, by the change of a letter making a baser meaning. See Bible Dictionaries.

He hath, i. e., is possessed of. Compare the same general charge made in Jerusalem, John vii. 20; viii. 48, 52; x. 20.

By the prince.....he casteth out. They acknowledged the fact of His power over evil spirits, but attributed it to the agency of demons and the use of "the black art."

Vs. 23. In parables, i. e., in brief proverbial and illustrative form—a kingdom divided against a kingdom; a house against a house. Matt. adds "a city" (xii. 25), and also the ad hominem argument (vs. 27) for the attempt to exorcise was made and the power professed, by some of themselves.

Vs. 27. The true explanation is also given in parable: if He has come into Satan's house and spoiled his goods, He must first have bound Satan and proved Himself the stronger (Luke xi. 22). Matthew and Luke add the plain statement that it was by the Spirit of God, (or the finger, Luke); proving the presence of the kingdom of God among them.

Vs. 28. Verily, etc. One of the solemnest statements in the Bible; showing that it is possible to commit spiritual suicide; that one may take such a stand of opposition to the Spirit's convincing power as forever to put oneself outside of the sphere of His influence, and so make repentance, faith and spiritual life impossible.

Vs. 29. In danger of eternal damnation. The true reading is "guilty of an eternal sin." It is not that there is any sin which cannot be forgiven on repentance, but that this sin from its very nature is eternal, because it cuts off the only source from which repentance can come. Punishment is eternal because the sin is eternal.

Vs. 30. Because they said, etc. This awful truth was called out by their attributing to unclean powers the pure and beneficent works of the Spirit of God. Their subsequent attitude towards Jesus confirms the interpretation. After their hardness and impenitent hearts, they treasured up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath (Rom. ii. 5).

Vs. 31. And there came his mother, etc. Apparently for the purpose of restraining Him in what appeared to them His excessive zeal. Interference in His Divine mission He always firmly resisted even from those most dear to Him, John ii. 4; vii. 3-6. In this case, not wishing to wound them publicly He simply ignores their presence, and when the fact is so presented that it must be recognized, gives it the spiritual turn of vss. 33-35. This was not only a word of tenderest affection for His disciples, but a hint to those who were His kindred according to the flesh, that without this spiritual kinship, which was manifested by falling in with, instead of resisting His mission, their human relationship would be of no avail to them.

Vs. 35. Whosoever shall do the will of God. This was pre-eminently the stamp of Divine sonship, and so of kinship to God's Eternal Son. They must bear the family likeness, if they are born of the new birth, John i. 12, 13.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study in the light of God's Word the topics of the lesson.

Sins against the Holy Ghost.

a. Resisting Him, Acts viii. 51. Compare Neh. ix. 30.
This has reference to the Spirit in His work of convincing, John xvi. 8 (margin), and is committed, to a greater or less extent, by all, before they yield their hearts to His control.

b. Grieving Him, Eph. iv. 30. This is a sin of Christians against the Spirit dwelling within them, and is done when we: Commit sin, Eph. iv. 29, 30; Ps. lxxviii. 40.
Rebel against His leading, Is. lxiii. 10.
Quench His gifts and the testimony He puts in our hearts, 1 Thess. v. 16-20; 1 Tim. iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6.

c. Blaspheming Him, Mark iii. 28-30. See notes above, and compare Heb. x. 29. This alone is the "unpardonable sin," but resistance against His convicting power may be carried so far, or the light that He gives so deliberately rejected as to amount to the same thing, Heb. x. 26, 27.

Sixth Step. The doctrine of the sin against the Holy Ghost conveys very solemn lessons. It warns very awfully of the sin and danger of tampering and trifling with the influences of the Spirit. He is the only source of spiritual life and power to our souls, and if HE is rejected we are lost. At the same time persons of tender conscience need to be reminded that any sensitiveness to religious truth, any mourning over sins, any longing after God and striving for holiness, is positive proof that we have NOT committed that sin, because they are the evidences of the Spirit's presence in our hearts, Yet as Christians, careless, backsliding Christians we may have sorely grieved the Spirit. Our prayer then should be David's, Ps. li. 11.

By cultivating the influences of the Spirit and His fruits, (Gal. v. 22, 23), can we not so grow in the likeness of Christ as to proclaim our kinship with Him?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

All classes of scholars can be taught the duty of reverent handling of sacred things; the danger of growing hard and callous, when we make light of religion. The Holy Spirit is in His Word, we should use it reverently. He is in the sacraments of the Church, we should never speak of them lightly, or mockingly. He is in true religious revivals, we should never treat them disrespectfully. He is in the religious experience of our friends whose hearts and lives have been changed, we should never sneer at them. Religion is awfully real, awfully solemn.

Show also how Christ's life was to do His Father's will, and we must be like Him if we would claim kinship with Him.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF NOV. 1.

111. (a.) Salome, compare Matt. xxvii. 56 and Mark xv. 40.
(b.) She came requesting the posts of honor for her sons, John and James, Matt. xx. 20, 21. Another incident given in her coming to anoint the body of Jesus, Mark xvi. 1.

112. (a.) Matthias, Acts i. 26; (b.) Paul, Rom. i. 1, etc.; (c.) Barnabas, Acts xiv. 14; James, the Lord's brother, Gal. i. 19. Note the last two are nowhere separately called Apostles, but only in connection with others. The reference to Apollos as an Apostle in 1 Cor. iv. 6, 9, is not conclusive, and he did not fulfil the conditions of an Apostle; so far as we are told, he had not seen the Lord, 1 Cor. ix. 1. Still we do not count it an incorrect answer. The same remark applies to Silas and Timothy, as based upon 1 Thess. ii. 6, but not when based upon other references that were given. The reference to JESUS (Heb. iii. 1) is in a higher and different sense. He was sent of God as the apostles were sent by Him.

Correct answers have been received as follows:

Chas. E. McMillan, 111, 112.
Mary McIntyre, 111 a* b, 112 a* b* c*.
Robbie McIntyre, 111 a* b, 112 a* b* c*.
Bettie Overcash, 111, 112 a b c.
Willie Arrowood, 111, 112.
Olive Wilson, 111*, 112 a* b* c.*
Beatrice T. McEachern, 111 a* b, 112 b c.
Isabelle Robeson, 111 a* b, 112.
D. R. Johnson, 111 a* b, 112 a b c.*
Miriam McFadyen, 111, 112 a b.
Katie Monroe, 111 a* b*, 112 b c d.
N. E. Monroe, 111 a* b*, 112 b c d.

*Half-value, for lack of reference, or for wrong or defective reference. Please note that Mark xv. 40 without Matt. xxvii. 56 does not show who Salome was: nor does the comparison of Matt. xxvii 56, with Mark xvi. 1, identify her, as these verses refer to different occasions when the company of women might have been different. In fact we know that the Mother of Jesus was in the first group, (John xix. 25), but was evidently not in the group at the sepulcher.

NEW QUESTIONS.

116. Give two instances in the Acts where professed Christians sinned grievously against the Holy Ghost.

117. From vs. 35 it appears that spiritually Jesus has many mothers and sisters and brothers. Give a text that shows how we can have the same.

The Missionary Calendar for 1892 was ordered to be printed, and will be ready for delivery on December 10th. We are now ready to receive orders for the Calendar, and hope we shall receive many more orders than we did last year, so that the Calendar will be a source of revenue, to make up a small part of our deficiency in other lines.

The Committee endorsed the action of the Japan Mission in assigning Mr. Grinnan to a professorship of theology in Steele College, at Magasaki. There he will have the opportunity of impressing his well known zeal and enthusiasm on the rising native ministry; and his instructions will be a safeguard against some tendencies towards loose doctrine that have been developed of late in the Church in Japan.

The report of the Korean Mission stated that all were well, and busily engaged in work at Seoul. They were not allowed by the authorities to itinerate through the country during the present disturbed state of affairs. Dr. Drew calls loudly for more medical missionaries for Korea.

Rev. H. B. Pratt has gone to Cuba to assist Sr. Collazo in his interesting work during the winter.

Miss Ella S. Cumming, of Covington, Tenn., was appointed as a missionary to Mexico.

Other applications for appointment were laid before the Committee, to be acted on at the next regular meeting.

An appeal to the Church for help during the present distressed state of our finances, was adopted, and ordered to be published in The Missionary, and sent also to the Church papers.

After transacting the usual routine business the Committee adjourned at 1:30 p. m., to meet again on the second Monday of December, at 9:00 a. m.

PSALM XXIII.

BY NIELSON PHARR COPPEDGE, AGED 14.

My Gentle Shepherd is the Lord;
My food and drink, His Holy Word.
When I am wandering in the night,
He leads me in the path of right.

When enemies are round about,
A table near me is spread out.
His rod and staff, my comfort are,
And nothing can such comfort mar.

"And when on earth I breath no more,"
And when I've reached that happy shore,
I shall be happy evermore,
As plumed birds that upward soar.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work, besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

THE CROWN OF THE YEAR.

In sapphire, emerald, amethyst,
Sparkles the sea by the morning kissed;
And the mists from the far-off valleys lie
Gleaming like pearl in the tender sky,
Soft shapes of cloud that melt and drift,
With tints of opal that glow and shift.

For the strong wind blows from the warm southwest,
And ruffles the snow on the white gull's breast;
Fills all the sails till the boats careen
Low over the crested waves that lean,
Driven to leeward, dashed with spray,
Or beating up through the beautiful bay.

Ah, happy morning of autumn sweet,
Yet ripe and rich with the summer's heat!
By the ruined wall on the rocky height,
In shadow I gaze at the changing light,
Splendor of color that clothes thee round,
Huge orb of the earth to its utmost bound.

Near me each humble flower and weed—
The dock's rich umber gone to seed,
The hawkbit's gold, the bayberry's spice,
One late wild rose, beyond all price—
Each is a friend and all are dear,
Pathetic signs of the waning year.
The painted rose haws, how they glow!

Like crimson wine the woodbines show;
The wholesome yarow's clusters fine,
Like frosted silver, dimly shine,
And who thy quaintest charm shall tell,
Thou little scarlet pimpernell?

The jeweled sea and the deeps of the air,
All heaven and earth are good and fair.
Ferns at my feet and the mullen's spike,
And soaring gull I love alike.
With the schooner's grace as she leans to the tide.
The soul within me is satisfied.

In the mellow, golden, autumn days,
When the world is zoned in their purple haze,
A spirit of beauty walks abroad
That fills the heart with the peace of God.
The spring and summer may bless and cheer,
But autumn brings us the crown o' the year.

A Girl's Best Friend.

Remember, girls, that the best friend and best confidante you can have is your mother. Have no friend with whom she is not acquainted. Make her interested in what you are doing; tell her all your hopes, your plans, your little trials; if the trials of her own life are many, remember that you may aid her with your tender sympathy and love, but to gain sympathy you must give it. Make yourself your mother's companion and friend and then she will be yours. Do nothing that you would conceal from her and never believe for a moment that, when you have really made her understand, she will not care for what interests you. Mother is not so much older than you, after all—it hasn't been such a long time since she enjoyed just what you do, since life seemed as full of brightness for her as it now does to you; since she made as many inquiries and thought out as many problems as now vex you, and once you meet on this common ground you will have nobody, believe me, who will sympathize so keenly with you as your mother. Cultivate her friendship, then, and be sure it is a thousand times better worth having than that of all the school girl confidantes in the world. It is friendship upon which you may always rely—it will be that most true and marvelous of friendships where the thought of you will be first and always. A home is what woman makes it, and a daughter is in nine cases out of ten the reflection of her mother. The training of the girl of 15 is shown in the woman of 50. A son may by contact with the rough world sometimes outlive his early home influence—a daughter rarely does. The world has a sharp way of teaching its truths to a girl. Is it not far better, then, that she should go to her mother and tell her all—the mother who will with sweet sympathetic grace and gentleness help her to meet the problems, that seem so hard and cruel sometimes, and often again so deceptive and alluring. Let the world build upon your foundation, but do you lay the ground story. Sooner or later early home training will manifest itself. Any builder will tell you that the whole strength of a house depends upon its foundation. The flowers most beautiful to the eye and sweetest to the smell grow in good soil. The world's noblest women spring from good homes.

A Lesson to Take to Heart.

How beautiful each woman's life would be, if she remembered that each day she writes a page, and on each page should be recorded at least one thing which may be wreathed in smiles. It is not the heaviest grief for which we wear the willow. Often do we go about bearing heavier crosses, known by none save God. In our hearts may dwell a sorrow which the world knows not, and, as we have ours, so does every man have his, and we often call people cold, when they are only sad. And so the web of life is drawn into a loom for us, but women in these days must weave it themselves; they must throw their own shuttle and work the treadle. The warp is given them, but the woof they must make, and find the materials and colors and figures to their own taste. We are weaving now, and every woman may ask herself, if her colors are perfect, her figures clear, and her material true: Oh! we should not weave so as to cause a poor, thin spot to appear in our work, for we wear what we weave. Our characters are the mirrors in which our friends see reflected what we are, and they are inevitably made better or worse thereby. Do we admire truthfulness? Then be truthful. Do we admire goodness? Then take for pattern of life the only perfect pattern, and though we fall short of attainment, yet will our lives be noble ones. In our deeds lie more convincing lessons than in our words, and by our actions alone may we make or mar the beauty of the lives around us. —N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

Cold tea cleans grained wood.

Spirits of camphor will remove white spots from furniture.

Croquante of peaches is made by boiling a pound of sugar and a teacup of water together until they jelly. Take from the fire. Grease a two-quart mould with fresh butter. Have a dozen ripe peaches pared and cut in halves; dip each half in the syrup; cover with syrup, and press against the sides of mould; continue until the bottom and sides are lined, and stand in a cold place to harden. When firm fill the center with Charlotte Russe and set on ice for two hours. When ready to serve turn the mould upside down on a plate, wet with a warm cloth, and lift off carefully.

Swiss Buns.—Cream together one egg, two tablespoonsful of sugar and one of butter; sift two teaspoonsful of cream tartar with two cups of flour, and stir one teaspoonful of soda, light measure, in one cup of sweet milk until thoroughly dissolved; mix in enough extra flour, if needed, to mould into biscuit, or long buns, shaping with the hands, as they are better so than if rolled out. Bake in a quick oven. These are very nice for tea and for the children's lunch basket the next day.

Farmers often want a moisture proof glue, and it can be made by dissolving a pound of common glue in three pints of skim milk. The cement is stronger if powdered quick-lime is added. A fireproof cement for use around stovepipes, fire-places and chimneys, where the danger from fire is greatest, can be made by mixing two parts of sifted fresh wood ashes and one part of air-slaked lime, with sufficient boiled linseed oil to make a smooth paste. It hardens quickly to the solidity of a stone. It is water and fire-proof, and adheres to metal perfectly.

AMONG THE FLOCKS

of people who visit the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y., are many who are sent there, by those who have already, from personal experience, learned of the great

Triumph in Conservative Surgery

achieved by the Surgeons of that famed institution. Little heroic, or cutting surgery is found necessary. For instance,

TUMORS Ovarian, Fibroid (Uterine) and many others, are removed by Electrolysis and other conservative means and thereby the perils of cutting operations avoided.

PILE TUMORS, however large, Fistula and other diseases of the lower bowel, are permanently cured without pain or resort to the knife.

RUPTURE, or Breach (Hernia) is radically cured without the knife and without pain. Trusses can be thrown away!

STONE in the Bladder, no matter how large, is crushed, pulverized, washed out and safely removed without cutting.

STRICTURES of Urinary Passage are also removed without cutting in hundreds of cases.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"MY THREE LITTLE TEXTS."

I am very young and little;
I am only just turned two;
And I cannot learn big chapters,
As my elder sisters do.

But I know three little verses
That my mamma has taught to me,
And I say them every morning
As I stand beside her knee.

The first is, "Thou God seest me,"
Is it not a pretty text?
And "Suffer the little children
To come unto Me" is the next.

But the last one is the shortest,
It is only "God is love;"
How kind he is in sending
Such sweet verses from above.

He knows the chapters I can't learn,
So I think He sent those three Short, easy texts on purpose
For little ones like me.

A Flower Mission.

Jack and Harry Ransome lived in Glenwood, a pretty little town about twenty miles from New York. They had a big shady yard to play in, and their mother had a fine garden filled with beautiful flowers.

One morning when Mother Ransome was getting her flower beds ready for planting, her friend, Miss Graham, from the city came to visit her. It was Saturday morning, so Jack and Harry were off for a ramble in the woods; when they returned and found Miss Graham there, they were delighted, for she was a great favorite of theirs, and they presented her at once with the basket of woodland treasures which they had been gathering.

She sat down on the steps with a lad on each side of her, and examined its contents. There were anemones, spring beauties, adders' tongues, and even a few dear little violets, which were as blue as the sky. Then there were twigs of maple, coral red with little yellow catkins from the birches, and all sorts of pretty things besides.

"Oh!" cried Miss Graham, "you happy boys, to be able to go out in the woods whenever you please and gather such lovely things as these! I shall not keep them for myself, you may be sure; I shall take them to my Sunday-school boys to-morrow afternoon, for they never saw anything like them before in their lives."

Jack and Harry were interested at once. They knew of course about poor boys in the city in a general way, but Miss Graham was friendly with dozens of poor little fellows and to hear her tell about them brought them very near indeed. There was Teddy Cronin for instance, whose little sister Kitty was just getting well from an attack of pneumonia. Teddy was a bootblack, and he was not very big, and the stronger boys fought him away from the good stands, so that he could not earn much money; he had no father, and his mother sewed on very cheap work for a living. Well, only the Saturday before Kitty had cried for a rosebud—a pink rosebud, and they could not get it for her, because one has to pay for flowers in the city. Then there was Sandy McMasters, who had a grandmother such a nice old lady, and she had not been downstairs in two years, on account of her rheumatism. Wouldn't she be glad of a bit of green. There was "Dandy Jim," too, who had nobody, unless you counted a poor, drunken father, who had just been sent to "the Island" for three months, to his son's great relief. Poor "Dandy Jim" ought to have some blossoms. Beside all these there were Frank, and Michael, and John, and Henry, and ever so many others, for Miss Graham knew nearly every boy in the Mission and pretty nearly all their friends and relations as well.

This little talk set Jack and Harry thinking, and in a day or two they came to their mother with a plan.

"Mother," said they, can't we each of us have a flower bed of our own this summer? We want to send some more flowers to those fellows Miss Graham told us about,"

"I am afraid you would get tired of caring for them after a little," answered mother, "and I could not have weedy, neglected flower beds in the yard."

"No mother," said they both together, "we promise you truthfully that we will take good care of them. You see we never thought much about flowers; we have always had such a lot of them, but we know that if we had to do without them like those poor city boys we should feel pretty bad."

So Mrs. Ransome consented to let them try, and two long beds were spaded up, one on each side of the walk, and there the boys planted whatever flowers they liked best. Mother contributed some of her choicest plants, and the beds were kept in beautiful order, and every Saturday morning all during the summer and late into autumn Mr. Ransome took a large basket of flowers down to the city for Miss Graham's boys. Sometimes the basket held something beside flowers; often there was a fresh egg for Grandma McMasters, laid by Jack's pet biddy, or a quart of fresh berries for Kitty Cornin, and the boys got to writing notes to and fro, so that they became quite well acquainted with each other. Indeed, on the Fourth of July, Jack and Harry had Miss Graham and all her boys come out to Glenwood for the day, and then didn't they all have fun! But that is another story.—Ex.

A Fable.

Ah! what a delightful life this is! how I shall enjoy myself!" said a little raindrop, as it came hurrying through the air. The wind whirled and tossed it about, as if it were glad to get such a plaything, and a stray sunbeam shone on it until it reflected all the colors of the rainbow. But true pleasure is only to be found in the faithful performance of duty; and there was work even for a little raindrop to do. A blade of grass, that had with difficulty pushed its way through the hard ground, was shriveling up for want of some freshening moisture. Poor thing! it was looking so withered and shrunken; but, oh! how it trembled for joy when it saw the raindrop coming nearer and nearer, until at last it lighted softly on it.

"Well, I'm glad the wind brought me down," said the raindrop; "this blade of grass looks greener than it was. I'll stay here now and rest; it is better than being swallowed up in that dirty-looking clay."

"Oh, pray do not," said the grass; "your work is not yet done; under that clay my little rootlets are perishing for want of water; will you not share your abundance?"

The little raindrop hesitated for awhile, then, nerving itself for one more effort, slid gently down the blade of grass and disappeared in the ground. But ah! little it knew what a wonder of beauty it was to be the means of nourishing into life. Other rootlets besides those of the grass drank up greedily the refreshing moisture. And lo! in a few weeks, first a dark green blade appeared, and then after a time a white flower burst forth in a flush of loveliness; and as the beautiful lily of the valley waved its little white bells joyously on the wind, it thought, "What a happy thing it was for me that the raindrop preferred to help others rather than to please itself."—Selected.

The Way Lost.

One of the most pathetic incidents connected with Stanley's passage through the Dark Continent was the death of the wife of one of his servants on the Congo. As the fleet of canoes was moving down the current of the mysterious stream, the explorer was called to the canoe in which the woman lay dying. She remembered in her last moments the awful experiences of the, to her, unexplainable journey, and, to all, its unknown ending; her last words to Stanley were: "It is a bad world, master, and you have lost your way in it." Time is, indeed, a mysterious stream if it bears the voyager to a hopeless sea of eternity. Without Christ as an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast; without the bright and Morning Star to guide as a beacon light, man's journey of life is in a bad world in which he has lost his way, and in the eternity beyond, not only is the way lost but the possibility of finding it is forever gone. The only difference in being lost in time and eternity is that in time only can Christ become the way of salvation. The only place lost sinners can find the cross is this side the grave.

Address, THE PRESIDENT.

Study Law at Home.

It was the ambitious young man and woman on the farm, behind the counter, in the mill, in the lawyer's office, in the bank—the man and woman without the opportunity of a college education, that made this method of teaching law a necessity. We offer two courses—

1. A Course Preparing the Student to Practise Law;
2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the result perfect. Nicely printed catalogues explain both courses. They can be had for the asking. Address

JAMIESON, FAUSSETT, AND BROWN
A Popular Commentary on the Old and New Testament: Critical, Practical and Explanatory. 4 vols. in box, 8vo., cloth, $8. Half mor. $10.

A New Edition, containing the complete unabridged notes in clear type on good paper. With copious index numerous illustrations and maps, and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

This is the only Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within the reach of the masses, while no commentary published is so highly commended, or so well adapted for the home, the teacher, or the preacher.

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent D. D.

"I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it."—C. H. Spurgeon.

In cloth sent to any one who sends us ten new subscribers at $1.50 each, prepaid—or for 11 subscribers at $1.50 each we will send the half morocco edition.

Say Sees.

Every man who owns a good driving horse, and is proud of him, will look after his food and feeding, and provide what will contribute to his muscle, speed and endurance.

Rubbing a bruise in sweet oil and then in spirits of turpentine, it is said, will usually prevent the unsightly black and blue spots, which not only tell tales, but deform.

Nothing Stands as High, as a remedy for every womanly ailment, as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Here is the proof. It's the only medicine for women so certain in its effects that it can be guaranteed. In every case, if it doesn't cure, your money is returned. Can anything else, though it may be better for a tricky dealer to sell, be "just as good" for you to buy?

"Favorite Prescription" is an ivigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and a complete cure for all the fundamental derangements, painful disorders and chronic weaknesses peculiar to the sex.

For young girls entering womanhood; for women at the critical "change of life;" for women approaching confinement; nursing mothers; and every woman who is "run-down," tired, or overworked—it is a special, safe, and certain help.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure constipation, piles, biliousnesa, indigestion, or dyspepsia, and headaches.

One of the things to be considered in the proper management of a husband is the question of food.

It is such a simple thing to be grateful, costs one such little effort, makes such a difference in one's feelings towards others as well as the feelings of others towards one, that it seems strange every one does not cultivate the habit of being grateful. In whatever spirit a person does one a favour, gratefulness toward the donor pleases that person and softens one's own heart.

New Series Presbyterian Sabbath-School Papers.

Greatly Enlarged, Much Improved, New Features.

Beginning with the Fourth Quarter, the Presbyterian Committee of Publication are pleased to announce that their Sabbath-School Papers will be greatly enlarged, and so much improved that no publications of like character will be more helpful in themselves or handsome in appearance—their desire being to make them in all respects so superior that it will be to the advantage of all the Schools of the Southern Presbyterian Church to use them. They have added another Quarterly to their list of publications, and no doubt the Teachers of the Infant Class will welcome it—the PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

Notwithstanding the enlargement, the terms of subscription will remain the same as heretofore, enabling them to say that they are the cheapest publications published for the Sunday Schools of any denomination. Samples sent on application.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

There are indications of a strong and widespread desire in the hearts of Protestant Christians for a closer union of the churches. Nearly all the Presbyteries of the Northern Assembly have expressed their approval of "the Plan of Federation of the Reformed churches:" the Southern Baptist Convention, in its meeting at Fort Worth, Texas, appointed a committee to confer with other denominations and consider what can be done to bring about unity: and the Episcopal Church, both in England and in this country has been making overtures of union to the other denominations. As yet, however, little has been accomplished, except to turn the thoughts of Christians to the subject. The movement in the Episcopal Church, which at one time roused some enthusiasm, seems to be coming to a painful and ludicrous conclusion. The "Independent," of New York, sent out a circular letter to the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, propounding certain questions, which, in its view, must be answered as preliminary to any negotiations between the churches. To these questions twenty-six bishops sent answers, from which it appeared that they did not admit that the Presbyterian Church was possessed of a valid ministry, and regarded mutual recognition in the way of an exchange of pulpits, and other manifestations of reciprocity as quite out of the question. Thus, unmasked, the proposition of the Episcopal Church was seen to amount only to a willingness on their part to receive the Presbyterians, if they will give up one of their distinctive principles and become Episcopalians. Influenced probably by this, the last General Assembly of the Northern church, at the request of its committee, directed that further correspondence with the commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church should be suspended until that commission should receive from its General Convention instructions to accept and act upon the doctrine of mutual recognition and reciprocity. And, following this, Bishop Coxe, of Western New York, has published in the Churchman of September 29th, an open letter to Rev. Dr. Shields, of Princeton, N. J., in which he expresses his disappointment at the defeat of the majestic movement for Church restoration, (for thus he phrased it.)

Now, to my mind, the failure of these negotiations was inevitable. Christian Unity cannot be attained by one denomination swallowing up the others. Good men cannot compromise their principles, nor strangle their consciences even for the sake of unity. Nor does the unity for which Christ prayed require this. His prayer was, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." This refers not to unity of forms, discipline, government and the like, but for unity of heart and feeling. "That they may be one in us" points to that unity through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, which makes true Christians everywhere "of one mind, and of one spirit." Hence Christian unity is to be expected and striven for, not by the formation of a new Church, with a creed acceptable to all; but by the attainment of a deeper piety,—a more intimate fellowship with Jesus, and a more complete separation from the world. The asperities of denominational difference have already been softened by the Spirit of Christ, for there is much more Christian courtesy and brotherly love between the denominations now, than there was a century ago. May this work of the Spirit go on, until an overpowering love of Jesus, and all His, will unite us so closely in the bonds of "the common salvation," that all differences can be considered in the spirit of love and forbearance. This Spirit of Consecration can bring about true unity—and we think there is no other way.

DAVIDSON DOTS.

Last night, Friday, Nov. 9th, Mr. Polk Miller, of Richmond, the famous interpreter of the ante-bellum negro's character gave a delightful entertainment in the Y. M. C. A., Hall, and under the auspices of the Association, with whom the gross receipts of the evening were shared. Mr. Miller is so natural, so unaffected, so thoroughly acquainted with his subject, and so humorous withal, that he captured the hearts of young and old alike. Songs, recitations, character sketches, gleams of wit and humor, with touches of genuine pathos, followed one another with so much spontaneity that the whole evening was a succession of delightful surprises. The college and the community are indebted to the Y. M. C. A., and especially to its enterprising member, Mr. J. E. Brown, for one of the most enjoyable entertainments ever given at Davidson.

The Library has been catalogued by subjects, by titles, and by authors. Eight large handsomely bound folios are the result of this tedious and arduous as well as expensive undertaking. All the books are catalogued now except the Government documents. These will be carefully catalogued by subjects, so that a student who wishes to investigate any special subject can find all that has been written on it by the best experts in the country. As the collection of public documents in the Library is well nigh complete, such a catalogue will be invaluable. With these several catalogues and Poole's Index to Periodicals, we shall have a thoroughly, good, working library with as little trash in it, we believe, as in any library in the State. A gentleman of exquisite culture and wide attainments, whose hebdomadal "Ink Spots" delight the readers of the N. C. Presbyterian, has examined closely our collection of books, and speaks in warmest terms of their striking adaptedness to students.

In my last letter, I forgot to mention the fact that the class-rooms, whose benches have long been literally thorns in the flesh, are now thoroughly fitted up with seats of the most approved modern pattern, so that professor and student need no longer blush for shame when an occasional visitor drops into the class-room.

An interesting club has lately been organized by the Professor of English, who is filling temporarily the Chair of History, pending the early election of a regular professor for that important department. The membership is limited to twenty, most of whom are from the class in Historical and Practical Politics. The object of the club is the study of current history. Each member has assigned to him one special country or some phase of a country's history. He is expected to watch the course of events in it and to apprize the other members of the club of all the important happenings in social, political, literary, educational and religious life.

Special topics are assigned for each meeting, and after they have been discussed, each member is expected to report informally what is going on in the country of whose history he is making a special study. The meetings are held every other Monday night. So far such topics as the Populist Party, Russian Village Life, and the present status and prospects of the House of Lords, have been discussed. At the next meeting the Japan-China War, the German Emperor's Character and Military Policy, and the prospective Australian Union are the topics for the special discussion. Students live too much in the past and unreal. It is believed that a club of this sort will bring them into contact and sympathy with the present, and thus better fit them for life and especially for citizenship. C.

NEWS FROM BRAZIL.

Rev. W. M. Thompson.

"I don't know what is going to happen to us here. Our enemies are marshalling their forces for some purpose as yet unknown to me. The monk has arrived and preaches every night and is confessing, confirming and marrying hundreds. Crowds go to hear him. I don't know how long he will be here.

"He has not yet attacked us openly but no doubt he touches us up whenever he finds it convenient. On the last steamer arrived two priests, and I hear that ten more are expected in a few days. There are two already here, so you see there are actually here four priests and one monk.

"Now what is their purpose? A friend told me yesterday that he heard that a priest was to be placed on every square in the city to preach, in order to finish up the Protestants. Whether this is true or not I can't say, but it is not probable. If they want to drive us out from here they will never do it by this means.

"I wish you could see a tract, that has just been published against us, called 'Questions and Answers about Protestantism.' I will give you a few specimens.

1. "What does Protestantism mean?"

"It means a rebellion of vain men against Jesus Christ and His Church."

2. "Who originated Protestantism?"

"Martin Luther, native of Alta-Saxony, who rebelled against the Pope, Leo X, in 1517."

"What was said of Luther?"

"That he was most depraved, brutal and inhuman, without piety, more of a Jew than a Christian."

"Who was Calvin?"

"Calvin was a beneficiary of the Church, son of a cooper. He was tried and condemned for the sin of sodomy."

"What was his sentence?"

"That he should be branded on the back with a red hot iron."

"What was the end of Calvin?"

"He died, (in despair blaspheming and calling on the Devil,) of a disease the most revolting—eaten of worms."

Speaking then of Henry VIII of England and of those he put to death the questions continue.

"Were there other executions?"

"Yes, during the 38 years of his reign there were executed only 2 Cardinals, 2 Archbishops, 18 Bishops, 13 Abbots, 500 Priors and Monks, 38 Doctors, 12 Dukes, 164 Gentlemen, 124 Burghers and 110 Women."

"Were such monsters the founders of Protestantism?"

"Yes, these were the great saints, so praised and held up, by the Protestants as more virtuous than the Apostles, the Holy Fathers and Doctors of the Church; more holy than all the Popes, Bishops and Priests of Catholicism."

"Well, I suppose it is useless to cite any more—the thing is full of just such things—and even worse. The tract contains about 5,000 words; and there are 2,000 copies to be distributed, I believe, while the Monk is here.

"I don't think I ever saw anything equal to it. You can see that Satan is its author—no one but one possessed by the Devil could write such miserable, barefaced lies.

"I understand that it is principally the rabble that go to hear the monk. I was told last night that he complained in one of his sermons that the best people did not go, and that they were doing wrong in not going. It is sad, but true, that the better class are almost entirely indifferent to all religions. They have found nothing in the Romish Church and hence conclude that all are alike worthless.

"I do hope the committee will see its way clear to send us help this year as our need is very pressing."

Caxias, Brazil, Sept. 26th–28th, '94.

INK SPOTS.

"The religious life is based upon authority," says a writer; "while the intellectual life is based upon investigation." This is a covert sneer at religion as not based on investigation. It shows confusion of thought. If by a religious life this writer means religious belief, that belief rests ultimately on investigation, just as much as the facts of science. True, I believe certain statements on Scripture authority, but, I believe in the authority of Scripture because investigation has satisfied me that it is God's Word. I may examine the external evidences that God gave the Bible and be fully satisfied that it is from Him; or I may study, and investigate the Bible itself, and thus satisfy my reason, that this book could not have come from man, that its character shows that only God could give such a book.

Then, as to the religious life, it is based on experience, just as much as the truths of science. We learn the facts of science through observation and reflection and experiment. Science is based on experience of the outward—religion on the heart, on the experince of the inward. I see certain facts in nature—I feel certain facts in my soul—I experience facts in nature due to certain causes which I test, mechanical or chemical or vital. I experience certain facts also in my soul—change from sin to holiness, new views of sin, of God, of Christ. A perception of what faith in Jesus is. I test the cause of this change in thoughts, views, feelings, mode of life—my investigation. My mind says nothing short of God could have given me this new experience, this new state. Then I find this Book, which, on investigation, I satisfied myself was from God, had stated that if I believed it, and acted on its statements, I should find in myself, just what I have experienced. Here, now is investigation and experience going hand in hand in religion and the religious life, just as much as in the facts of science.

"Martha and Mary represent two types of piety, one busy with acts; the other with dispositions and reflections. One was doing, the other being and pondering, yet both were drawn to Jesus—both loved him. While Martha made the house ring with quick flying footsteps and witnessed her love by deeds, Mary witnessed her love by sitting at Jesus' feet, and so it is with sisters still. We have in every church Marthas—faithful Christians, with rich development in outward activity, and Marys, not efficient in outward activity, but chiefly deep in the inward life, and rich in the soul's affections. Martha did not understand Mary, though Mary understood Martha—and so it is still. There are persons, deeply loving and serving Christ, but who do not show it in activities that others abound in." Both the contemplative and active Christians have their weak side. The contemplative, brooding, meditative Christian should see that outward work should not be neglected—and the bustling one, beware that active exertion should not leave the inner life thin and shallow. The one should force itself inward—the other force itself outward. As genuine religion in the soul is not knowledge without emotion, nor blind emotion without knowledge, so genuine religious life should blend, in one harmonious whole, meditation and action.

* * *

"I knew a worthy clergyman," says an English writer, "who from conscientious motives denied himself wine and beer, but found consolation in the tea pot. His usual allowance, sixteen cups, all of heroic strength, and the effect upon his brain was altogether favorable, for his sermons were both long and eloquent, and to this day, he is preaching without any diminution of his powers." He surely must have been iron-clad without, and copper sheathed within. He must have been also the original Tetotaller. "But," says one, "there are stimulants and stimulants; however, not the nectar of the gods is worth the dash of the wave upon the beach, and the pure, cool air of the morning."

* * *

"Any person gifted with common sense can perceive that life is short and that time flies, and that he ought to make good use of the present; but it requires often consummate wisdom to know exactly what ought to be done, and what ought to be left undone." But we can act safely on Carlyle's maxim, "Do the duty that we know lies nearest at hand, that done, the way may open up to us as to what should be done next; just as, in crossing a stream on stepping stones, as we go from one to another, we find what we could not perhaps see when we started, stones all the way across."

"The personages most popular in Democratic countries are often remarkably deficient in dignity and liked the better for it, while, if on the positive side, they can display occasional coarseness they become more popular still. Then I should say, that, although Democratic feeling raises the lower classes and increases their self-respect, which is indeed of incalculble benefit, it has a tendencey to fix one uniform type of behaviour and thought as the sole type in conformity with what is accepted for 'common sense,' and that type cannot in the nature of things be of a very high type.' How lamentably true is this in the United States; and there is only one remedy, that Christian education, which opens and liberalizes the intellect, and elevates the moral tone. The infidel and scorner are the deadliest foes to the uplifting of the people.

* * *

"Inspirations come only to the disciplined, the workers; the idle wait in vain." The discovery always comes to the man who was always thinking along that line. "To him that hath shall be given," is as true here, as in religion. The man whose sails are set, catches the wind. The man who runs after the train, generally gets left; he gets on who was ready, waiting for it, when it came. Those only see the dawn who rise early and set their faces toward the East.

TO-DAY.

Lo, here hath been dawning
Another blue day;
Think, wilt thou let it
Slip useless away?

Out of eternity
This new day is born;
Into eternity
At night will return.

Behold it aforetime
No eye ever did;
So soon it forever
From all eyes is hid.

Here hath been dawning
Another blue day;
Think, wilt thou let it
Slip useless away?

REPORT ON COLORED EVANGELIZATION.

The interest of the Synod in the spiritual welfare of the numerous colored population within its bounds has received some impulse within the last year, yet the progress falls very far short of our obligation, and even of the modest standard of enterprise which this venerable body set for itself at the last meeting of Synod. Then it was,

Resolved, "That with the view of assisting the general work and at the same time placing a Synod's colored evangelist for the colored people within our own bounds, we recommend that this Synod shall endeavor to raise $3,000 for this work from the December collection." Page 196 of minutes.

Instead of raising this amount or an average per communicant of some ten cents, our collections for the year only amounted to $1,182. Under the circumstances the employment of an evangelist was impracticable, long delay was inevitable and our report is one of slow progress.

ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY.

This Presbytery has but little to report. There was an opening for the establishment of a colored Presbyterian church at Washington, and it was hoped that the labors of a colored evangelist, could one have been secured, would have resulted in realizing this. The effective labors of Rev. S. G. Walker, at this point, promised substantial results. A plan is now held in view to follow up this work.

THE PRESBYTERY OF CONCORD.

This Presbytery has no colored work reported.

FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

Fayetteville Presbytery has two churches within its bounds called Bomo and McPhatter. The Presbytery gave $25 for the erection of the building for the former church and $50 to the support of their minister Rev. R. C. James, whose work is in an encouraging state.

MECKLENBURG.

This Presbytery has one church at Asheville. It is under the care of Rev. J. S. Morrow, who preaches regularly in a rented hall. There are twenty communicants and he has a flourishing Sabbath-school of 140 pupils. Within the last year he has held 156 services. Four communicants have been added to the church and two adults and one infant baptized, are reported. The church has paid its pastor $30, raised $4.50 for objects of benevolence and $65.00 for rent of hall. There has been no substantial progress towards the erection of a church building. Subscriptions for the purchase of a lot are earnestly solicited. A gentleman in Louisville, Ky., offers $50 for the erection of a building if this can be secured. Will not our Synod aid in this needy enterprise?

WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

But little, if any progress has been made here. We learn that Rev. M. P. Jenkins, is still laboring at Beaufort, but cannot report the results of his efforts. He is in part sustained by the colored evangelistic fund.

ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The most encouraging work in the Synod has been effected by the Presbytery of Orange in the western part of its territory, through the labors of Rev. S. G. Walker, of Elkin. He has preached regularly to the church at Elkin where he has recently conducted a protracted meeting with encouraging results. Two were added to the church and there are some sixteen communicants at this point. At Danbury, in Stokes county, monthly services are held. The work is encouraging. A church consisting of eighteen members has been organized and one ruling elder ordained. Four additional members were received last Sabbath. A church building has been completed with the exception of ceiling, for which means are in sight. In honor of generous benefactors of this enterprise a lady and gentleman of Brooklyn, N.Y., it has been named the Clark Memorial church.

MISSION POINTS.

Mr. Walker reports two very inviting mission points, the first near the Dan River church, (White,) some fourteen miles northwest of Danbury, and the Jessup settlement, eight miles from this point, where he was kindly received in his ministrations. The colored people are in great religious destitution without any evangelical churches near, yet they are generally owners of small farms and living in comparative comfort.

NORTH WILKESBORO.

Here Mr. Walker preaches about once a month, he reports it as a very fine mission point. The land, material and a great part of the money needed for the erection of a building for church and school purposes has been secured. More than a dozen persons seem prepared to enter a church organization—a much larger number are much interested in the work.

Within the last year Mr. Walker reports number of services conducted, 82; number of conversions, 22; added to church, 34; baptisms administered, 9; churches organized, 1; mission points opened, 2; amount raised for church erection, Danbury, $105; North Wilkesboro, $56.

God has given this work tokens of His approval, and even the feeble efforts we have made through the agency of the General Assembly have been blessed, yea, abundantly blessed. In our own Synod, there are such evidences of Divine favor as gives abundant encouragement. When we consider God's readiness to smile upon our poor offerings, we should indeed take courage. From reports of the General Assembly and the Colored Evangelistic Committee at Birmingham, we learn that of twenty-eight churches in Albemarle Presbytery, twelve contributing to this cause, gave $107. In Concord Presbytery, thirty churches, twenty-eight contributing, gave $146. In Fayetteville Presbytery, seventy-four churches, forty-one contributed $164. In Mecklenburg Presbytery, eighty-one churches, forty-six contributed $370. In Orange Presbytery, fifty-two churches, twenty-nine contributed $227. In Wilmington Presbytery, forty-two churches, thirteen contributed $168. Total $1,182.

This amount was contributed by 169 churches out of the 327 comprising the Synod, 158 nearly one-half gave nothing.

Your committee offers the following resolutions:

Resolved 1st. We call attention to the action of the Synod last year and urge an earnest effort to raise $3,000 for this work by apportionment among the Presbyteries as follows: Albemarle Presbytery $150; Concord Presbytery, $400; Fayetteville Presbytery, $500; Orange Presbytery, $450; Wilmington Presbytery, $300; Mecklenburg Presbytery has already apportioned herself, $1200. Total $3,000.

2d. In view of the increased demand for an evangelist to aid the colored brethren in the Synod and to open up new points of work, we recommend that efforts be made to secure a suitable man for the whole or a part of his time, and that the Synodical Agent of Colored Evangelization be authorized to draw on the Secretary of Colored Evangelization at Birmingham for his salary.

3rd. We urge all of our ministers to bring the spiritual interests of the colored people before their congregations in the month of December and to give their earnest prayers as they appeal to them for their benevolent aid.

4th. With respect to the overture from Orange Presbytery, looking to the establishment of an Industrial School for the colored people at North Wilkesboro or other suitable point, reported by the Synod to this committee, we recommend that the overture be granted and that a Board of twelve Directors be appointed by this Synod to take this matter in hand. That they be directed to convene and organize at this meeting of Synod, and that to this Board be entrusted the duty of devising means for raising funds and directing the management of said Institution.

5th. That at the instance of the pastor of the church, whose hospitality we share, a collection be raised to-night for the benefit of the church enterprises of Rev. J. S. Morrow and Rev. S. G. Walker.

6th. That the following brethren be elected members of the Board of Directors: * * * and that Synod appoint the Synodical Agent of Colored Evangelization, Rev. W. D. Morton, Chairman of this Board.

W. D. MORTON,
Chairman.

Parental Responsibility.

In the eighteenth chapter of Genesis we have a very clear statement of the divine reason for choosing Abraham to be the founder of the Church and the father of a people through whom God's best gifts were to come to men. Doubtless among the fire-worshipers about Ur of the Chaldees there were men as wise and as brave—perhaps as good—as Abraham; but he was pre-eminent in one quality that fitted him for the great place to which Providence called him. Lacking this quality, the possession of all the virtues would not have fitted him for his high and peculiar calling. As a reason for revealing to him what he was about to do with the wicked cities of the plain, the Lord says: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."

More had been promised to Abraham than to any one who went before or who came after him. Unless his descendants did "justice and judgment," the divine purpose towards them could not be carried out. In the nature of things the character of his descendants would turn upon the quality of his family government. Unless children be governed aright, they will not walk in God's ways; if they do not, God cannot carry out his purposes of blessing upon them—an old-fashioned philosophy too little thought of nowadays.

The relation between sowing barley and reaping barley is not more fixed in nature than the relation between family government and the character of children when they go out for themselves into the world to become new centres of life. Good citizenship does not come out of families where parents neglect their children and children disobey their parents. It cannot. Anarchists are developed by domestic anarchy. It would be instructive if one had a reliable record of the home life of the men and women who hate order and spend their time making bombs and plotting the overthrow of government.

Concerning a little boy in violent insurrection, a young mother was heard to say, as explaining her failure to compel obedience: "I cannot bear to punish him; I want him to grow up to love me." She could not have been farther from the truth of things. She did not know the first principles of family life. A child who grows up in habits of disobedience to his parents and in contempt for parental authority, will never truly love them. True love to parents has its root in obedience. So have the other virtues which develop children into men and women who honor their parents and bless the world. The men and women who turn upon their parents when they are old, treat them unkindly, and wait impatiently for them to die, are those who were disobedient children.

Very instructive to us is the divine reason for the selection of Abraham for the great redeeming plans of Providence. The progress of the race has found no substitute for the Abrahamic plan of family life. We have many appliances unknown to him. Our schools—secular and religious, weekly and Sunday—our whole modern Christian civilization, may help parents to do their work; but nothing can substitute the work of parents in the sacred task of rearing children in virtue and honor for usefulness and for heaven. Having all else and lacking good family government, the lack is fatal. Without this all else will fail.

During the nine years my relation to the "John F. Slater Fund" carried me to schools and churches for the negro race throughout the South, I spoke and preached to these marvelous children of Providence hundreds of times. And most times I tried to show them God's plan of family life. Often I said to them: "Your having been slaves is not your greatest trouble; nor color, nor ignorance, nor prejudice, nor poverty. Your greatest lack is the want of sensible steady-going, Christian family government." It is also true of the white people of our country. It is the weak place in our whole social organization.—Bishop Atticus G. Haygood, in Zion's Herald.

Sensational Preaching.

BY REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D. D.

The sensationalism of the present day pulpit is of three kinds:

The first is pulpit buffoonery; that is, the use of unseemly modes of speech, vulgarisms, or current phrases not adapted to the sacredness of the house of God. It is an easy thing for a pastor to force himself into public notice if he has no compunctions against stooping. All things are popular which are malapropos. Low comedy in its own place may suffer for the want of an audience; but low comedy in the temple of the Most High God will fill the pews, the aisles and vestibules. Men love the humor of inappropriateness. The clown in the playhouse may fail to amuse; but, if you put his cap and bells where the mitre ought to be—on the priest's head—there will be no end of applause. When a street arab uses the dialect of low life no one thinks it worthy of attention; but let a preacher lean over his sacred desk and utter it, and his hearers say with one accord: "We will hear thee again concerning this matter."

It is written that a vast multitude once came together to see Antiochus lay unclean flesh upon the temple altar. There have been Christian pulpits that offered the same attraction. If the uplifting of the cross will not "draw," we must add the magnetism of something else; and the more inappropriate the better. An earring in a lady's ear is a thing of beauty, but it has been wisely said that a "jewel in a swine's snout" is more remarkable still. The world delights to see things out of place. The man who will advertise to preach on some common and notorious scandal will have a well-filled church; and if, with careful tact, he will graze as near to uncleanness as he may, without being wrecked, prudently hinting at certain things which it might not be wise to express in Anglo-Saxon, and handling the case so delicately as to be praised for his skill in painting a rainbow over a cess-pool, he will ever afterward be famous in the esteem of all who falsely deem the church to be a kind of inn, a place of "entertainment for man and beast." God may be offended, angels may blush, but he has gained what he sought for, the praises of men, and, haply, the notice of the press. This is the cheapest form of sensationalism, and the surest way to the public heart. Yet it seems after all like selling one's birthright for a mess of pottage. The income from the eulogy of ungodly men is no equivalent for the outlay of self-respect and the forfeiture of Divine approbation. It is required of every minister of Jesus Christ that he shall magnify his office; and to do this he must at least hold fast the form of sound and decorous words. The world may applaud, but, at the same time, it despises the man, anointed of God, who stoops to pander to its vulgar tastes. For "the world" is as well aware as we, that holiness becometh the Lord's house.

He that negotiates, between heaven and earth,
As God's Ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful.
To court a laugh when one should woo a soul,
To break a jest when pity would inspire
Pathetic exhortations; and address
The skittish fancy, with facetious tales,
When sent with God's commission to the heart.

True Bravery.

Between fifty and sixty years ago, three little boys were amusing themselves together in a wood lodge one summer forenoon. Soon one of them looked grave and left off playing, "I have forgotten something," he said. "I forgot to say my prayers this morning you must wait for me." He went quietly into a corner of the place they were in, and knelt down, and reverently repeated his morning prayer. Then he returned to the others, and was soon merrily engaged in play again. This brave boy grew up to be a man. He was the gallant Captain Hammond who nobly served Queen and country till he fell headlong leading on his men to the attack on the Redan at the siege of Sebastapol. He was a faithful soldier to his earthly sovereign but better still, a good soldier of Jesus Christ, never ashamed of His service, ever ready to fight His battle.

The Secret of Patience.

My mother's habit was every day, immediately after breakfast, to withdraw for one hour to her own room, and to spend that hour in reading the Bible, in meditation and prayer. From that hour, as from a pure fountain, she drew the strength and sweetness which enabled her to fulfil all her duties, and to remain unruffled by all the worries and pettishnesses which are so often the intolerable trial of narrow neighborhoods. As I think of her life, and of all it had to bear, I see the absolute triumph of Christian grace in the lovely ideal of a Christian lady. I never saw her temper disturbed; I never heard her speak one word of anger or calumny, or of idle gossip; I never observed in her any sign of a single sentiment unbecoming to a soul which had drunk of the river of the water of life, and which had fed upon the manna in the barren wilderness. The world is the better for the passage of such souls across its surface. They may seem to be as much forgotten as the drops of rain which fall into the barren sea, but each drop adds to the volume of refreshful and purifying waters. "The healing of the world is in its nameless saints. A single star seems nothing, but a thousand scattered stars break up the night, and make it beautiful."—F. W. Farrar.

THE WATER-FOWL.

"There is a path which no fowl knoweth."

Whither, 'midst falling dew,
While glow the heavens with the last steps of day,
Far through their rosy depths, dost thou pursue
Thy solitary way?

Vainly the fowler's eye
Might mark thy distant flight to do thee wrong,
As, darkly painted in the crimson sky,
Thy figure floats along.

Seek'st thou the plashy brink,
Of ready lake, or marge of river wide,
Or where the rocking billows rise and sink
On the chafed ocean-side?

There is a power, whose care
Teaches thy way along that pathless coast—
The desert, and illimitable air—
Lone wandering, but not lost.

All day thy wings have fanned,
At that far height the cold, thin atmosphere;
Yet stoop not, weary, to the welcomed land,
Though the dark night is near.

And soon that toil shall end;
Soon shalt thou find a summer home, and rest
And scream among thy fellows: reeds shall bend
Soon o'er thy sheltered nest.

Thou'st gone; the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given,
And shall not soon depart.

He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way, that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

BOOKS.

Talks to Children About Jesus. By Mrs. G. E. Morton; R. H. Woodward Co., Baltimore. Pages 319. Price, cloth, $1.50. The author shows rare genius for telling the gospel story to the litttle ones; and the book is cordially commended to parents and Sunday-school teachers.

MAGAZINES.

Pansy for November contains much that will interest and delight the children. Among the Thanksgiving articles, we note: The Best Thanksgiving, by F. A. Power, and a Thanksgiving Story, not long, but sad. This is a good children's magazine. Published by Lothrop Publishing Co., Purchase St., Boston. Price, $1.00 per year.

The second Napoleon article in McClure's, for December, presents fourteen more portraits of Napoleon, showing him at the time he suddenly became the greatest man of his day. The story of his love for Josephine and marriage, and his extraordinary campaigns in Italy and Egypt, and his marvelous rise to the supreme head of France, is fully told in this number.

The scene of Rudyard Kipling's first American story, which is to appear in the December number of The Century, is laid in Vermont, and all of the dramatis personae are horses. The "walking delegate," from whom the story takes its name, is a raw-boned horse from Kansas, who tries to stir his companions to rise in their might against the Oppressor Man.

OUR COLORED EVANGELISTIC WORK, A CALM REVIEW.

LOOK BACK.

The origin of the work of Southern Presbyterians to save the Negroes is not known. It began when the first negro slave entered the family of the first Presbyterian slave-owner. It has continued without interruption ever since. It was done privately in the family before the war and publicly in church. It has been done so since the war. By a slow process of evolution we have arrived at a definite purpose and an organized plan. The purpose is to aid the negro to establish an independent African Presbyterian Church. The plan is to carry this purpose into effect through the agency of the Executive Committee of Colored Evangelization. Years of experience have deepened the conviction that our purpose is right and wise. It is firmly fixed in the minds of our people. It cannot be changed now. The plan is the result of growth, and has been endorsed by many Assemblies, the Nashville Assembly endorsing it most emphatically. A fixed purpose, an established plan—now what?

LOOK AROUND!

As at present administered the plan embraces three lines of work:

1. Ministerial Education. Of course there could be no fully developed Church without a ministry. When our our plan was adopted in 1894, there were a very few colored Presbyterian ministers available. We had to make them. We must find over the Church colored men of sufficient mental training and especially of good character, whom we could train to preach to their people. So in 1877 the Institute for Training Colored Ministers, (now Stillman Institute), was opened. Since its opening, it has had under instruction 168 students, of whom 109 have been Presbyterians, 45 Methodists, and 14 Baptists. There have been 36 regular Presbyterian graduates—an average of two each year. The Methodists and Baptists got a good salting with Calvinism that may keep them safe. The moral character of our graduates is excellent. They are, as a rule, not sufficiently independent and agressive. But are fully capable of instructing their people by precept and example. Of the 109 Presbyterian students, 45 are now preaching in the Church; some have died, and some have gone into other denominations. Two of them have planted our standard in the heart of Africa where the fight with the powers of darkness is hottest. Very few persons understand what is needed to prepare them for the work. They came to us from every direction. Nearly all of them have come from the Baptist and Methodist churches, and are ignorant of Presbyterian doctrine and Presbyterian life. Their homes have often been very poor, their training exceedingly meager and superficial. Many of them have been preachers. With bodies uncared for, often with uncouth manners, always with untrained minds, with shadowy conceptions of the nature of spiritual power, with exceedingly imperfect ideas of the qualities and work of the Christian minister, they are raw material indeed. Of course there are rare exceptions to these facts. We try to make of them Christians of a high type, gentlemen and scholars. The work is exceedingly difficult and embraces everything from collecting and fitting clothes, through reading, arithmetic, Physiology, Shorter Catechism, Evidences of Christianity, to Systematic Theology and perhaps a wife. Gentleness, firmness, patience and skill of a high order are needed. But the work is its own reward. Are we not making men?

When men graduate from Stillman Institute and wish to remain in America, two courses are open to them. They can take charge of some feeble church or can enter purely evangelistic work. Hence our committee has a department.

2. Destitution. Scattered over the Church there have been small bands of colored Presbyterians, too few, or too poor to do much for themselves. When we can, we send to these people a minister to train them in the Christian life. Every colored church that we have, partakes more or less of this character. They must be helped or abandoned. At present we have 66 of them with 130 elders, and 83 deacons, and 1,500 members. The life of these churches is like that of any other church—when the people are alive and united and the pastor is diligent and efficient, there is growth. Otherwise there is no progress.

3. Evangelistic. In some places there is a real desire amongst white and colored people for the establishment of a Presbyterian Church. There is plenty of material on every side for growth. Hence we turn to evangelistic work pure and simple. Almost all the colored ministers do some of this work. But there are fields of great promise open to us almost everywhere, which we cannot enter for lack of men and money.

Besides this work in the home-field, arrangements have been made for the instruction of men under appointment to go to Africa as missionaries. So that our plan embraces the colored man here and in Africa.

Above have been outlined our purpose and our plan, with some results. The work is real. It is going on now. It must be carried on or abandoned. Why talk of what we have done or what we shall do, when what we are doing is before us. There is no use in saying if this had been, or if this should be, then we might do so and so. We actually have 47 colored ministers, 66 colored churches, and 1,500 colored members. What are we doing with them? This is a purely missionary work, and necessarily receives in money more than it gives. From April 1st, 1894, to November 1st, the money needed for this work was $5,067, or $725 a month. To meet this necessary expense, we have received about $2,700, or $243 a month. For eight months, beginning October 1st, we shall need $1,000 a month to meet running expenses, including Stillman Institute, colored ministers' salaries, and secretary's salary and expenses. But this is not all, April 1st, last, there were unpaid appropriations from last year amounting to $1,311. October 1st, this cause was in debt $3,212. No new or enlarged work had been attempted in that time, except to put three graduates to work and promise to pay them a small sum monthly. The burden of this debt has fallen on the colored ministers in the field, who can ill afford to carry it.

LOOK AHEAD!

Consider carefully—what is the use of increasing the number of ministers while those we have are barely kept alive? The Stillman Institute is in first-class condition so far as the instruction is concerned. The work being done there will stand any reasonable test. It will not be difficult to increase largely the present number of students. But why build up the Institute when the men who leave it will not be supported properly? Is it not folly? The Executive committee is seriously considering whether or not to limit the number of students until men in the field shall receive due consideration. What a shame would it be that properly qualified applicants should stand at the door of our Institute and be denied entrance because our great Church will not give the small sum of $12,000 a year! Will not that be to hinder God's work most seriously?

LOOK UP.

What is needed? 1st. In regard to this colored work particularly, the whole Church needs a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Some things seem to suggest that the Church is not actively interested. Are we not rather letting the work be done under our patronage and in our name than entering into it with a determination to make it a grand success? The difficulties are immense; they almost paralyze us. Intimate knowledge of the negro takes away our enthusiasm. But why should we not become partakers of the Divine energy in this matter? Is not the gospel of Christ the only lever long enough and strong enough to elevate him? Get on the lever and prize—don't stand off and pass resolutions. O, that the Holy Spirit would arouse us to our full duty of active participation!

2d. We need to have the secretary make an official visitation of all the colored churches that received aid from the Assembly's treasury to instruct, to warn, to exhort, to comfort, to stimulate the people. An efficient teacher has been secured for the Academic Department in the Institute, and the secretary is now ready to go. But he is hindered by the necessity of raising money.

3d. We need $12,000 from the December collection. Some of us have been praying that the Lord would send us this amount, but we have rather thought that He was not going to do it. The money must come from the churches. If pastors and other officers will give the people of God an opportunity to contribute, we shall get the money. Cannot 2,700 churches raise $12,000? It is absurd to ask the question! But we are not raising it!

STOP LOOKING AND GIVE!

That is the conclusion of the whole matter! Now is the time! Let us do this work in Jesus' name, with liberality and power. Thus shall souls be redeemed and He shall be glorified. Brethren, lend a hand.

Yours fraternally,
A. L. PHILLIPPS,
Secretary.

The Salvation Army.

Last week was devoted to the reception of General Booth. The Salvation Army captured the city. The assemblies in Union Square, in Carnegie Music Hall, and in Cooper Union, were immense. The address of welcome, by Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, was able and characteristic. He never fails. His versatility and almost matchless skill in adapting himself to all subjects and every class, makes him the most popular speaker in New York. It is quite certain, however, that he was somewhat disconcerted by the religious enthusiasm of the Salvationists, and the peculiar modes of its expression, yet like a master sailor he weathered the storm and won fresh laurels.

But General Booth was on all occasions the chief attraction. He is a very unique person: picturesque, intensely English, deeply in earnest, and in his mode of work, remarkbly original. Apparently well on in the seventies and somewhat bent in form, he illustrates the power of religious enthusiasm to rise above physical infirmity and use all the resources it can command until the work is done. There will be no eventide in the experience of General Booth; a period given to quiet reflection in retirement. He will probably labor on until the bow of his strength unexpectedly breaks, amid the shouts of his advancing army.

Only once did I have the opportunity of hearing him speak. It was in the Cooper Union, a subterranean hall, reached by a long stairway leading down from the pavement, beneath the roll and roar of the city. The place was crowded. Over three thousand people filled the benches and covered the platform. The General in his peculiar dress, his appearance unattractive, his long gray hair unkempt, and his person bent, was leaning on his little pulpit talking in a low voice to those who sat near by, but after a little, the slumbering fire kindled into a flame, and with a loud voice, in an excited manner, walking the platform, he poured forth a stream of uncultured eloquence that deeply stirred the great audience who responded in "Amens" and "Hallelujahs," and vociferous cheers. He used plain words. He called things by their right names. He denounced the Higher Criticism in violent terms, and magnified the old-fashioned Gospel as the only hope of lost men, whether on Fifth Avenue or the Bowery. He keeps his soldiers, rank and file, so busy that they have no time to attend any regular service, or listen to any teaching except his own.

The Salvation Army is not a Church. It has no cathedral; no baptismal font, no Lord's table. It is an unique organization, with William Booth at its head, the Commander-in-Chief, with the grades and official orders of a military army, with the severe discipline of an army, every inferior officer and soldier required to obey on the instant or be court-martialed. Already this Salvation Army has gone from the old City Road of London into well nigh the whole earth, declaring natural men rebels against God, helpless in themselves as they are sinful, hopeless without Christ, on their way to perdition, then publishing salvation from the guilt and power and consequences of sin, freely offered to all who will believe in the cross and bow their necks to the easy yoke of Jesus Christ, the Lord of all. There are irregularities in this work that are to be disapproved and flies in the ointment that should be removed, yet take it as it is, and as a mighty whole, with its consecration to noble ends, and its rudimentary teaching which may prepare for the higher schools of Christian culture, we give the Salvation Army God-speed, waiting for some Priscilla and Aquilla to reveal a better way.—Presbyterian.

The Ideal Sunday School.

J. S. KELSEY.

If it be said that the Sabbath-school is the church at study, perhaps it would be somewhere near the mark. The whole church, the aged, ripe for heaven, full of counsel as of hope and peace; the middle-aged, full of vigor as of desire for activity and usefulness; the young men and maidens, abounding with vital energy and thronged with the subtlest perils of life; the children, alert in memory, receptive in mind and in that formative period which decides character for futurity; all classes alike graciously blessed with opportunity to receive and impart more and still more light from the Divine Word. The ideal is high, true, but what ideals are not for the Christian? Sure it is that were a church to resolve itself into such a body of teachers and learners that would be an ideal Sabbath-school. Every hand would hold not a lesson leaf but a Bible. Every book in the Bible would be known in its proper order. Every passage called for would be readily found. Effort would be directed toward thorough familiarity with use of the sacred volume.

But is it practicable to have every member bring, use and become familiar with the Bible in the school? The experience of many years enables me to say it is perfectly practicable. And those brethren in the work everywhere who can testify in like manner will join in the assurance that the results achieved are even more valuable than by our present valued method of narrative teaching. But they can be accomplished only by disciplinary instruction in the school; by incorporation into the regime of its hour of study when the coals of mind and heart are fanned into fervor and interest by the reactions of assembled intercourse and when upon the appointed ground of the visible kingdom the cooperation of the Holy Spirit may be especially relied upon. Home readings are suggested in the current series. They are good. Would that every soul in the church might faithfully follow them. Yet it remains obvious, for reasons familiar to every worker, that the school must call to this duty and carefully and prayerfully meet such exigencies as arise from neglect elsewhere.—Christian Intelligencer.

RHEUMATISM!

The Accepted Time.

There is an old legend of a man who, day-dreaming in his chair, beheld a vision which stood before him and beckoned him to follow her on to fortune. The man waited, heeded not her call, until at last she grew dim and disappeared. Just as the vision faded, he sprang to his feet and cried: "Tell me who thou art!" and received the answer: "I am Opportunity. Once neglected, I never return." Nothing is more trite and frequently heard in religious instruction and exhortation than this very thing we call opportunity. And this is alike wise and according to the Divine Word. The day will not always last. Your day, my day, the world's day, the day of opportunity, the day of grace, the day of salvation—all days are rapidly passing away; and the last day, that which we call the great day, the decisive day, will surely and speedily come. There is opportunity for us to work; by and by the time will depart. While it is day we must work the works of Him that hath sent us, and do what He hath commanded us to do; but if we idle this present opportunity away, it will never return, and the neglect of to-day may never be repaired. To-morrow will bring the work for to-morrow, the duty of to-morrow, and likewise every day that succeeds to-morrow. Therefore let the work of to-day be done to-day, and then we may calmly await the coming of the morrow, if the morrow shall ever come. This trite and old-time truth, every one knows, but all do not heed. Nevertheless, it is such truth as men need to have persistently and repeatedly forced upon them, and always with religious sanctions. "The night cometh wherein no man can work."—Herald and Presbyter.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address:

Rev. R.E.C. Lawson, from Greensboro, N.C., to Belle Haven, Va.

Rev. I. M. Ginn, from Blanchard Springs, Ark., to Hope, Ark.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff, has resigned the Home Mission work in Lenoir and Craven counties, but has not entered on other work permanently. His present address is Concord.

Greensboro:—"We are in the commencement of a protracted meeting. Dr. Morton is with us. Very large and attentive congregations attend, and we pray and hope for great and precious fruits."

Greensboro, First Church:—On last Sunday, we organized in the First church an Extra-cent-a-day Band to aid in the support of the Stokes county Mission. Though the individual amounts pledged were of course small, there were enough of them to make over $510. See Zech. 4:10 again.

EGBERT W. SMITH.

Chapel Hill:—Chapel Hill church on last Sabbath received by letter four additions to its membership and the following were installed as deacons: Dr. T. J. Wilson, Mr. E. L. Harriss and Prof. E. A. Alderman.

D. J. C.

Dover:—Two adults baptized. Three persons received into membership of the Presbyterian church—all on profession of faith in Christ. May God in his providence send a minister to continue the work in this field—which is now left vacant. W.

Wilmington:—Rev. W. A. Alexander, colored, of Plainfield, N. J., formerly pastor of the Chestnut Street Presbyterian church of Wilmington, returned last night to his New Jersey charge, after a visit of two weeks to his friends here. He left here four years ago and came back to spend his vacation and attend the Synod of Catawba, which has been in session in our city. His old congregation has been much pleased with his visit and during his stay they have had him to preach for them. He has also performed a marriage service, baptized three children and made numerous visits. He is very popular with the colored Presbyterians, and they are sorry to see him leave.

Steele Creek:—Rev. J. R. Bridges, of Salem, Va., has declined the call to Steele Creek on account of his wife's health.

Bryson City:—"Rev. Chalmers Moore, late pastor of the Presbyterian church at Hopewell, but who resigned his pastorate, has accepted a call to Bryson City, and was here yesterday on his way thither. Mr. Moore was generally beloved in this section and his departure is regretted.—Charlotte Observer.

Charlotte:—"The plasterers are at work in the First Presbyterian church. The floors are also being laid.

The Christian Workers of the Second church are working like Turks for their bazar which is to be held on December 3rd and 4th. It is to be a great affair, the most unique of its kind yet given in Charlotte.

The managers of the Home met in the Second church yesterday afternoon, (15th inst.) There was a full meeting, and plans for the winter were discussed at length."—Charlotte Observer.

Concord:—Next Sunday will be a day of unusual interest to the Presbyterians in Concord, as that is the appointed time for the installation of Rev. W. C. Alexander as pastor of the First Presbyterian church at that place. Dr. Shearer, of Davidson College, Dr. Wharey, of Mooresville, and Rev. R. W. Lancaster, of Rocky River, will conduct the installation services, which will take place at night. Dr. Wharey will occupy the pulpit in the morning. Dr. Shearer will preach the sermon at 7 o'clock p. m., and be succeeded by Dr. Wharey, who will deliver the charge to the congregation, and by Rev. Mr. Lancaster, who will deliver the charge to the pastor.

Every day since Mr. Alexander's arrival among his people their endearment for him has broadened and strengthened and they will enter into the relation to be consummated on next Sunday with heartfelt pleasure and loving fervor. This church has been peculiarly blest, in that, having to give up one gifted pastor they have found so worthy a successor.—Charlotte News.

Weaverton Church:—Rev. Geo. A. Hough has recently received seven members to the Weaverton church. Five male adults and two females. He preaches there on the fourth Sunday afternoon and night.

Big Rockfish:—The Lord's Supper was celebrated at this church on the second Sabbath in November. The preparatory services commenced on Friday night with a sermon by Rev. K. McDonald, of Ivanhoe. On Saturday morning Rev. A. McDonald, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., arrived and preached the 11 o'clock sermon, also the communion sermon on Sunday morning. The sacrament was then administered by Rev. K. McDonald. These two brethren are brothers, and there are two other sons of this church who are ministers. It was planned by the pastor to have the four present on this occasion and have a kind of reunion. All were invited, but two were so engaged in the Master's work that they could not come. A nice silver communion set, (including baptismal bowl,) costing over twenty dollars was presented to the session and congregation by three of the ministerial sons, and one layman, showing the high esteem in which the mother church is held by some of her absent, yet zealous sons. The donators were Revs. K. McDonald, Angus McDonald, D. D., L. A. McLean, of the Synod of Virginia, and J. W. McNeill, M.D. of Fayetteville. These vessels were presented to the congregation by the pastor in a few appropriate remarks, just before they were used in the distribution of the sacred elements. Six infants were baptized on Sunday morning, and more than twenty persons announced as having been received into the church since spring communion. The meeting was continued until Wednesday night following, with a forenoon and night service each day, Dr. McDonald doing all the preaching. His sermons were of a plain, practical nature, charmingly delivered, being attractive from the start, and only of about thirty or thirty-five minutes length. No one ever remarked that, that was a long dry sermon, but to the contrary, all seemed anxious to hear more of the "Old, Old Story." There were some professions of faith during these days of meetings, and the old mother church has her cords lengthened and her stakes strengthened, by this visit of the two ministerial sons, who have returned to their respective places of labor, no doubt, much refreshed, from having once more enjoyed the sweetness of old associations, that comes to one when brought in close contact with the good people of his childhood and youth. More than a dozen of our sons and daughters, who are now scattered here and there, were present on Sabbath, and sat together at our Lord's table for the first time in several years. We have gone out from them, but are made to feel, when there, that we are still of them. A blessed thought never to be forgotten.

Our article is already too long, but incomplete unless we mention the fact, (using the words of the present pastor,) that some of the best people to be found anywhere belong to this congregation. While they have lost heavily by death and removals in the last year, yet the three hundred, (Gideon's army,) remain. And now being supplied with such an active pastor, in the person of Rev. P. R. Law, who is a pastoral evangelist, or a missionary pastor, one or the other, and finds much to do in working and preaching in the outskirts of the congregation, on dividing lines between congregations, where people are not inclined to one church more than another, where distance and other things interfere and keep them at home, except on special occasions, the pastor finds his services appreciated, and is "bringing in the sheaves," and expects many of these new-born souls in days to come, to be found active in the work of the Church. Let us continue to praise and pray God for His blessing. J. McL.

VIRGINIA.

Belle Haven:—Rev. R. E C. Lawson has taken charge of Belle Haven and Powellton churches, Accomac county, Va.

Norfolk Presbytery:—Met in the First church of Norfolk, Nov. 15th. There were present ten ministers and two ruling elders. The pastoral relation of Rev. J. J. Vance and the First church was dissolved, to take effect Jan. 1st, that he might go to the Second church of Nashville; and Mr. Vance was dismissed to the Presbytery of Nashville. Col. Tait was appointed chairman of the Home Missions committee to supply the place of Mr. Vance.

Montgomery Presbytery:—At an adjourned meeting of Montgomery Presbytery, held in Roanoke, Nov. 16th, the pastoral relation was dissolved between Rev. J. McC. Duckwall and the Bluefield and Princeton churches. Rev. J. R. Bridges was appointed to declare both churches vacant.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Spartanburg:—The new minister, Rev. Mr. Robertson, who gives a portion of his time to the Spartan Mills' church, was installed last Sunday, the 11th, Dr. Watkins and Mr. Wilson delivering the charges. Quite a large congregation was present.

SYNOD OF MEMPHIS.

The Synod of Memphis met in the Presbyterian church, in Corinth. Miss., Nov. 6th, 7.30 p. m., and adjourned Friday, November 9th.

In the absence of the Moderator Rev. Neander M. Woods, D. D., Rev. E. A. Ramsey, D. D., preached the opening sermon from Ps. 50: 2, "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.

There were present thirty-one ministers and twenty-three ruling elders. Rev. W. M. Anderson, of Jackson, Tenn., was elected moderator; Rev. T. W. Raymod and Rev. Chas. R. Hyde, were chosen temporary clerks. Rev. J. D. Leslie, who was for some years the efficient stated clerk, having moved to Texas, resigned his office, and Rev. J. H. Lumpkin was unanimously elected his successor. Rev. Prof. W. A. Alexander, D. D., addressed the Synod in the interest of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, showing that institution to be in a prosperous condition. The Synod reaffirmed its loyalty to this institution, and earnestly requested its ministers to commend it to parents having sons to educate, and urged upon its people the privilege and advantages of educating their sons in their own denominational school.

Rev. E. M. Richardson, D. D., addressed the Synod in behalf of Education for the Ministry, whereupon it was urged that continued prayer be made for more laborers, for candidates now pursuing their course of preparation for the ministry, and that churches, Sabbath-schools and Ladies' Societies, make prompt and liberal contributions to this cause in April and November. Rev. Jas. K. Hazen, D. D., presented the work of Publication, stating, among other things of interest, that the Assembly's Executive Committee of Publication had arranged to put a colporteur in our Synod. Rev. James Calvin Smith being present, signified his readiness to enter upon the colportage work, and was commended to our churches and people. Sessions were urged to guard against hurtful literature, and to do all they reasonably can to sustain the Assembly's Committee in its work.

Colored Evangelistic work was commended and our people were urged to a more liberal support of this work. The work of the American Bible Society, as presented by Rev. Geo. S. Savage, D. D., was heartily endorsed. Rev. A. P. Saunders, presented the claims of the Assembly's Home and School, located at Fredericksburg, Va. This enterprise was commended as "affording a most satisfactory provision for the orphans of ministers of our church both in the home and in the foreign field."

The subject of Foreign Missions was discussed in an interesting way on the evening of the second day, according to a program previously arranged by the permanent committee on this cause. The report adopted shows an increase of 10 cents per member in Synod for this cause, over contributions of last year. The report of the committee on Synodical Home Missions shows $3,545 raised for this work this year. The Presbyteries were urged to do their own mission work as far as possible. The Synod's Committee of Home Missions being reduced to three members, was instructed to co-operate with Presbyterial Committees and to confine its efforts to destitute places. Rev. T. W. Raymond's resignation as Synodical Evangelist having been accepted by the committee the Synod now has no evangelist.

The report on Systematic Beneficence shows an increase in contributions to Sustentation, Education, Publication, Church Erection, Foreign Missions, Pastors' Salaries and Presbyterial Funds.

Report on North Mississippi Presbyterian College at Holly Springs shows that institution is flourishing, having more pupils than ever before.

Memorial services were held in honor of Rev. J. A. Sloan, Rev. H. M. Morrison and Rev. Chas. Hill.

In answer to overtures proposing a change in our boundary lines, and the erection of a new Synod, whose boundary should be coterminous with the State lines of Tennessee, it was resolved that the time has not yet come for such change,

Overtures from the Presbyteries of Memphis and of Western District asking for the consolidation of these two Presbyteries were answered in the negative.

A special committee was appointed to consider means of securing larger attendance upon the meetings of Synod. Trenton, Tenn., is the next place of meeting.

J. R. BRIDGES' REPLY TO E. H. H.

When I wrote my criticism of the Synod's action on Lay-Evangelism, I expected that some one would object; but I had no idea that the first man to enter the lists would be my venerable friend, Dr. Harding, of Farmville, who charms every one with his literary musings. To be meddling with a man's views on Church matters is a new role for one who generally seems deeply engrossed in distilling the spiritual essence from Cicero and Ovid.

Yet I am glad that he has written; for it shows that though he looks so respectable with his gold-headed cane, he really knows as much about Paul as he does about Cicero, and that he does care as much for the commonplace present as he does for the classical past.

When he turns from the heathen Latins to lecture a 19th century Christian, there is hope for him yet, and I welcome the lecture, though he uses some plain language and gives some advice which I shall probably follow in time.

I meant no disrespect to the Synod. The Synod had a right to enjoin Presbyteries and sessions to guard their churches against dangerous men, and for that reason I voted for the paper. I merely wished to protest against what seemed to be the views of many of the speakers, that all conversions were spurious except those made under the preaching of constitutionally ordained men. In my experience of fourteen years as a pastor, I have found in my work and in that of others, as many spurious conversions as can be found in the work of many of these evanvelists. To me, personally, one of them has been a great blessing, though he is still unordained.

As my dear brother intimates, men may make fools of themselves by rising in these meetings, yet Paul tells us that God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise. Some day my friend will read what he has written, and he will then borrow my sackcloth and ashes. As a literary critic he cannot be excelled—so in the language of which he is so fond, I would say: "Ne sutor supra crepidam."

OUR DUTY TO THE COLORED PEOPLE.

We are slow in having our eyes opened to the fact that within a generation or two the negro will exert a far greater influence in politics and religion than he does at present. Hitherto he has been kept back for want of leaders of his own race capable of organizing and directing his efforts, but in the three decades since his emancipation such men have arisen, and their influence is far more general and powerful than many well informed white people are aware. As they now have schools, some of them too, of high grade, and as many of the negroes are availing themselves of the opportunities thus offered to secure a thorough education, the day is not far distant when there will be no lack of leaders. The colored leader will of course have every advantage in securing the ear of the negro, and certainly he will use his advantage for all it is worth. These negro leaders will mould the thought of the entire race. Nor is it the destiny of the negro alone that is at stake. They will hold the balance of power in Congress and in the Electoral College as soon as they have the intelligence to use their power to their best advantage, and parties and religious sects will bid high for their support, and the most corrupt elements in politics and the only religious sect that can aspire to controlling the government will be readiest to do the bidding. The danger to our religious liberties from this source is too great to be overlooked. But apart from this thought we can see that the presence of millions of people, of a race hostile to us, and united in their hostility, is fraught with danger to us, so soon as they are capable of thorough organization. And the greater their intellectual advancement, the greater the danger, unless they have the moral training that will subdue their hatred of the whites, and give them a higher view of the meaning of the eighth commandment. Our standard of morality, low enough already, will not be improved by the presence of a race with a standard much lower, with whom we shall soon have to compete in professions that they have not yet entered. The social obstacles that we feel it our duty to keep up will not enable us to escape the infection. Self preservation makes it necessary for us to make every reasonable effort for their religious improvement.

The writer has been reading for several months a religious newspaper, edited by two prominent negro divines, and having a large and rapidly growing circulation. Many of the articles are written in a style that would do credit to our own people, and are characterized by clearness, logic and vigor, but this only makes the danger from its large circulation more alarming. Two characteristic are are especially notable. One is an intense hatred of the white people. The other is an inclination to set aside the standard of morality that the white people would give them. As an instance of the first, and many others might be given—one writer says that Miss Wells was a fool for supposing that she could enlist the sympathy of the English in behalf of the murdered negroes in the South, because the English are white people, and of course would not regard the rights of the blacks. As an instance of the other, one of the editors says that while he does not claim to be proficient in Greek and Hebrew, he knows enough of these languages to know that many passages in the Bible are so mistranslated as to do the negroes great injustice, and suggests that the colored churches ought to select some of their own learned men to make a new version for their use. Does not this give cause for alarm? What a dangerous element the negro would be, when he had made a Bible for himself! The most intelligent protestant denomination in the world would not dare attempt such a thing.

Nearly all the younger negroes can read. In their zeal to give their children a secular education they deserve commendation; but if their hearts are not made strong against evil, the pernicious literature with which they will be furnished by misguided or interested parties will make this ability a curse rather than blessing, and a curse to others than themselves.

Just what is to be done to avert the threatened evil it may not be easy to tell. But something must be done, and we must try more earnestly than we have been trying to find out what that something is. They must have a better knowledge of the gospel and a higher stand of right, and they must get it from the white people, if they get it at all. The difficulties in the way of our reaching them with a purer gospel are greater than some people admit, but they are not insurmountable. If we do not give the negro the gospel, God will hold us to account in the day of judgment, and will visit our sin upon our children in the national ruin, of which the negro will be the occasion.

The writer spent several weeks last year in the States near the Great Lakes, and was frequently asked, "What are you Southern people doing for the elevation of the colored people?" He did not tell that the Southern Presbyterian Church was giving less than six cents a year per member for colored evangelization. He was ashamed of the truth. Ought we not all to be ashamed of it?

Had not this article outgrown its limits, some suggestions would be made as to how we could do more for the religious elevation of our colored neighbor, but suffice it to say at present that every dollar contributed for the support of Tuscaloosa Institute will help to prepare some worthy negro man for efficient work in the gospel ministry among the ignorant people of his own race.

FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville, in session in Greensboro during the meeting of Synod transacted the following business:

A Call Returned—A call from Dunn church for the pastoral services of Rev. A. M. Hassell was found out of order and returned to the church.

Licentiate Little Examined—Licentiate L. L. Little was examined with a view to his ordination and installation as pastor of Pee Dee and Ellerbe Springs churches and the examination was sustained.

A Commission—A commission, consisting of Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., Rev. M. N. McIver and Rev. D. W. Fox and Elders P. A. Ledbetter and W. F. Robinson, was appointed to ordain and install Licentiate L. L. Little pastor of Pee Dee church, if the way be clear, at 11 a. m., Wednesday, December 5th, 1894.

A Committee—A committee, consisting of Rev. W. B. Arrowood, Rev. A. N. Ferguson, and Rev. J. W. Johnston and Elders A. F. Forbis and J. A. McDonald, was appointed to install Licentiate L. L. Little pastor of Ellerbe Springs church if the way be clear.

Time of Next Regular Meeting—Friday, at 8 p. m., after the third Sabbath in April, 1895, was chosen as the time for the next regular meeting.

P. R. LAW,
Stated Clerk.

THE CHURCH AT GREENVILLE.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Knowing that there can be no permanent growth where a congregation has no church home, the eight members of the Presbyterian church in Greenville determined last year to commence building. After going as far as their own moderate means would allow, assisted by Christian aid, by citizens of Greenville and friends elsewhere, we had to borrow $300 to continue the work far enough to use the building. This amount falls due December 15th, and must be paid. We are doing all we can, but we need help to meet the note and vindicate our church honor. Can you not, for the sake of our Master's cause, encourage us with a small amount, if no more, at least one dollar. This in behalf of our common Lord. As you worship in your comfortable church, remember us who are struggling to finish ours. Any amount for this cause will be thankfully received.

J. R. MOORE, Treasurer,
Greenville Presbyterian Church.

Greenville, Nov. 10th, 1894.

PEACE INSTITUTE.

The concert given at Peace, Tuesday evening, the 13th inst., was a brilliant addition to the long list of successful entertainments already given at that institution.

With the exception of the opening chorus, "The Belfry Tower," sung by fifty voices that had been carefully and thoroughly trained by the director, Mr. Gilmore W. Bryant, and the Ladies' Chorus, "Rest Thee on This Mossy Pillow," the entire program was given by the musical faculty of Peace.

Did not space forbid we would like to dwell upon the masterful manner in which Miss Frances Herbage manipulated the violin, and enchained the attention of the audience by her elocution; upon the vocal and instrumental solos of Mr. Darnall; the piano solo of Miss Bertha Knox; the vocal solo of Mrs. Bryant; and the brilliant duet by Mrs. Bryant and Mr. Darnall. No one, who was so fortunate as to be present at the concert, could help being impressed with the fact that the musical faculty of Peace are Artistes of the first order.

We are glad to note that, notwithstanding these days of financial depression, the numbers at Peace are steadily and wonderfully increasing.

Adjourned Meeting of Orange Presbytery.

An adjourned meeting of Orange Presbytery was held at Mebane, November 16th.

At his own request, Rev. R. E. C. Lawson was granted a letter of dismission to the Presbytery of Norfolk.

Licentiate H. C. Kegley, Principal of the Presbyterial High School at Mebane, was examined with a view to his ordination. All his examinations proved satisfactory. A sermon appropriate to the occasion was preached. He was solemnly set apart to the office of the sacred ministry by prayer and the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. The pastoral relation was instituted between him and the Mebane church. Charges were delivered to pastor and people. On Sunday 18th inst., he was installed pastor of Bethlehem church by Rev. R. W. Culbertson. Rev. H. S. Bradshaw, is to be installed pastor of Little River church at an early date.

Our stay among the Mebane people was to us a delightful one. Rev. H. C. Kegley has already endeared himself to those among whom he lives and labors.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson IX.

Dec. 2.—Christ's Testimony to John.

(Luke vii. 24-35. Commit vss. 27, 28.)

Golden Text. "Behold I send my messenger before my face." Luke vii. 27.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. For the order of events, see First Step of last lesson. This lesson should precede the last. The news of the Sermon on the Mount, of the Choosing of the Twelve, and of numerous miracles had reached John in prison. Yet there was no mighty advent, no sweeping revolution, no assumption of the reins of power, such as he had expected, and he finds it difficult to adjust his previous ideas of the kingdom to this quiet movement in the hearts and lives of simple peasants. So he sends messengers to ask: "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?" The reply of Jesus gives the true signs of the kingdom, which—in a spiritual sense—are the tests of the kingdom always and everywhere. The miracles of our Lord were only the outward signs of the spiritual changes He came to work, so the test of the kingdom—the test of a true Church, and of God's Spirit in a Church are always these: "The blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached." Read carefully vss. 16-28. John was in prison at Macherus in Perea. Jesus was apparently in or near Capernaum. See Matt. xi. 20-24, and note that it immediately follows the passage parallel to this lesson. The other cities were in the same neighborhood, but Capernaum is addressed as "Thou."

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The questions about John, hinting his stability and austerity, vss. 24, 25; the real answer, vs. 26; the O. T. prophecy, vs 27; the greatness of John and the superior advantage of the children of the kingdom, vs. 28: the effect of Jesus' testimony upon different classes—showing the value of John's work, vss. 29, 30; the childish attitude of that generation, vss. 31-34; differences of conduct justified by differences of work and mission, vs 35.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 24. What went ye out for to see: So great an outpouring demanded a sufficient cause— an adequate alteration.

A reed. The right place to find them, but hardly a sufficient cause, The figure contains a hint of John's inflexible firmness in contrast to the reed bowing before the wind.

Vs. 25. Clothed in soft raiment. If this was their object they went to the wrong place—suggesting at the same time the contrast of John's austere habits and rough clothing.

Vs. 26. More than a prophet. Because he actually pointed out the Messiah. John's superior position was derived from his relation to the Christ. See the editor's sermon in N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, of Nov. 1st.

Vs. 27. Of whom it is written. In Mal. iii 1. This is our Lord's favorite prophecy with regard to John, compare Mark ix. 11-13 and Mal iv. 5; while John's own was Is. xl. 3. See Matt. iii. 1-3; John i. 23. Mark prefaces his account of John's ministry with both passages.

Before thy face. The O. T. passage has "before me." The change is significant, showing that Jesus does not hesitate to appropriate what in the O. T. is spoken of God, and that in a very true and important sense, Jesus is both sender and sent.

Vs. 28. Least in the kingdom of God is greater than he. Note 1. The kingdom of God here evidently refers to the kingdom as established on the earth—that is, the new dispensation, John's work was preparatory. He belonged to the old. He was the last of the O. T. prophets: the morning star passing away just before the dawn. 2. The least in the kingdom of God are greater than John, not in personal qualities, not in work and service, but in understanding of God's plan and in spiritual privileges. This was hardly true until after the resurrection, and especially after Pentecost.

Vss. 29, 30. We take these verses to be a remark of the evangelist showing the effect of the Lord's testimony to John upon the different classes who heard Him: The classes who believed John, believed Jesus. This is the necessary interpretation if we admit the words, And the Lord said, in vs. 31. The R. V. omits these words, which are not found in the oldest manuscripts. If that is correct these two verses may be a part of the Lord's discourse; in which case the meaning would be: The masses of the people and the publicans, in being baptized by John, admitted that God's testimony against their sins was just; while the Pharisees and lawyers, refusing this baptism, rejected God's counsel against themselves. This gives a very good sense, but the expression "baptism of John" in vs. 29 does not come in very naturally from the lips of one who had just named John.

??. There is no need to fix the reference of one party of children to John and Jesus, and the other to the people of that generation. Rather does it teach the general idea of dissatisfaction, unreasonableness, and censoriousness. They were not responsive to either type of messenger that God sent. The figure is based upon children ready to play either a marriage or a funeral while the others wouldn't play at either.

Vs. 33. Neither eating bread nor drinking wine—the customary food and drink of every day people.

He hath a devil. Very much as we say, "He's a crank," or "He's crazy."

Vs. 34. Eating and drinking. Not merely partaking of ordinary food, but doing it with people—that is socially, as at the wedding in Cana, or the feast that Matthew made (Mark ii. 15, 16) and others recorded.

Vs. 35. The verse means that there is a reason for both, that reasonable people understand. John came to preach the gospel of repentance, that the people might be prepared for their King. Fasting, austerity, abstemiousness were becoming such a mission. Jesus came to bring the blessings of the kingdom to those who did repent. So He illustrated the kindness and sympathy and fellowship that man was to show to man. See the lesson on the wedding at Cana.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

The Ministry of John.

Its purpose—to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke i. 17, 76; Is. xl. 3; Mal. iii. 1.

The need of preparation,—His searching holliness, Mal. iii. 2; Matt. iii. 12.

The kind of preparation needed—cleansing from sin, Luke i. 77; Mark i. 4. Compare Ex. xix. 14.

The mode of cleansing—repentance in heart and life, Mark i. 4; Matt iii. 8; Luke iii. 11-14.

The outward sign of cleansing—Baptism with water, Mark. i. 5; Luke iii. 16. Compare Ps. li. 7; Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 26; John iii. 5.

Quallfications for his ministry—(a) his austere life, Mark i. 6; (b) his consuming zeal, Mal. iv. 5; 1 Kings xix. 14; Matt xvii. 10-13; (c) his fearlessness, Luke iii. 19.

Method of his ministry—preaching that the coming kingdom, Matt. iii. 12.

The above was given in the lesson on the Baptism of Jesus, when He first came into relation with John. There is fuller opportunity to study it now than in connection with that lesson which was so full of other matter, so we reproduce it.

Sixth Step. The main thing in life is to find out one's mission and fulfil it—fulfil it it spite of criticism and misunderstanding. The reader is again referred to the editor's sermon above cited.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Draw out from the scholars all they know of the previous life of John the Baptist—the success of his ministry, his message, and his fidelity to duty; how this fidelity led to his imprisonment. Get them to give their impressions of the kind of movement he expected the Messiah to inaugurate, from such verses as Luke iii. 4-6, 16, 17; the discouragement he would feel in prison and his disappointment at no great revolution taking place. Might not he have thought of his own liberty being involved in such a revolution? Then have one read Jesus' answer to the messengers, and draw out what His conception of the kingdom was. Show how such a ministry really fulfilled the predictions of John—though the final judgment is yet to come, Matt. xxv. 31, etc. Then bring out the salient points of the lesson as above outlined, taking up so much of the Bible Reading as the time and capacity of your scholars allow.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF NOV. 8.

A variety of answers may be given to these questions. We quote from the answers given us.

113. David sparing Saul's life, 1 Sam. vii. 12; xxvi. 8, 9, (or) Elisha sparing and feeding the Syrians, 2 Kings vi. 22, 23, (or) Joseph loving his brethren, Gen. i. 15-21.
(Esau's love for Jacob is not so good an answer, because it was capricious—proceeding from impulse rather than from principle. So David's for Absolom was the natural affection of father and son, with something of weak favoritism in it.)

114. David's meekness under Shimei's cursing, 2 Sam. xvi. 5-13.

115. The servant maid of Naaman, 2 Kings v. 3. Evil Merodach's treatment of Jehoiachin, 2 Kings xxv. 27-30.
Rahab hiding the spies, Josh. ii. 1-21.
Esau's kindness to Jacob, Gen. xxxiii. 4.
Abraham's dealing with Lot, Gen. xiii. 8, 9; xiv. 13-16.
(Any of the incidents under 113 also may be given here, as love to enemies comes under the Golden Rule, though the Golden Rule applies not only to enemies, but to friends. It is the wider rule of the two.)

Correct answers have been received as follows:

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for 1895. The success of this sterling periodical is owing to the fact that it enables one, with a small outlay of time and money, to keep pace with the best thought and literature of the day. Hence its importance to every American reader.

It has always stood at the head of its class, both in the quality and quantity of the reading furnished; and in fact it affords, of itself, so thorough and complete a compendium of what is of immediate interest or permanent value in the literary world as to render it an invaluable economizer of time, labor and money. In the multitude of periodicals of the present time—quarterlies, monthlies and weeklies—such a publication has become almost a necessity to every person or family desiring to keep well informed in the best literature of the day.

For 1895, an extraordinary offer is made to all new subscribers; and reduced clubbing rates with other periodicals are also given by which a subscriber may at remarkably small cost obtain the cream of both home and foreign literature. Those selecting their periodicals for the new year, would do well to examine the prospectus, In no other way that we know of can a subscriber be put in possession of the best which the current literature of the world affords, so cheaply or conveniently.

Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work, besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

"Standard Edition." 12 mo., 240 pages as follows:

FOR THE FAMILY.

MARY OF BETHANY.

Thou hallowed village on Mount Olive's height,
To which the Christ retired when day was o'er,
To spend in peaceful rest a quiet night,
Far from the noisy city's ceaseless roar,
And suage the sorrows which He calmly bore;
The home of Lazarus, and Martha true,
Where Mary also knelt, beloved of yore,
By One who all her inmost feelings knew,
A Friend in trouble, ever kind and true.

For Mary, she had chosen the good part,
And humbly sat and listened at His feet—
That which alone can satisfy the heart,
The one thing needful; she would meet
The Saviour on the way, and kindly greet.
Great was thy love, and fondly did'st thou cling
To Him, and in that higher love complete
The costly box of spikenard thou did'st bring
To anoint for burial thy beloved King.

Now poured the balm upon His aching head.
Which filled the house with richest odors rare;
Now bathed His feet with tears, in meekness shed,
And dried them with thy long dark raven hair;
O, what a world of loving faith was there.
"She hath done all she could," who could do more?
"She hath anointed Me with tender care;"
Tidings of this shall spread the wide world o'er
Where'er My name be heard from shore to shore.

THE MARKHAM MEMORIAL ROOM.

Silently and lovingly the life-long friends of the late Dr. Markham are perpetuating in touching memorial the memory of the soldier-priest and philanthropist. Following close upon the placing of his picture in the Soldier's Home, comes another graceful tribute from the Markham Memorial Circle of King's Daughters of the Lafayette Presbyterian Church.

A room sacred to his memory and that of his wife has been furnished and endowed in the New Orleans Home for Incurables. The room is prettily furnished in blue and white, the favorite colors of the good old preacher and his wife. The furniture is all of neat oak, except the bed, which, according to hospital hygienic regulations, is of iron, daintily painted in white and gold. Just above the neat dresser, hangs a handsome portrait of Dr. Markham, presented to the circle by Mr. Clare. The room is occupied by a gentle invalid, Miss Addie Nicholls, whose mother in grateful memory of Dr. Markham, and the kindness of the home, has painted a lovely spray of forget-me-nots, which hangs just above the portal. From all parts of the city touching souvenirs are being sent to the circle as aids in its work of love; but perhaps the most touching is a pretty silk crazy-patchwork quilt, made during vacation by the little orphan girls of the Poydras Asylum, under the guidance of their teacher, Miss Thornton, who was a member of Dr. Markham s church. Ten busy little pairs of hands worked more faithfully than the others at the quilt—ten little children whom Dr. Markham had befriended in their hour of childhood desolation. These children have each worked their names as a souvenir of love in a patch of the quilt, and in the center is the name of Dr. Markham. The quilt was sent to the home this week for the purpose indicated, of helping to keep warm the invalids who shall occupy this memorial room. It is one of the most thoughtful pieces of work that has come to this department for many a day, and considering the source from which it came, it is all the more interesting.—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

How to Treat Rough Ceilings.—When ceilings look rough and show a tendency to peel, go over them with a solution in the proportion of an ounce of alum to one quart of water. This will remove all superfluous lime and make the ceiling white.

Brown Bread.—Scald one cupful of Indian meal, add to this one pint of sweet milk and stir till the meal is well mixed, three-quarters of a cupful of molasses, one teaspoonful each of salt and soda, and Graham meal enough to make a batter that will pour with great difficulty. This makes one large loaf. Bake one hour and a half.

For a good chicken curry, cut up a pair of tender spring chickens into two-inch squares. Parboil them twenty minutes in just enough water to cover them. Take up the pieces of chicken, drain them, and dredge them with flour and lay them aside. Fry an onion and one clove of garlic in four tablespoonsful of butter, remove them and fry the chicken in it. Skim the parboil water, and strain it through a fine strainer in which half a cocoanut has been grated. Add this liquor to the chicken and one tablespoonful of the best curry powder, Stew the curry gently for half an hour, and add a tablesponful of fine cocoanut and serve hot.

This is one of the most delicious of confections, and this is the way to make it; Be sure the nuts are fresh and prepare a generous supply. You must have Brazil nuts, peanuts, hickory nuts and almonds, also some walnut meats. Chop them all, but not fine enough to make them oily. Strew them as thick as possible on a shallow tin pan that has been well greased with sweet butter; mix in with the meats some candied orange and lemon peel and a half dozen finely chopped stoned dates. Boil your syrup, made of two pounds of sugar and a cup of water, until a drop hardens in cold water. Add a table-spoonful of strained lemon juice and then pour over the nuts; mark into squares while soft and let it cool before taking from the pan.

"The Everlasting Arms."

One of the sweetest passages in the Bible is this one: "Underneath are the everlasting arms." It is not often preached from, because it is felt to be so much richer and more touching than anything we ministers can say about it. But what a vivid idea it gives of the divine support! The first idea of infancy is of resting in arms which maternal love never allows to become weary. Sick room experiences confirm the impression, when we have seen a feeble mother or sister lifted from the bed of pain by the stronger ones of the household. In the case of our Heavenly Father, the arms are felt, but not seen. The invisible secret support comes to the soul in its hours of weakness or trouble; for God knoweth our feebleness. He remembers that we are but dust.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"FORBID THEM NOT."

BY JULIA GILL.

"The Master has come over Jordan,"
Said Hannah, the mother, one day;
"He is healing the people who throng Him,
With a touch of His finger, they say:
And now I shall carry the children,
Little Rachel and Samuel and John;
I shall carry the baby, Esther,
For the Lord to look upon."

The father looked at her kindly,
But he shook his head and smiled;
"Now who but a doting mother
Would think of a thing so wild?
If the children were tortured by demons,
Or dying of fever 'twere well;
Or had they the taint of the leper,
Like many in Israel—"

Nay do not hinder me, Nathan;
I feel such a burden of care;
If I carry it to the Master,
Perhaps I shall leave it there.
If He lay His hands on the children,
My heart will be lighter, I know,
For a blessing forever and ever
Will follow them as they go."

So over the hills of Judah,
Along by the vine-rows green,
With Esther asleep on her bosom,
And Rachel her brothers between:
'Mong the people who hung on his teaching,
Or waited His touch and His word,
Through the row of proud Pharisees, hastening,
She pressed to the feet of the Lord.

"Now why shouldst thou hinder the Master?"
Said Peter, "with children like these?
See'st not how, from morning 'till evening,
He teacheth and healeth disease?"
Then Christ said, "Forbid not the children,
Permit them to come unto Me!"
And He took in His arms little Esther,
And Rachel He sat on His knee.

And the heavy heart of the mother
Was lifted all earthcare above,
As He laid His hands on the brothers,
And blessed them with tenderest love:
As He said of the babes in His bosom,
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven;"
And strength for all duty and trial
That hour to her spirit was given.

Sally's Bad Remember.

Sally was sitting in the sunny window-seat in the nursery in the midst of her paper doll family. They were all at home—Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair, Rosamond, Clorinda, Floribel, and baby Roberta—and they were all clothed in fine new garments; every one but baby Roberta, who had outgrown her long dresses and must have something more suitable for her age. Sally was trying the effect of a full pink tissue-paper skirt against a sky-blue jacket. Would it be better to match Roberta's pink cheeks or her yellow hair? Her scissors were in her hand and a little wrinkle imbedded in her forehead; It was a very important question.

"Sally, Sally," spoke her mother, quietly from the other side of the room, where real baby Robert was being rocked to sleep for his noonday nap, "go downstairs and ask Mary for the little white blanket for baby's bed. Do you hear!" for Sally did not stir.

"Yes, mamma, in a minute."

"No! now. Come, Sally."

"Yes, mamma," said Sally, putting down the scissors and the pink tissue paper, and going off full speed toward the stairs.

"Do you know what I asked for, Sally?" called her mother softly; but Sally did not stop to listen. The wrinkle was still in her forehead, and her mind was full of pink and yellow skirts.

Down the first flight of stairs she ran as fast as her feet could carry her, then through the hall. At the second flight she paused. The broad banister looked so inviting; it would take only a minute to slide the whole length of that. As soon as she caught her breath she stopped; then she began to think, "I wonder why mamma sent me down stairs. What did she want me to get?" Very slowly, she walked toward the third flight, "O dear, what does mamma want? Why didn't she ring for Mary to come upstairs? It tires me so to go down all these stairs. I think I had better try to remember." So Sally sat down at the head of the lower stairs and thought. She was a sensible little girl, and her good sense told her it would be better to go up to the nursery and ask her mother again what she was sent to get from the kitchen. But no, she did not like to do that; only yesterday she had to go back twice to find out what she had been told to do, and then she brought home a spool of green silk instead of the black that the dressmaker needed. And the day before that she had put three letters in the lamp-post box, without any stamps on them. There was always something she did not remember, and her mother said it must be stopped. Sally must be made to pay attention, and the only way would be to punish her the very next time it happened.

"Well I believe I'll go on," said Sally to herself; "perhaps Mary knows what mamma wants; she ought to."

But Mary couldn't tell. "Perhaps it's the baby's dinner your mother wants," she suggested.

"Perhaps it is; anyway, I'll take it."

A sober little girl carried the tray carefully up the long stairs, and stood doubtfully at her mother's side. Baby Robert was fast asleep.

"How long you have been, Sally. Where's the blanket?" asked her mother, looking at her in surprise.

"I didn't remember just what you wanted, mamma, but I'll get it right away."

Baby Robert was soon tucked up in the soft blanket and laid in his crib. Sally returned to the St. Clair family in the window seat. Mamma came there, too.

"Sally," she asked, "do you know what I told you I must do the very next time?"

"Yes," said Sally, "Oh dear, I've got such a bad remember."

"It isn't your memory that is so bad, little girl. It is that you are so heedless that you do not give attention to what is asked of you, or else that you are so taken up with your own affairs that you cannot think of any one else's."

"O, no!" exclaimed Sally; "that would be selfish. I don't mean to be selfish."

"I am sure I would not have my little daughter always thinking of herself and of no one else," said mamma; "but now what shall the punishment be to help you remember?"

Mamma had discovered that an excellent way to correct Sally's faults was at times to let the child inflict her own punishments. They were never severe, but they always touched a sensitive place.

Sally meditated for a few minutes now. "I think, mamma, if you would make me put a purple skirt on Roberta St. Clair with her blue waist, I couldn't possible ever forget again."

"Very well, Sally; and suppose you fasten Roberta to the mirror over your dressing table and let her stay there until I tell you to take her down."

For almost two months, Roberta St. Clair hung suspended over the dressing table, with pink cheeks, yellow hair, purple skirt and blue jacket. It was a great trial to Sally to see her clothed in such a striking combination of colors. No one at the kindergarten had ever put colors together like that, and often when there were visitors, Sally was called upon to acknowledge that she was the planner and maker of the remarkable costume.

But it did help her memory, and she was never more happy than one morning when her mother said to her: "Take Roberta down, child, and make her a pink gown. You have not been sent back on an errand once in twelve whole days. You are getting to be a trustworthy little messenger, and you are a real comfort to papa and me."—The Evangelist.

to every nervous, delicate woman, suffering from "female complaint," irregularity, or weakness. In every exhausted condition of the female system, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an invigorating restorative tonic, fitted to the needs of nursing mothers, and women approaching confinement.

South Bend, Pacific Co., Wash.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—I began taking your "Favorite Prescription," the first month of pregnancy, and have continued taking it since confinement. I did not experience the nausea or any of the ailments due to pregnancy, after I began taking your "Prescription." I was only in labor a short time, and the physician said I got along unusually well.

MRS. BAKER.

We think it saved me a great deal of suffering. I was troubled a great deal with leucorrhea also, and it has done a world of good for me.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

By the proclamation of the President of the United States, and of the Governor of our State, Thursday, the 29th of November, is appointed a day of public thanksgiving and praise. The custom of observing an annual Thanksgiving is of comparatively recent origin. From the first settlement of the colonies, special Thanksgiving Days were proclaimed in New England and New York, in recognition of special mercies. And the Dutch governors of the colony of New York, for a number of years, called the people together for an annual Thanksgiving. A call for a national Thanksgiving was issued by Washington in 1796, "in recognition of the prosperous condition of our affairs," in which he urged the people to "beseech the kind author of these blessings to teach us rightly to estimate their immense value, and to preserve us from the arrogance of prosperity." After this, not until 1863, did any President again issue a call to the whole country to give thanks unto God. Then President Lincoln issued a proclamation, in which he expresses these admirable sentiments: "I recommend to the people of the United States that while offering up ascriptions justly due to God for singular deliverances, and blessings, they do also, with humble penitence for our national perverseness and disobedience, commend to his tender care all those who have become widows, orphans, mourners, or sufferers, in the lamentable civil strife in which we are unavoidably engaged." Since that time, every President has appointed the last Thursday of November for national Thanksgiving, and the Governors (most of them) have followed with a proclamation for their respective States; until now it is recognized as an established custom of our land.

In the Southern States, this national Thanksgiving has received mere grudging observance than in other parts of our country for several reasons. Firstly, and chiefly, the general observance of Christmas as the time for annual rejoicing and family reunions was too deeply rooted in the affections and habits of the people, for Thanksgiving Day to attain the position among them, which it held in New England. Then, in the second place, jealousy of any connection between the Government and religion, led some to disapprove of the custom. For this reason, Governor Wise, of Virginia, publicly declined to issue a thanksgiving proclamation, when requested to do so; and only a few years ago, I heard an able Presbyterian minister argue that if the President had the right to call Christians together for worship, he had the same right to forbid their assembling. (It is noticeable, however, that the President does not arrogate to himself the authority to command in this matter, but merely recommends to the churches.)

But in spite of these draw-backs the observance of Thanksgiving Day has steadily made its way even in the Southern States, and has won a place in the hearts of the people.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

The humility and reverence which characterize the proclamations of Washington and Lincoln do not find expression in all the orations and sermons of Thanksgiving orators. On the contrary, there is manifest tendency to make the day a day of national boasting. Judging from the notices in the papers, many preachers speak of politics, education and material prosperity, and, instead of glorifying God, take occasion to magnify the great American people. This, of course, is very wrong, for saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, that I am the Lord, which exercise loving kindness and judgment and righteousness in the world."

"The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice." The prevalence of sin and sorrow, the sickening cruelties, the harrowing calamities, that abound in the world, naturally suggest the need of some ruler, wise and powerful and good, who would take the sceptre into his hands, and govern all things according to a wise and holy purpose. This is the very truth which is recognized in the observance of Thanksgiving Day and hence it is that the poor and needy can rejoice equally with the rich and prosperous, and the day is to be observed regardless of calamity or prosperity. Saith the prophet Habakkuk, "Though the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." Let us also lift our thoughts above political and material prosperity, and worship the Lord for his forbearance and love—

"For Thy providence, that governs,
Through Thine empire's wide domain,
Wings an angel, guides a sparrow,
Blessed be Thy gentle reign."

Church Schools. Rev. W. H. L. McLaurin of the Methodist Church, bears the following testimony of the efficiency of our schools in Mitchell county.

The Presbyterians, realizing the great importance of educating a people to make them loyal and useful, have established schools in two or three places in this county, and employed competent teachers (of course Presbyterians,) to instruct and mould the character of the children; so that their usefulness in Church and State might be made of effect wherever they go. And as a result of such schools, they are gaining ground rapidly in those communities where their influence is most felt.

At Spruce Pine their membership has increased 30 or 40 odd this year. They now number 70 or more at this place, and with the influence brought to bear, I don't see why they should not continue to multiply. And there is no use cavilling about it, the schools are the motive power in the work. The people appreciate the efforts of the Presbyterians to lift them out of ignorance, and as naturally lean that way, as the sunflower to the sun. Other reasons, too, are brought to bear upon their minds. Such as a free Gospel, appreciation of the school, and the dilapidated condition of "our own house of worship" in the same vicinity.—N. C. Advocate.

The report of Rev. R. P. Pell, Synod's Evangelist, gives interesting information on this same subject. It is on the fourth page: read it.

Thanksgiving Foot-ball. The usual foot-ball game between Princeton and Yale on Thanksgiving Day having been abandoned this year, an effort has been by the managers of the field in New York city to arrange a game between the Lafayette College and Brown University teams. The students at Lafayette were inclined to play such a game, and strong outside pressure was brought to bear on the Faculty to secure permission to do so. The Faculty, however, declined to grant such permission, and President Warfield, at a public meeting, explained the reason for this refusal on the following grounds:

"Thanksgiving Day having been set apart by the civil authorities as a day for the public recognition of the goodness of God to our country, and having for many years been consecrated to this purpose, and as a family festival, it is highly improper that a college founded for the education of youth in the principles of good morals and good citizenship, as well as sound learning and loyalty to the truth of God, should do anything to lower the traditions or undermine the public regard for such a day."

Thanksgiving Day is already appropriated for foot-ball. The University of Virginia and the University of North Carolina are to play a game at that time in Richmond; and the newspapers predict that there will be the largest crowd to witness the game, that has ever assembled for such purpose in the South. Here in Wilmington there is to be a game between "the Brownies," a local team, and the A. and M. College; and all over the country the holiday will be employed in like manner.

The writer loves to witness a game of foot-ball, when played in a gentlemanly manner, but does not expect to go to the game played here, because the civil authorities have requested us to set apart the day for the public recognition of the goodness of God, and both piety and patriotism prompt him to comply. Christmas day has been perverted to a season of special frivolity and dissipation; shall Thanksgiving be given over to sport?

Dr. Shepperson and the pulpit Rug. Dr. T. W. Hooper writes us that the account given in our "Reminiscenses of Dr. Shepperson" was an exagerated description of what occurred in his presence, in the pulpit at Liberty, Va., "Dr. S.," writes he, had a peculiar way of hunting for and losing again his pocket handkerchief while he was preaching; putting it in the Bible, or on the Bible, or under the Bible, or back in some of his numerous pockets, as the notion might strike him. He thought it had fallen to the floor, and stooped down and caught the corner of the rug, but immediately let it drop. That was all." We think it probable, though by no means certain, that the narrative of his wiping his face with the piece of carpet grew out of this. What we published was given as an illustration of the many amusing stories told of his gaucheries in the pulpit and while we gave the name of the narrator from whom we heard it, we did not vouch for the accuracy of the statement.

If our reminiscences did not reveal the rare sweetness and holiness and wisdom of this dear brother, as well as his awkwardness of manner—we have failed sadly of our purpose.

There never was found in any age of the world either philosopher, or sect, or law, or discipline, whichdid so highly exalt the public good as the Christian faith.—Lord Bacon.

INK SPOTS.

That is a very striking passage in Lucretius, where arguing that all nature shall one day collapse into ruin. He says:

"The gate of death therefore, is not closed to the heaven, or to the sun, or to the earth, or to the deep waters of the sea, but stands open, and looks backs for them with a mighty and huge abyss." Perhaps some one would prefer to see the original:

Haud igitur leti praeclusa est janua coelo, nec soli, terraeque, neque altis aequoris undis; sed patet immane, et vasto res pectat hiatu.

Old Dr. Johnson in one of the Idlers takes the contemplation of such a final catastrophe in a very philosophical manner. He writes: Many philosophers imagine that the elements may be in time exhausted, that the sun by shining long, will effuse all its light, and by continued waste of aqueous particles, the whole earth will at length become a sandy desert. I would not advise my readers to disturb themselves how they shall live without light and water. For the days of universal thirst and perpetual darkness are at a great distance. The ocean and the sun will last our time, and we may leave posterity to shift for themselves."

Howell reports Emerson as saying when Edgar Poe was mentioned, "Oh, the 'jingling man.'" Poe was by no means merely a man of jingle, and Emerson's own poetry would in finish, form, rhythm, music, have been much improved if he had paid more attention to that same jingle, for music, melody, harmony, must characterise all really good poetry. Take away its rhythmical clothing from poetry, and the queen's purple robes are gone, and with them, much of her grace and majesty.

Poe's range in poetry was narrow, but in his sphere he was original and a master. He stands alone in our literature, both in his poetry and prose writing. "It seems indeed a tragedy that a man so ideal, so unfit for contact with ugliness, dullness, brutality, should have come to eat husks with the swine, and die the death of the drunkard in the refuge which society offers to the most forlorn and hopeless of castaways." It is the old warning; only he who putteth his trust in the Lord is safe.

Some people's fondness for controversy is well set forth in the words in which Catharine Glover in "Fair Maid of Perth," rebukes Harry Smith for his love of fighting;

"He sees no brawl but he must strike into the midst of it. Has he friends, he fights with them for love and honor; has he enemies, he fights with them for hatred and revenge—and those who are neither friends nor foes, he fights, because they are on this or that side of a river. His days are days of battle, and doubtless he acts them over again in his dreams."

* * *

Dr. Franklin adopted as a rule something just the reverse of this: "I made it a rule to forbear all direct contradiction to the sentiments of others, and all positive assertion of my own. I denied myself the use of such expressions as certainly, undoubtedly, and adopted instead of them, I apprehend or I imagine a thing to be so and so. If it appears to me so at present when others asserted something that I thought an error, I denied myself the pleasure of contradicting him abruptly; I observed that in certain cases his opinion might be true, but in the present case, there appeared to me some difference. I soon found the advantage of this change in my manners; conversation went on much more pleasantly. The modest way in which I proposed my opinions, procured them a readier reception. I had less mortification when I was found in the wrong, and I more easily prevailed with others to give up their mistakes and join with me when I was in the right.

* * *

An active, enlightened scrupulous conscience is a great blessing, but a morbid, self-torturing one, a great curse. It is well enough to have eyes to see if a bug or fly is in the water we are about to drink, but it is not nice therefore to subject it to the microscope, if we would drink it with comfort. Those familiar with the "Life and Letters" of Frederick Robertson will understand me, when I say the trouble with him was, that he thought he had not acted fairly with himself until he took off his skin, a process which no amount of fair dealing with ourselves requires us to do. I have sometimes thought he was guilty of affectation and did know it. Unconsciously, he posed as a martyr, "strange to say of so strong a nature," (and brave one also), "he wanted robustness." "He fed upon His feelings," and they were noble feelings mostly, but woe to the man who makes his subjective feelings his guide and not objective truth. Like all men, that ever I have known, who make a great a-do about truth, and following her in spite of Church and creeds, he was explaining away the plain truths of the Bible and making them square to those feelings which he took for his guide as truth.

* * *

Says Old Boston, "God made man upright, his Creator set him up, but he threw himself down. Free grace will fix those, whom freewill shook down into a gulf of misery. Men will rather climb for forbidden fruit, than gather what is shaken off the tree of good providence to them. The sons of God married the daughters of men, and their marriage with them, occasioned their divorce from God.

* * *

An old writer has said, "He who will learn of none but himself, is sure to have a fool for his teacher." There is not a man we meet, but is not wiser in something than we are, however wise or learned we may be. As some people call that, "Society," which they associate with, so some think that only is knowledge which they know. When Demetrius had conquered a city, he sent to inquire of the Philosopher Stilpo if any soldiers had robbed him, he replied, no; his soldiers had no desire to steal knowledge.

* * *

How religion in the soul changes a man's views as to the value of earthly knowledge. An astronomer, who once lived in his astronomy, made that science his delight, with no thought of the God who made the heavens, became a Christian, when asked about the science once idolized; he replied, "I am now bound for Heaven, and I take the stars in my way."

* * *

Some people's religion is like their shoes. They put a "shine" on it only for Sunday.

* * *

A hearty amen, is the only earnest part of some men's prayers; it brings them to the end.

* * *

"There was an old castle in Germany with two towers that stood far apart between which an old baron stretched large wires making a huge aeolian harp. The summer breezes played through them, but there was no music, common air not having power to make them vibrate. But when there came along great tempest winds, and the heavens were black, then these winds swept the wires, and they poured out sublime melodies. So there are chords in the human soul which do not vibrate under ordinary influences—but when great tempest of afflictions which God sends upon the soul strike these cords, they send forth rich music."

THANKFULNESS.

My God, I thank Thee, who hast made
The earth so bright;
So full of splendor and of joy,
Beauty and light;
So many glorious things are here
Noble and right!

I thank Thee, too, that Thou hast made
Joy to abound;
So many gentle thoughts and deeds
Circling us round,
That in the darkest spot of earth
Some love is found.

I thank Thee more that all our joy
Is touched with pain;
That shadows fall on brightest hours;
That thorns remain;
So that earth's bliss may be our guide,
And not our chain.

For Thou, who knowest, Lord, how soon
Our weak heart clings,
Hast given us joys, tender and true,
Yet all with wings;
So that we see, gleaming on high,
Diviner things.

I thank Thee, Lord, that Thou hast kept
The best in store;
We have enough, yet not too much
To long for more;
A yearning for a deeper, peace,
Not known before.

I thank Thee, Lord, that here our souls
Though amply blest,
Can never find, although they seek
A perfect rest,
Nor ever shall, until they lean
On Jesus' breast.

OUR TRAINING SCHOOL.

BY MISS ELLEN EMERSON.

The establishment of the Assembly's Home and School in Fredericksburg, Va., having for its first object the education of the children of deceased ministers, and of missionaries, both Home and Foreign, in active service, has afforded the opportunity to unite in its advantages, a Training School for workers preparing to labor in the home fields, or in foreign lands. The great need in our Church of such an institution, must be obvious to all who have considered the subject. It had been the hope and expectation of Mr. Saunders and Dr. Sampson, that this Training School could have been in full operation this year. But the extra labor required in the more thorough organization of the Fredericksburg Collegiate Institute, and in meeting the demands of so large an increase in the number of students—now over two hundred—has made it necessary to postpone the complete development of the Training School. This letter is written, however, to call attention to the special facilities which already exist, and will be increased, for such a school here, hoping that our Christian people will take hold of it and place it upon an independent and permanent basis; so that its benefits could be enjoyed by many who have need of them, by providing the means for scholarships, to defray the expenses of board for a few students, as well as for special lecturships on a few subjects.

Early in the summer, just past, when I had about completed preparations for returning to my work in China, I received a letter from our Secretary of Foreign Missions asking me to postpone my return in China, and go to Fredericksburg, at Mr. Saunders request, to assist in developing the contemplated Missionary Training School. When I came, the last of September, I found Mrs. Randolph here, ready to engage in this work and anxious to see a beginning made as soon as possible, with Mr. Saunders and Dr. Sampson to whom the conception of this school came almost simultaneously, through the leading, we believe, of the Holy Spirit. These gentlemen, as well as Mrs. Randolph, have experience in Foreign Mission service to offer the Training School.

Mr. Saunders did not over estimate the advantages of locating this school here, close to the Assembly's School, for all the departments of that Institution are free to the students of the Training School, many of which are very desirable for them, especially Physical Culture; Physiology; Vocal Training, both for speaking and singing; Organ Music; Bible Study—and as a part of this—Greek. In addition to these, there will be special courses for the Training School in Church History; Evidences of Christianity; History of Missions, with special study of the present condition and requiremets of the great Mission fields; and kindred subjects. Arrangements have also been made for a course of Medical Lectures, something like the "Emergency Lectures," now a feature of some of the leading schools of this country, but covering a wider field, and including hygiene, preparation of food for the sick, etc. We are also prepared to give training in domestic duties. Since the great object of this school is to thoroughly ground the students in a knowledge of God's Word, to train them in a skillful use of it, and above all to develop high spirituality and consecration in their own souls, much time will be given to Bible Study under different instructors and by various methods. Yet with all these facilities at hand, and valuable as such a Training School would be for young women who wish to make special preparation for Christian work, we can only invite a small number to come at once, because our room is limited—we do so greatly need a house suitable for this purpose. And we cannot offer free board to any, because we have not as yet, one dollar of endowment. But we can offer them the advantages mentioned, free, and board at the lowest rate that will cover actual cost. It would be advisable for any who wish to attend this session to enter not later than the first of January. Mrs. A. E. Randolph or Miss Emerson will be happy to correspond with, and give any further information to any who may wish to make inquiries with a view to attending the Training School.

Fredericksburg, Va.

REPORT OF SYNOD'S COMMITTEE OF CHURCH AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Synod's Committee of Church and Christian Education beg leave to submit our annual report. We wish to notice:

1. Davidson College. The last year was the most successful in the history of the college. The new year has opened with an increase. There are present one hundred and fifty-five students. Forty-four are candidates for the ministry, and all but sixteen are church members. There is a great need of increased endowments.

2. Preparatory Schools. The Mebane High School, under the care of Orange Presbytery is doing a good work and deserves a hearty support. Several new schools have been started in country congregations under church control, and some new and commodious houses built. The number of schools under Presbyterian control, without ecclesiastical connection is also on the increase; and all these schools are more and more prosperous and efficient in giving a good preparation for college.

3. Mission Schools. There is an increasing purpose and effort to use the school as one arm of mission work, both in the towns and cities and in the more destitute fields. Rev. R. P. Pell in the mountains reports three schools with two hundred and seventy-five pupils and seven teachers and great usefulness in building up the Church. Rev. C. Miller has just founded two schools in his field, having build two houses, and there is a promising outlook. The efforts of the churches to educate the communities growing up around our mills and factories is worthy of all praise.

4. Female Education. There is much to deplore in the present provision for the higher education of our girls. Peace Institute in Raleigh is doing most excellent work and is fairly successful. There are local schools in a few places as Charlotte and Lenoir. The Female College at Statesville has recently closed by reason of the failing health of the prinpal. It is a pleasure, however, to note that Fayetteville, Mecklenburg and Concord Presbyteries are all making tentative efforts to restore female education to its rightful place. We trust that the Church is awakening to a sense of her great responsibility in this matter.

5. Collections for Church and Christian Education. We submit herewith a statement of the collections and disbursements for this cause.

From this it appears that forty-two churches have contributed to this cause $260.28 during the year, net $248.43 which your committee has disbursed as follows:

Mebane High School, $43.61; C. Miller's schools, $34.14; R. P. Pell's schools, $34.14; Davidson College, $134.54.

Besides these collections special contributions are reported through Synod's Committee:

Rev. R. P. Pell's schools, $300; Mebane High School, $66.23; Davidson College, 195. Total, $561. 23.

This makes the whole amount reported through this committee, $821.51.

This makes no mention of moneys expended for local interests, which is evideutly a much larger amount.

Your committee also would urge upon the churches through the Synod the increasing importance of this cause, and would ask you to authorize us again to address a circular letter to all our churches so as to awaken increased interest in all the departments of education, giving special emphasis to female education.

We would also recommend the Synod to endeavor to raise for this cause the coming year the sum of $1,500 and that the same be apportioned to the Presbyteries as follows: "Orange, $250; Concord, $300; Fayetteville, $300, Wilmington, $200; Mecklenburg, $350, Albemarle, $100.

Respectfully submitted,
J. B. SHEARER,
Agent and Chairman.

Jacob's Sermon.

"Had a good sermon, Jacob?" my wife asked me last night when I came home from church.

"Complete, Rachael," said I.

Rachael was poorly, and could not go to meeting much, so she always wanted me to tell her about the sermon and the singing of the people.

"Good singing, Jacob?"

"I'm sure I couldn't tell you."

"Many people out to-day?"

"I don't know."

"Why, Jacob, what's the matter? What are you thinking about?"

"The sermon."

"What was the text?"

"I don't think there was any, didn't hear it."

"I declare, Jacob, I do believe you slept all the time."

"Indeed I didn't; I never was so wide awake."

"What was the subject, then?"

"As near as I can remember, it was me."

"You, Jacob Gay?"

"Yes, ma'am. You think it a poor subject. I'm sure I thought so, too."

"Who preached? Our minister?"

"No, he didn't preach—not to me, at any rate. 'Twas a woman—a young woman, too."

"Why, Mr. Gay, you don't mean it, surely. Those woman's-rights folks haven't got into our pulpit?"

"Well, not exactly. The minister preached from the pulpit, but I could not listen. I was thinking about my sermon. I will tell you about it. You know that young woman at the postoffice, Mrs. Hyde's nice? She and I were the first ones at the meeting, and we sat by the stove warming. I have seen her a great deal in the postoffice and at her aunt's, when I was there at work. She is a pleasant spoken, and a nice pretty girl. We were talking about the meetings. You know there is quite a reformation going on. She was speaking of this one and that one who was converted. There was quite a silence, and then she said sort of low and trembling in her voice, and a pink blush on her cheek, and tears just a-starting, 'Oh, Mr. Gay, some of us were saying at the prayer-meeting last night that we did so want you to become a Christian.'

"Her cheeks flushed redder, and the tears fell. I knew she felt it, and it was a cross to say it. I never was so taken back in all my life.

"'Why, bless your soul,' I said, 'my child, I have been a member of the Church for forty years.'

"My tears came then, and I guess my cheeks would have been redder than hers, if they wasn't so tanned."

"'Do excuse me, Mr. Gay,' she said. 'Excuse me for hurting your feelings, but I didn't know you were a Christian.'"—The Standard.

Sensational Preaching.

BY REV. D. J. BURRELL, D. D.

(We published last week the first part of this article which dealt with pulpit buffoonery; the remaining part which we publish below is also worthy of consideration. Ed.)

A second-class of sensationalists are those who seek for popularity by standing half way out of their pulpits and setting forth doctrines which are disavowed by the churches to which they have sworn faithful service and loyalty. For instance, a Baptist clergyman, who might otherwise remain in modest obscurity, may force himself into notice by denying the necessity of immersion as the only lawful mode of baptism; or a member of an evangelical communion may do the same by holding up orthodoxy to ridicule, and espousing the creed of advanced "liberalism." The world is only too happy to lend its countenance to anything that savors of heterodoxy; it abhors the "old landmarks;" its best loved hero is a heretic. Yet there is no real heroism in the violation of a solemn trust. Is there? To a gentleman, (not to say a Christian), who found himself an authorized teacher in a society whose characteristic dogmas he rejected and despised, it would naturally occur that he might better abandon his sacred trust than thus abuse it. Yet if he chooses to remain, assuming towards his brethren an air of injured innocence, and before the world maintaining an attitude as of William Tell, persecuted for refusing to kneel at Gesler's bidding, he may count on the popular heart. But he wins it at the expense of a good conscience. He is not an honest man.

A third form of sensationalism is that which seeks to captivate the multitude by covering up whatever may be distasteful in the Gospel, and presenting only such negative shades of truth as are likely to commend themselves to the natural heart. So long as the world says "Prophesy unto us smooth things," there will be no dearth of churches, where every thought of justice and retribution is kept in the background to make room for sentimental platitudes; where "smooth things" are prophesied in most elegant and meaningless phrases, and where watchmen, set upon the walls to cry aloud and show the people their sins, cry nothing but "Peace! Peace!" to souls that are standing on the brink of spiritual and eternal death. The Gospel thus presented has lost its power to save, and he who preaches it is no better than a charlatan—for he seeks his own advantage in withholding the truth. Whoever gives the people an impression that morality and social reform and benevolence are the sum total of the religion of Christ, is guilty of misrepresenting it; and, if he does this for the sake of winning favor, he is, in the very worst sense of the epithet, a sensationalist. No amount of fine rhetoric and poetry and classical expression can save his ministry from failure and condemnation. His periods may be cut and rounded as delicately as cameos; he may be as learned as Erasmus and eloquent as Chrysostom; crowds may flock to hear him, and all men may speak well of him; but, nevertheless, he is a blind leader of the blind—an unfaithful servant of Christ.

It is folly to dream of making war on the elements, of this world and the "Prince of the power of the air" with no better ammunition than fine rhetoric and sentimentalism. All Platonic dreamers and rhapsodists that ever sought to adorn the Cross of Christ with garlands of fancy and eloquence have not rendered an aggregate of service equal to that of one old-time Methodist itinerant, who travelled afoot through sun, and storm, and freshet, and preached the everlasting Gospel in the dialect of the backwoods, but with a power like that of Thor's hammer in argument, and a harvest of souls to show for every thrusting in of his rude sickle, because his lips had been touched with a coal from the altar of the vicarious sacrifice, and his heart sprinkled with the precious blood of the Lamb. The blessing of God came down upon the whole city of London like rain upon the mown grass when Dwight L. Moody, unlearned in the schools of theology or polite literature, came in between the people and their smooth-speaking clergymen, and pointed, first to the flames of Sodom, and then to the refuge of the hills, and cried, "Escape for your lives!" The Church has need of such men—who care more for souls than for applause, who are not afraid to preach as well the Gospel of Sinai as of Calvary, nor ashamed to be accounted "fools for Jesus' sake."—Christian Intelligencer.

MAGAZINES.

The November number of Babyland is especially attractive. It is the Thanksgiving Holiday number, appears in a new cover, and has much that will delight and instruct very young children. We notice: Kit's Thanksgiving. Jack Horner's Thanksgiving. Posy Pinkham's Cat.

The large clear type with which this magazine is printed is an especially attractive feature for children. Published by Alpha Publishing Co., Boston. Price, 50 cents a year. Specimen copy free.

The Thanksgiving number of Little Men and Women, in new covers and again in charge of its original editors, Mr. and Mrs. Pratt, opens a new volume, with large promise of pleasures which will "liberally educate" while they delight its youthful readers.

Sophie May writes a special Thanksgiving Story. W. Thompson contributes a true hunting adventure with a puma, for which Jay Hambidge has made striking drawings.

The magazine is enlarged to thirty-two pages, but the price remains at $1.00 a year Specimen copy free. Published by Alpha Publishing Co., Boston.

The North Carolina University Magazine for November is perhaps better than the October number. The articles: Is Esther Wake a Myth? and The Dromgoole Myth, by Kemp P. Battle, '49, are of especial interest. Neighbor Brown, a poem by J W. E., is good. The leading article, Methods of Illustration, by Collier Cobb, is interesting and full of information, but not very suitable for a college magazine.

"The aim of the magazine is, first of all, to preserve the best undergraduate work of the University," as is stated on the cover. We sympathize with the editor, who states that a certain scholarly sombreness pervades and permeates the student articles contributed. We note with pleasure that an effort is being made towards lifting the pall of sombreness from its pages by the offer of prizes for Verse, Short Stories and Cartoons. Published by the Students of the University, Chapel Hill, N. C. Price, $1.50 a year.

The North Carolina Medical Journal for November contains original communications from Drs. R. H. Stancell, Jr., W. E. Fitch, S. Westray Battle, E. B. Goelet, T. Ridgeway Barker, and Richard H. Lewis. It also contains other matter that will interest the medical profession. Published at Wilmington, N. C. Price, $2.00 per annum.

Archdeacon Farrar contributes an article on the child Christ to McClure's for December, illustrated by reproductions from many paintings.

The quaint little women of Kate Greenaway are to be seen in a magazine for the first time since their creation. Miss Greenaway has heretofore always drawn them in color and for book publication. Now, however, she is at work upon a special series of her curious tots for The Ladies' Home Journal, and in that periodical they will alternate with a new series of Palmer Cox's funny "Brownies."

SYNODICAL REPORT OF AGENT OF "EDUCATION FOR THE MINISTRY."

Your Agent of "Education for the Ministry" would respectfully report to the Synod the following facts:

There are under the care of our Presbyteries, 72 candidates for the ministry, distributed as follows: Albemarle, 6, (5 white and 1 colored); Concord, 13; Fayetteville, 9; Mecklenburg, 24, (23 white and 1 colored; Orange, 14; and Wilmington, 6. Total, 72. (Note: your agent, not having heard from Albemarle Presbytery, reports the same number as given last year). Of these young men 16 are pursuing their studies at Union Seminary; 1 at McCormick; 3 at Princeton; 1 at Columbia, and 27 at Davidson College. Six are engaged in teaching, and the others, with one or two exceptions, are studying at various preparatory schools. The reports generally commend in the highest terms their fidelity and proficiency.

Of these candidates thirty-three were enrolled last year as beneficiaries of the Assembly's Committee, and the aggregate sum of $2,525 was asked for to aid in their support.

Your Agent asks the special attention of the Synod to the noteworthy and painful fact that but little more than one-half of this sum, to wit: $1411.72, was contributed by the churches of this Synod.

Albemarle asked for $300, and gave $172.05; Concord asked for $575, and gave $372.30; Fayetteville asked for $600, and gave $390.63; Orange asked for $675, and gave $298.54; Wilmington asked for $375, and gave $178.20. Total asked for, $2,525. Total given, $1,411.72.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee at Memphis. This Presbytery has 24 candidates; last year it aided 14 of them in sums varying from $50 to $150 as the needs required, and gave to her candidates in the aggregate the sum of $1,424. Your agent begs the attention of the Synod to the significant fact that the Presbytery of Mecklenburg raised more money for this cause than all of the other Presbyteries of the Synod combined, and was enabled thereby to give her candidates more substantial aid.

The Presbyteries co-operating with the Memphis Committee, will ask this year for appropriations aggregating about the same as last year—more than $2,400.

The Assembly's Committee has apportioned the following sums to three Presbyteries respectively:

Albemarle, $400; Concord, $700; Fayetteville, $700; Orange, $550, and Wilmington, $400. Total, $2,750.

In view of the facts presented, your Agent recommends the following action:

Resolved, That special efforts be made to increase in all our churches the gifts of the people for this important cause, and to this end, that pastors be earnestly urged to give due prominence to the collections ordered in the months of November and April, and to inform the people of God of the imperative need of increased liberality.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN M. ROSE, JR.,
Agent.

The Story of a Bible.

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

"Did he leave any message for me?"

"Yes, and he cursed the day that he ever saw you."

This was the answer given by a nun to a lady in London under the following circumstances, which were related to me by a gentleman of culture and piety as we were sailing along the coast of Norway from Trondhjem to Bergen, in and out among the beautiful fjorgs and snow-capped mountains. These facts show the power of God's Word to lead those groping in darkness to the light of saving truth. I was so deeply impressed by the story that I carefully wrote it out at the time.

A prominent ecclesiastic of the Roman Catholic Church was asked by a lady of position in London: "How can I find peace of mind?" Instead of pointing her to Christ as having atoned for our sins on the cross, he bade her dismiss such unwelcome thoughts and attend places of amusement. One day she followed a crowd into Exeter Hall, expecting to have her mind diverted from serious thoughts about the future by a musical entertainment. She was surprised when she found herself in a great religious meeting. Annoyed at this, she attempted to get out, but, in doing so, she knocked some umbrellas on the floor, and, somewhat abashed, took her seat. Her attention was soon riveted upon the speaker. He explained our relation to God as under law "condemned already," and spoke of Christ's sufferings on the cross as a perfect atoning sacrifice, and of God's willingness for His sake to pardon us, and by His Holy Spirit to change our hearts and fit us for Heaven. She was deeply moved. At the close she asked some one near her: "Can I speak to the gentleman who has just addresed us?"

Soon after, in conversation with her, he said: "You will find the truth I have mentioned often repeated in the Bible."

"But I have no Bible," she replied.

He quickly handed her his own, saying: "I have pleasure in giving you mine."

Some time after, this Catholic dignitary, remembering the advice he had given this lady, sent a priest to inquire about her state of mind. Instead of needing help from him, he soon found that she was able to instruct him in the way of life. Before leaving, she gave him the Bible that had been presented to her at Exeter Hall, and begged him to read it with prayer and to trust alone in Him, "who bore our sins in his own body on the tree."

Some time after she received a note from the priest asking her to call on him. As she was about to take her son to college, she neglected to accept the invitation at the time. When she called some weeks after she was shown into a room where there was a coffin, and in it the body of the priest. Beside it a nun was kneeling prayer. The lady approached and asked: "Did he leave a message for me?"

"Yes," was the reply. "He wished me to say, if you called, that he died in the full faith of the Catholic Church, and that he cursed the day he ever saw you."

The poor lady turned away greatly distressed, saying to herself: "If I had gone to his bedside when he sent for me, I might have pointed him to Christ, and he might have been saved through faith in Him; but now, alas! it is too late. I fear that through my negligence he is lost forever." This reflection sorely affected her peace of mind, which she sought to restore by foreign travel.

One day a lady in Rome approached her and said: "Do you remember standing by the coffin of Father ——, and the dreadful message there delivered to you?"

"Yes, it has followed me night and day."

"But it was not a true message. The words he bade me deliver to you were these; "Tell her that I bless the day I ever saw her, and that I die in the full faith of the Lord Jesus Christ. Tell her that the Bible she gave me was the means of leading me to trust alone in Him for pardon.' And then," added the nun, "he gave me the precious Bible, which has also been the means of leading me to see myself a lost sinner and Christ as my only Saviour. Will you forgive me for telling you that terrible falsehood?"

Dear reader, are you a Christian? If so, may the recital of these facts strengthen your faith in the promise of God, "My word shall not return to Me void," and lead you with more faith and determination to assist in putting the Bible into every sinner's hand, in the hope to lead him to Christ.—Interior.

The Peace-Maker.

The one woman in the whole world whom we should most greatly appreciate is the peace-maker, the persistent go-between who endeavors always to pour oil on the troubled waters and who unfortunately in many instances finds her efforts so far from being appreciated that they are condemned and the words, "Blessed are the peace-makers," have no meaning for her so far as her reward in this world is concerned.

It is a blessed disposition that is ever on the alert to avoid a quarrel. Life moves ever so much pleasantly when we do not strut about carrying a chip on our shoulder that we actually implore the passer-by to knock off. Existence at best is too brief to be continually wrangling, yet there are wars and rumors of war, internal dissensions in families that should be united, and the poor little peace-maker goes about in energetic unhappiness, doing her best to patch up matters, arguing and pleading, but seldom achieving her object without being wounded several times before a reconciliation is effected.

Why is this? we ask, and the answer most frequently given is that the peace-maker, though honest in purpose, does not go about her work the right way. In order to prove that one or the other is in the wrong she chooses arguments that wound their self-pride and thus only serve to widen the breach. Tact, that ever-healing salve, must be skillfully doled out, dulling the pain, smoothing off the rough edges and, even while rebuking, touching so lightly upon the discrepancy that the admonishing hand falls like a caress.

The world is composed of a lot of queer people, each nature needing different and delicate dealing. Therefore the woman who accepts the role of peace-maker as her mission must handle her subjects with deftness and skill if she does not want to come forth from her undertaking a battered wreck with both sides arrayed in battle against her.—Ex.

ELECTROLIBRATION CO. GOULD BUILDING, ATLANTA, Ga

Harnessing Niagara.

Engineers have estimated that the total water-power of Niagara Falls is seven million horse-power. This estimate, to be sure, is, says Harper's Weekly, in the main only a guess, but when the area drained into the lakes above Lake Ontario, and passing through the Niagara River be considered, the guess or estimate does not seem to be too large. The water surface of the Great Lakes above Ontario is 84,000 square miles, and the water-shed of these lakes is 240,000 square miles—more than twice the area of Great Britain and Ireland. The total length of shore-line is 5,000 miles, while the volume of water is 6,000 cubic miles, os which Lake Superior contains almost one-half. The rate of outflow at Buffalo is from 217,000 to 275,000 cubic feet per second, while the fall of the cataract is 165 feet. The volume of water in the lakes is such that it has been estimated that even if no rain fell the flow of the river would be continued at its present rate for one hundred years—that is, if the lakes could be gradually drained.

These are very large figures, but in the main they are the results of exact measurements. The small water-powers in the world are uneven, and are affected by floods and droughts, but this great power at Niagara is as constant as anything in this world can be, not even the ice, in the severest and longest winter ever known, appreciably changing it. The present plant is intended only to utilize 125,000 horse-power, and the turbines now in place are only for a small part of this. Other turbine wheels will be put in place as the demand for the power grows. The general plan of the company contemplates the ultimate use of 450,000 horse-power on the American side and a like amount in Canada, Such a power would turn all the wheels within a radius of 500 miles of the Falls. At the present time a considerable part of the power developed is to be taken to Buffalo by electric transmission, and it is the confident expectation of the electricians now at work on the problem that the power can be taken as far east as Albany, 300 miles away, and delivered there cheaper than power can be generated by burning coal. If this be so, then all the country between Albany and the Falls will be admirably adapted for manufacturing, while the Erie Canal will afford cheap and tolerably quick transportation, for there seems to be little difficulty in the way of hauling these boats by electrical power.

Life's Resting-Places.

God has provided for many pauses along our days when we shall lay down our tasks and unlade our burdens and cease our work. These quiet resting-places are necessary. Our bodies would break down and our minds would become insane if we had to go on forever with life's grind and toil. But night comes, and we leave our shops and stores and offices, and find rest in our homes or in pleasant companionships. We lie down in sleep, and in a strange, mysterious way our exhausted life-fountains are replenished.

The Sabbath is another of these quiet resting-places which God has provided on our journey. He wants us to drop all our week-day toil and care, and spend the day in such a way that when Monday morning comes we shall be strong for its work.

Most of us find resting-times along our years, seasons when we can drop our ordinary tasks for a time. These are given that in them we may gather new strength for duty. Life's main object is not rest, but work. Every day and hour of it is crowded with duty.

Life is serious. It is full of responsibility. One cannot waste an hour of it without sin. It must be put to its best possible use. Rest is never, therefore, an object in life—we do not live to rest; or if we do we fail to grasp life's meaning. Rest is not an end, but a means. We do not live to rest; we rest to live. We take rest that we may live better, more energetically, more powerfully, more intensely. We sleep after an exhausting day that we may be fresh and strong to-morrow. We spend our Sabbaths in such rest from toil and such spiritual exercises as shall make us ready for another week of service. We take vacations, not merely to have a good time, but to renew our stock of vitality. —Young People's Weekly.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address:

Rev. Chalmers Moore, from Hopewell, N. C., to Bryson City, N. C.

Rev. E. M. Craig, from Appomattox C. H., Va., to Cuthbert, Ga.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Providence Church:—Providence church, Session House and Manse, have all had a new dress of paint. The congregation has built a neat schoolhouse on the church grounds.

Banks Church:—Banks church has been painted inside and out, and the Sesson House outside. Both churches are greatly improved in appearance.

Wilmington Presbytery:—Wilmington Presbytery held an adjourned meeting at Richlands church, in Onslow county, on Nov. 21st, to investigate certain matters affecting the welfare of that church. Without concluding the business, Presbytery adjourned to meet again in the First church of Wilmington on the 18th of December. Dr. P. H. Hoge, the moderator, preached Wednesday night, and remained to preach again Thursday night and to instruct the people with regard to the Presbytery's action. Rev. A. McFadyen was directed to supply the church at Elizabethtown.

Mt. Horeb Church:—Horeb church in response to the citation of Presbytery, gave reasons why the pastoral relation with Rev. A. McFadyen should not be dissolved, and the further consideration of the matter was postponed to the spring meeting.

Concord Presbytery:—Concord Presbytery held an adjourned meeting at Statesville on Tuesday, Nov. 19th. The Hickory church was allowed to change its call for the services of Rev. J. A. Ramsay. The original call was for his whole time at a salary of $800 a year, and they now call him for three-fourths of his time at a salary of $600. The change was agreeable to Mr. Ramsay.

Mr. R. V. Miller, of Salisbury appeared before the Presbytery for examination and admission as a licentiate. After a careful examination on all points the Presbytery decided that the way was not clear, and he was not licensed.—The Landmark.

Concord:—On Sabbath, November 18th, Rev. W. C. Alexander was installed pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Concord. Dr. J. B. Shearer presided and preached a grand sermon, his subject being, "The Dignity and Glory of the Gospel Ministy." Rev. R. V. Lancaster, in the absence of Dr. J. M. Wharey, delivered eloquent and appropriate charges to both pastor and people.

VIRGINIA.

Massanutten Church:—Rev. F. G. Brooke, the Presbytery's evangelist, assisted the pastor, Rev. G. L. Brown for twelve days. The congregation was greatly revived and twelve persons were received on profession.

Norfolk, Parke Avenue Church:—Mr. Weston B. Gales, an evangelist, has been preaching in this church. Five cottage prayer-meetings were held simultaneously every morning, a Bible reading and praise service every afternoon, and the special evangelistic meetings at night. There have been about fifty professions of faith.

Rev. E. M. Craig:—This brother, who has been doing a good work in Appomattox county, has accepted a call to supply, for one year, the churches of Cuthbert and Fort Gaines in Georgia.

Hampden-Sidney:—A correspondent writes us: An election was held in Prince Edward county, on the 17th of November to decide whether the county would subscribe $150,000 to secure the building of a railroad to Hampden-Sidney as an inducement to the authorities of Union Theological Seminary to allow their institution to remain in its present location instead of removing it to some other place. The subscription was voted down, and the railroad will not be built. The Farmville Journal, which has strenuously opposed the removal of the seminary and earnestly urged the citizens of the county to vote for the railroad, says that the election virtually decides that the seminary will be moved. The recent action of the Synod of Virginia, declining to interfere with the preparations of the Board of Directors for the removal, points in the same direction. The fact is that the building of the railroad would not have affected the question, as the seminary is certain to be moved anyhow.

Christian Unity:—The Methodist Conference at Charlottesville and the Baptist Association at Alexandria have been exchanging salutations of Christian fellowship. This is the unity for which Christ prayed. Now let the brethren keep it in memory and heart all the year through, and no word be spoken in any pulpit that is a violation thereof.—Central Presbyterian.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Jefferson:—Rev. M. C. Arrowood writes us: "Have just returned from a week's work at Jefferson. That church is in Pee Dee Presbytery and without a pastor. We went to them on invitation to hold a communion service with them. God blessed the Word. Seven young person took upon themselves the vows of discipleship. Five of them were children of the covenant. Two were from the world and were baptized on profession of their faith. Bro. B. P. Reed, from Kershaw, met us there by accident and preached one night. He was working up the people, looking towards locating an evangelist in Chesterfield county. May the Lord speed the day when the Synod of South Carolina shall have completed the work now in hand, and which Bro. Reed is working so hard to perfect, and a live man be placed in Chesterfield, with headquarters at Jefferson."

Columbia:—We see reports that Dr. Girardeau has sent in his resignation of the Chair of Theology to take effect in May next. Although he has approached the three-score years and ten, his "natural force is not abated." We cannot forbear the hope that his resignation may not be pressed. He has done a noble work in that Seminary.—Christian Observer.

First Church, Columbia:—The First church, Columbia, celebrated its centennial anniversary November 9th-11th. Four of the old pastors Drs. Mack, Bryson, Boggs and Woods were present. Dr. Mack opened the exercise Friday evening with a lecture on the distinctive character of Presbyterianism.

Dr. Bryson spoke Saturday morning on "The Scotch Irish Presbyterians." Dr. Boggs, gave the history of the church, Sabbath morning, and at night, Dr. Woods discussed "Presbyterianism and Liberty." The church, under the care of the present pastor, Dr. S. M. Smith, shows none of the decrepitude of age, but is full of vigor.

Rocky Springs Church:—Licentiate S. C. Todd held a meeting in this church which was blessed with more than thirty professions of faith.

Columbia Seminary:—In the Central Presbyterian we find the following paragraph copied from the London Christian: "It is stated that a strong effort is being made to secure the services of Rev. Professor Watts, D. D., LL. D., of the Assembly's College, Belfast, to fill the theological chair in the Columbia College, South Carolina, an institution which is the principal Presbyterian seminary in the Southern States of America."

Greenville:—Dr. J. R. Wilkinson and family members of the Third church, Greenville, will go in a few days to China. He goes out as the "Children's Missionary" his support being specially provided for by the collections on Children's Day, in May last. He has been appointed to take charge of the hospital work which is being organized at Soochow under the care of Rev. John W. Davis, D. D. This is the third missionary who has gone from our churches in Greenville in the last year. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth more laborers" from our midst.

Rocky Springs:—Last Sunday after services by Rev. W. S. Bean at Rocky Springs church, in the afternoon the minister and two elders proceeded to the residence of another officer of the church several miles distant. Here a touching ceremony was held, the reception into the Church of a venerable lady eighty-seven years old, who desired to become a communicant before her departure. She had long been a Christian believer, but various circumstances had prevented her uniting with the Church, and now she was briefly examined, and with clear mind and perfect knowledge of what she was doing, responded, and received the ordinance of baptism; after which the communion was administered to those present. Two grandchildren were baptized at the same time.

ALABAMA.

Dr. Waddell:—From the Birmingham Presbyterian we learn that Rev. J. N. Waddell, D. D., has been seriously injured by a fall. By a misstep he was precipitated down the stairway, and struck his head on a brick wall below. No bones were broken, but he was unconscious for several days, His recovery is hoped for. The Doctor is now 83 years of age, and is widely known and much loved. [Three years age he told me that he was simply waiting, "waiting peacefully and hopefully for his summons." J. M. R.]

The Synod of Alabama:—The Synod of Alabama met in the Central church, Montgomery, on November 20th.

The Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railway Company will issue tickets as per tariff of circular 1582, on occasion of N. C. M. E. Conference at Durham, December 5th-12th; tickets sold 4th, 5th and 6th, final limit December 14th. The following rates from: Fayetteville, $5.25; Maxton, $6.95.

Also to meeting Grand Lodge of Masons, (Colored), at Newbern, December 11th-17th. Tickets sold 9th, 10th and 11th—final limit December 20th. The following rates to and from Newbern from: Maxton, $8.15; Sanford, $7.75.

FLORIDA.

The Synod of Florida:—The Synod of Florida has appointed a committee of conference with the two Presbyteries of the Northern Church, located in Florida, in order to secure closer relations.—Christian Observer.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Lewisburg:—Rev. Wm. Mc. White, of Richmond, has been elected to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church, at Lewisburg, W. Va., Mr. White is a son of Rev. Dr. Henry White, of Winchester, and a grandson of the late Dr. Wm. S. White, of Lexington.

The Presbyterian manse in Lewisburg has been sold to Capt. A. P. McClung for $1,700, and an effort is now being made to raise a fund, which added to the $1,700 realized from the sale of the present manse will be sufficient not only to buy or build a new manse, but to put the Church building in thorough repair. The old stone Church, in which the Presbyterians of this community have worshipped for nigh on to a hundred years, needs a general over hauling inside and out. The sum of $1,500; the amount wanted will not be a dollar too much for the purpose indicated.—Greenbrier Independent.

MISSISSIPPI.

Columbus:—Tombeckbee Presbytery met in Columbus on the 6th of November to instal Rev. W. S. Jacobs. Ruling Elder Steckett presided and propounded the constitutional questions, and Rev. J. E. Jones preached the sermon. Dr. H. R. Raymond delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. E. B. Witherspoon the charge to the people. The newly installed pastor also made an address, citing the incident where Aaron and Hur held up Moses' hands.

On Sunday the 11th, Rev. W. S. Jacobs, of Clinton, S. C., the father of the present pastor and Rev. R. B. McAlpine, a former pastor, dedicated the new church to the worship of God.

KENTUCKY.

Shawham Station:—At a protracted service conducted at this point, by Rev. Dr. Rutherford and Rev. J. G. Anderson, much good was done, arousing the church to greater activity and interest in Christian work. There were six accessions to the membership on profession of faith.

EVANGELISTIC WORK.

Your earnest attention is invited to the following statement concerning the present condition and needs of the Evangelistic Work in Watauga and Mitchell Counties, under the care of Concord Presbytery:

To the recent session of Synod, at Greensboro, your Evangelist made the following report of what had been accomplished, where, three years ago, there were only ten Presbyterians scattered over a territory fifty miles in diameter:

To-day we have four organized churches with 166 communicants (including four added since report sent to Synod), five mission stations, four buildings completed and one partly so, four Sabbath-schools with 275 pupils, and four day schools with 275 pupils and seven teachers.

Much of the progress made has been due, under God, to the instrumentality of the four day schools and the self-denying labors of the ladies who conduct them. They are situated at Spruce Pine and Cranberry in Mitchell county, and at Banner's Elk and Cove Creek in Watauga county. The teachers this year are, or have been, Misses Clarke, Irvine and Evans at Spruce Pine; Mrs. E. A. McRae at Cranberry: Misses Houpe and Stinson at Banner's Elk; Misses Houpe and Torrence at Cove Creek. We have an urgent request to take charge also of a large academy at Plum Tree in Mitchell county.

These schools have been established, not to teach secular branches for their own sake, but solely for Christ's sake. By this means homes and hearts have been opened to your Evangelist that might otherwise have been shut against him. The ladies in charge visit from house to house, read the Bible to the aged and ignorant, minister to the wants of the poor and the sick, hold women's prayer-meetings and conduct Sabbath-schools. Our work has been more fruitful where we have had these institutions than at any other points.

This feature of the work was inaugurated simply because the Lord clearly opened the way. Not one cent was pledged for its support when it was begun. Soon afterward a collection for Church and Christian Education was recommended to the churches, from which we received this year only $34.00. But God has moved some of His people to approve and aid this movement, notably the ladies of the following churches of Concord Presbytery: Statesville, Mooresville, Salisbury, Morganton, Concord, Centre, Rocky River and Thyatira. We will need this year at least $500 for sustaining these schools, all of which are partly self-supporting.

Your Evangelist appeals for help in taking care of these enterprises. Christian women, some of them from other Presbyteries, offer to endure the hardships of these missionary labors for very meagre salaries—in fact, sometimes for nothing more than their expenses. They will appreciate your contributions as sympathetic expressions of your interest in their efforts. It is very important that your Evangelist shall know by December 12th at latest, how much you will do toward helping this cause. He has undertaken the financial responsibility for it during the current session, and if this method of raising the funds does not succeed he must try others. Will you not kindly respond to this request by that date with a promise or a contribution? It may be paid, however, in installments until May 1st, 1894.

Yours fraternally,

ROBT. P. PELL, Synod's Evangelist,
Cranberry, Mitchell County, N. C.

SYNOD OF GEORGIA.

This Synod has just concluded an important session in the beautiful city of Savannah. There were fifty-four members present. Ruling Elder J. A. Billups, was the moderator of the former meeting, and requested Rev. Dr. E. H. Barnett to preach the opening sermon. Dr. Barnett was elected moderator.

The current business of the Synod about Education, Publication and Foreign Missions showed nothing more than the usual work, except that Savannah Presbytery is moving to sustain its own Foreign missionary without diminution of its contributions to the Committee.

In Macon, Ga., in 1845, the Synod of Georgia was constituted. Therefore, its next session will be held in the First church in Macon, 20th November, 1895, when special and interesting centennial services will be arranged to celebrate the memorable event.

An overture will be sent to the next General Assembly to appoint a committee of nine to confer with a similar committee from the Northern Presbyterian Church, as to the differences separating the two churches. This is done, not from desire for organic union, but because it was thought that the last Assembly had not acted courteously in the matter.

An overture to unite the two secretaryships of Education and Publication under Dr. Hazen was also ordered to be sent to the Assembly.

HOME MISSIONS.

Synodical Home Missions were discussed with deep interest. The work has not been satisfactory, and earnest and determined action was taken to push forward next year. The sum of $9,000 must be raised.

SOCIAL RECEPTION.

A very delightful feature of the meeting was a most hospitable reception, given by the Independent Presbyterian church to the Synod, in their new Sunday-school building. The spirit was most Christian, and the bands of love were closely drawn. In passing a paper of appreciation, the Synod expressed its hope that the Independent Church might be drawn to a complete ecclesiastical union with the Southern Church.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Another important action was in the adoption of a paper advising the removal and union of Columbia Theological Seminary, and the Theological Section of the Southwestern Presbyterian University in some central Southern location. Should Georgia be chosen as the State, very large assistance will be given to such a movement. There are too many seminaries attempted; they are badly located, must be small, and inefficient. Some change must be made. This Synod believes this one would be wise.

COMMON PLACE STORY OF SUFFERING AND PAIN.

MR. EDITOR:—It is not my purpose, to attempt to depict, more minutely or pathetically, the character and condition of the subject which gave rise to the article, "Common Place Story of Suffering and Pain," by L.P.R., in your paper of November 8th, 1894. But I wish to suggest, at least, that in addition to the method suggested, by L. P. R., for ameliorating the condition of the many sufferers, among the negroes, that two other methods or priniciples must be employed, or there can never be satisfactory results from the labors and means employed in the work of Christianizing and elevating the negro race, to the desired and proper standing, as citizens and yoke-bearers of this grand and glorious country. The task is a huge one. And until the Church and the enlightened public make and adopt a firm and an unconditional resolution to suppress vice and its kinvred elements, in whatever form it may appear, among the negroes and in their houses, all efforts in this work will be unavailing and discouraging in their results.

The success of this work depends primarily upon the faithfulness and efficiency of three classes of men, namely: "The preachers, teachers, and the magistrates."

(1.) The whole counsel of God must be earnestly, properly, and fully declared, and indelibly impressed upon the minds and consciences of the people.

(2.) They are to be enlightened and trained in the useful and skilled arts, preparatory for a livelihood. Idleness and vagrancy they must be made to loathe, and dwelling in locations, whose environments are not conducive to health and good order, where the influences of a pure and noble life are wanting, they should be taught to shun.

(3.) For every violation or evasion of the organic and statutory laws, there should be a proper, thorough, and judicious infliction of the penalty attached to such laws, upon the transgressors or evaders.

It must be clear to all observing and thoughtful persons, that the influences of the teachers and the efficiency of the laws, are dependent upon, and spring from, a fully enlightened, elevated and refined public sentiment. Is not public sentiment a just criterion, from which the power of the pulpit is judged?

It is clear that the spirit and efficiency of the teacher's work, as well as the faithfulness, diligence and discretion of the civil authorities in carrying out the spirit and purport of the laws, are in a degree proportionate to, and in harmony with, public sentiment?

Then, is it not true, when it is said, "That the degree in which crime prevails is commensurate with public sentiment, which characterizes the earnestness, faithfulness, and fervency, with which a purely preached gospel is delivered to, and received by the people?"

It was Cowper who said:

"When nations are to perish in their sins,
'Tis in the Church the leprosy begins."

The proverbial saying, mentioned by "L. P. R.," inverted, would read,

"Where God plants a 'simmon tree, right there he sends a 'possum," and it finds a fitting and beautiful illustration in the Christian Church and the negro race of this country. Brethren, now that the Synod of North Carolina has appointed a Board of Directors to supervise the establishment and running of an industrial training school, where cooks, house-keepers, nurses, farmers, mechanics, in short, servants for all kinds of manual and skilled labor will be prepared, for rendering efficient services of whatsoever kind, shall not this case receive your kiud consideration and exemplified sympathy? More anon.

Yours for the work,

S. G. WALKER.

Elkin, N. C., Nov. 12th, 1894.

COMMUNICATION FROM L. P. R.

EDITOR N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 15th inst., received. Permit me to thank, through your columns, "the deacon in Charlotte," whose charitable heart was so moved by my humble story. His timely contribution was duly delivered to the object of my sketch, and received with open-eyed surprise and genuine gratitude; unsought kindness has not often knocked at her door. Still the story was not written with the object of soliciting alms for the relief of this one woman, but more to call the attention of Christian workers to the perennial poverty, ignorance and suffering at our doors. We cannot do much now for the adults of this race whose lives touch our own so closely. We can do everything to rescue their children from a similar depth of degradation. Why a happy little negro capering along in the sunshine,

"Where Africa's sunny fountains, Roll down their golden sands," should be more interesting to us than one rolling over the nursery floor with our own babies, is a mystery to me. Thanking you and the deacon again for your kindness and charity, I am

Yours sincerely,

L. P. R.

TO THE OFFICERS AND PRIVATE MEMBERS IN THE CHURCHES OF MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The following is an extract from minutes of the meeting of Presbytery held recently at Monroe: "Revs. R.P. Smith, R. F. Campbell, R. A. Miller, and Elders John E. Oates, and A. G. Brenizer were appointed a committee to raise salary for a superintendent to take charge of Home Mission work of Presbytery."

The appointing of this committee by Presbytery is significant. Our Home Mission work is at a critical period in its history. For the past few years our Presbytery has made rapid strides in this department of her work; but we have reached a point where we must halt (and perhaps retreat) or devise and execute more efficient methods to push the work forward. It has grown to such dimensions that the usual Home Missions Committee, with a busy pastor as chairman, cannot give it the attention that the cause merits at our hands. Consider for a moment the size of our territory extending from the Pee Dee River to the Tennessee line, embracing nineteen counties. And there is mission work to be done in every one of these counties in destitute regions. The smaller churches need more preaching; often vacant churches need advice and help in forming suitable groups and securing pastors and supplies; houses of worship and manses to be erected, &c. Our busy pastors cannot afford to leave their own fields long enough to attend to these important matters with any degree of efficiency. Such duties as these will occupy the superintendent's time. It is not the purpose of the Presbytery to send him out as a financial agent, but as a preacher and counselor, who will gather information for the Home Mission Committee by coming in close contact with the people. Nor is it our aim to adopt novel or high pressure methods of work, but to move with prudence and energy along well established lines. Spasmodic efforts will not answer the demands, we must have earnest, patient, skillful labor.

The work will not be attempted unless a sufficient amount is raised to secure the services of a man, who has gifts and experience that qualify him specially for such a position.

We hear much about hard times. True indeed, but can we afford to let the Lord's work languish in our hands? Let us be loyal to our Church and loyal to our Master, though it may cost us much self-denial at this time. Brethren, it is for you to determine whether or not this work shall go forward. Twelve hundred to $1,500 will secure the services of a suitable man. Please respond liberally and give your proportionate part when this cause is presented in your church.

Fraternally, &c.,

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson X.

Dec. 9.—Christ Teaching by Parables.

(Luke viii. 4–15. Commit vss. 11–15.)

Golden Text. "The seed is the word of God. Luke viii. 11.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. For summary of intervening events see Lesson VIII, First Step. Remember that Lesson IX, properly precedes Lesson VIII. The visit of our Lord's mother and brethren seems to have occurred on the same day as the teaching in parables (vs. 19). Comparing with Matt. xiii (note especially vss. 10, 26, and that other parables follow the explanation) and Mark iv. 10, 34–36, we gather that in the morning the first parables were delivered and that towards noon they retired to the house after Oriental habit, and there He expounded to His disciples. During this time the interview with the deleGates from the Sanhedrim and the visit of His mother and brethren took place. (Lesson VIII). In the evening, also after Oriental habit, there was another gathering by the shore, and other parables were uttered. At the close, when He would cross over the sea, the disciples took Him "even as He was in the ship." He soon fell asleep, wearied with the day's labors, until the storm arose, the disciples awakened Him, and He calmed the storm.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson:

The gathered multitudes, vs. 4; the method of instruction and the reason for it vss. 4, 10; one sower, one kind of seed, four kinds of soil, and four different results, vss. 5–8; the four kinds of hearers of the Word, vss. 11–15.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 4. Much people.....out of every city. It immediately follows His circuit of the cities of Galilee (vs. 1), and the crowd of followers swelled as He went from place to place. He has now returned to Capernaum. The seeming popularity of His ministry and the success of His preaching, gives us the proper point of view for interpreting the parable. It is intended to sift His hearers. It shows that He is not deceived by His apparent success.

A Parable. Sometimes applied to a proverb, or any metaphorical expression, but in the sense here used it may be defined: "A brief narrative of probable human action pointing to a spiritual truth. The action or movement is usually the principal thing; the details cannot always be interpreted. The explanation given in the lesson suggests the true method of interpretation. The main lesson is the essential one. Other analogies may be found, but they are not to be presented as the authoritative teaching of our Lord." (Dr. M. B. Riddle, in S. S. Times).

Vs. 5. Way side. "There is no trace of made roads anywhere, excepting by the edge of the lake. The whole area, presenting in winter an unbroken expanse, had been recently scratched by the simple wooden plow in preparation for the seed. Intersected by many a footpath, the plowman took no account of these." (Canon Tristram in, S. S. Times).

The fowls of the air. "Flocks of birds which abound there, chiefly finches and doves, boldly follow the husbandman, and gather up the grains exposed on the hard surface of the path." (Ibid.)

Vs. 6. Upon a rock. Not an exposed rock. "The cultivated land is covered with a sea of waving grain, but here and there in the midst are patches brown and withered. We go to one of these, and thrust the end of our staff into the soil. Almost instantly it is arrested; it has struck the rock which here, within an inch or two, approaches the surface. The land appeared all right in the time of sowing, but the hard rock lay close beneath." (Rev. Wm. Ewing, in S. S. Times.)

Because it lacked moisture. "A few days' sunshine soon evaporates the moisture of the shallow covering of the sunken boulders." (Tristram, as above.)

Vs. 7. Among thorns. Not thorn bushes. This soil, too, appeared all right at the time of sowing. "The common weed of the plain is a thorny astralgus, which attains a height of three or four feet in summer, but dies down in the winter. Its perennial roots lie deep in the soil, and are never reached by the surface plowing, though more careful cultivators will laboriously dig them out." (Ibid.)

Vs. 8. An hundred fold. "But where it escapes all these perils, the crops of this plain, the rabbis tell us, perhaps with some exaggeration, will yield three hundred fold.' (Ibid.)

Vs. 11. The seed is the Word of God. A most frequent metaphor. For other metaphorical uses of seed, see Fifth Step.

Vs. 12. The first class is the careless or indifferent hearer. Those who do not listen, or who listen only from curiosity, or for entertainment. Worldliness has hardened their hearts so that they are not susceptible to the influences of the truth. There must be attention in order that there may be retention.

The devil. He is interested if you are not. Some distracting thought is sent into your mind to take it off the truth, or he uses the criticisms, it may be of some Christian friend, to pluck away the seed.

Vs. 13. The shallow hearer. Apparently they are very susceptible. They respond quickest of all, but the truth does not really take hold upon the springs of their action and form the ruling principle of their lives. They are found in every religious revival and in every congregation.

Vs. 14. This class is composed of sincere believers, but worldly, dwarfed Christians. They are not dead, but they bring no fruit to perfection. The rapid growth of the thorns "speedily chokes it, or spindles it out, till it only produces a sickly head with three or four grains struggling for existence among the weeds." (Tristram.)

Vs. 15. An honest and good heart. Thank God there are hearts that promise a ready soil for God's Word. They are chiefly found among the children of Christian homes. Carefully cultivated; the growth of evil weeds watched, checked and rooted out; softened by prayer and the grace that comes in answer to prayer; living in an atmosphere congenial to the growth of the seed, it is here that the Christian minister looks for the richest fruits of his labor.

Keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience. Cultivation is not over when the seed-sowing is done. Constant watchfulness to protect the seed and to keep down the evil weeds is the condition of the best results.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF NOV. 15.

116. (a.) Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v, 3, 4.
(b.) Simon Magus, Acts viii. 19, 20.

117. By leaving all and following Christ, Mark x. 28–30 and parallels.
(The references to our becoming the children of God do not fully meet the conditions of this question.)

Correct answers have been received as follows:

Olive Wilson, 113*, 115* 116a.
Flora C. McNeill, 113, 114, 115, 116.
Chas. E. McMillan, 116.

*Half-value: no reference given.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. The hearers of the Word.
Way-side hearers, Matt. xiii. 15; 2 Cor. iii. 14; iv. 4; 1 Cor. ii. 14; Acts ii. 13.
Stony-ground hearers, John ii. 23–25; vi. 60, 61, 66; 2 Tim. iv. 10; 1 John ii. 19.
Thorny-grounnd hearers, 1 Cor. iii. 1–3; Heb. iii. 12, 13; 2 Pet, i. 9.
Good-ground hearers, Gal. v. 22, 28; vi. 9; 2 Pet. i. 5–8.
2. Symbolism of sowing.
Conduct, Job iv. 8; Prov. xxii. 8; Hos. viii. 7; Gal. vi. 7–9.
Giving. Eccl. xi. 1, 6; Is xxxii. 20; 2 Cor. ix. 6.
Preaching, Lesson, 1 Cor. iii. 6; ix. 11.
Planting the kingdom, Matt. xiii. 31, 32, 36–43.
Sacrifice, John xii. 24–26, compare vss. 32, 33.
Burial of the body, 1 Cor. xv. 35–38, 42–44.

Sixth Step. The practical lesson is found in Luke viii. 18, "Take heed therefore how ye hear." We may by preparation of the heart pass from any of the first three classes inio the fourth. That preparation is well described in Shorter Catechism, Q. 90.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

After fixing the relation of the lesson to other events draw out the knowledge of your scholars as to the details of the parable, supplementing their knowledge with the facts given above from travellers in Bible lands. Proceed in the same way with the interpretation, making the application as pointed as possible. Select from the Bible Reading (No. 1.) the texts that illustrate the different classes. Endeavor to impress upon your scholars the responsibility of hearing. Clinch all with catechism as above.

NEW QUESTIONS.

120. Which of our Lord's parables represents the kingdom as a growth (within or without us?)
121. Which parables represent salvation as a restoration?
122. Which (not including the last), lay emphasis upon the blessings conferred?
123. Which lay emphasis upon the duties involved?

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. Edwin Anderson Northrop, an alderman of Wilmington, and one of the best known and most esteemed of its younger citizens died in New York on Saturday last. The remains were brought to Wilmington and after very sad and solemn services at the First Presbyterian church, of which the deceased was a member, were interred in Oakdale Cemetery. Great sympathy is felt for the bereaved family—wife and one child—and for Mr. Samuel Northrop and his wife, the parents of the deceased. Mr. Northrop was in his 27th year.

At Argyle, Cumberland county, N. C., Nov. 15th, Mrs. CATHERINE, widow of the late Duncan McLauchlin.

This venerable lady was for more than seventy years a communicant. During all these years the light of her quiet, consistent, and Christian example shone steadily and brightly in her family, in the community and the church. Her life was characterized by good sense, cheerfulness and piety.

Mrs. McL. was the mother of six children—four sons and two daughters. Her husband, a daughter, and two sons preceded her to the heavenly home—and what is remarkable, all of them died away from their home. Her children and grand children rise up and call her blessed, and bear in their hearts the benediction of a life that never lost its sweetness, and a ripe age that never lost its youth. Three-quarters of a century of beautiful living—exceptional, indeed, is this record! Surely, the radiance of such a life never cheered this world by chance. A sunny patience, a bright-hearted self-forgetfulness, a sweet and winning interest in the little things of family intercourse, the divine lustre of a Christian peace are not fortuitous works carelessly flowering out of the life garden. They come of grace. It is the internal which makes the external. It is the beautful soul within which forms the crystal of a beautiful life without. If we would have our life true and beautiful, we must be true and beautiful.

In her case, divine grace so flowed through natural sweetness and serenity of disposition, that even when crippled and burdened by the weight of years, no murmur ever escaped her lips, which constantly expressed gratitude and love. She suggested the blossoms of spring time lingering on boughs richly burdened with fruit. It was meet that in the autumn, as the days were golden and full of rich fruitage, this beloved one should be gathered into the heavenly garner. The suns of ninety summers had wrought to perfectness her life and character. Few epistles are written by the Spirit of God upon the hearts of human lives that surpass the truthfulness and love, the patience and peace, that were manifested in her life. She was everywhere an open page of the Lord's gospel.

The memory of such a life is precious. Retaining her faculties to the last—she sank into the quiet sleep of a little child, and awaked in the home of the glorified. Her remains were borne to the church she loved in life, where brief words were spoken, and then to the sleeping place near by, to rest amongst those she loved on earth, who had passed over before her. At Edge Hill manse, near Philadelphia, Nov. 21st, ELEANOR CATHARINE, daughter of Rev. Jas. M. and Mrs. Maggie Gilmour Wicker, aged 10 months and 10 days. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

At Morganton, on the 4th of November, 1894, Mrs. Ellen R. ERWIN, wife of Maj. L. P. Erwin, in the fifty-ninth year of her age. A bright, happy and cheerful Christian, thinking not of her own, but of the happiness of others, doing everything she could to sweeten the cup of life, of husband, children and friends. She was a true child of God, with unswerving faith in, and fidelity to her Heavenly Master. A devoted wife, and affectionate mother, a kind, loving friend. But her steps have ceased, her voice is hushed, and her trusting spirit is with the Lord. On account of softening of the brain, her mind gave way, and she was sent to Morganton for treatment. Her oldest son preceded her to the spirit land only three weeks. "Blessed are the dead, who die in the Lord."

FOR THE FAMILY.

A VANISHED FACE.

(This little poem will touch a tender cord in many hearts. The pathos of the last verse is exquisite. Ed.)

Still, as of old, the mountain breaks ;
The brook delays its mimic flood ;
And in its soft embrace it takes
The ivy-mantled wood.

Within the elm the robin sings ;
The lilac blooms beside the bars ;
And through the shadows evening brings
Look down the early stars.

And day by day the cheerful sounds
Arise, of those who sow or reap,
Who wake to tread life's common rounds
And turn again to sleep.

The seasons come and go apace,
And naught is changed my eye can see ;
But in its grave lies one dear face
That was the world to me.

Ursula's Victory.

BY ROSE W. FRY.

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

It was still early at the Hill-farm. Breakfast was over, and the hands of the kitchen-clock pointed to half-past eight. The farmer was out feeding his stock, Mrs. Hall was bustling around in the kitchen, and Ursula was busy putting the beds in order for the day. Everybody seemed to be in a rush.

It was Thanksgiving Day, and as Mrs. Hall had expressed it at breakfast, that morning, "There was a sight of work to be got through, if they would be in time for the meetin', and the dinner which was to follow."

Mrs. Selina Hall was a fine housekeeper, the best and most stirring one in the parish, and perhaps it was this consciousness which had led to Selina's inviting the new minister and his wife to take their thanksgiving dinner at the Hill-farm.

To fill up her table, she had thrown in Elder Banks and his wife, who had been a Hall before she married the Elder and moved into Wedgewood to live. "I'll add Cousin Sarah and James," she had said, "to fill up the table, for it doesn't show off to seat less than six at the board."

The dinner was more in Selina's mind than the Thanksgiving service !

"Hurry, Ursula," she called out, "or we shall be too late for the meetin'."

But Mrs. Hall was not destined to hear Mr. Parker's Thanksgiving sermon that morning; though his text, "I will call upon the Lord at all times," might have taxed her faith later in the day.

"There is Aunt calling me again," said Ursula, who was being driven hither and thither, and who felt an insane desire to pitch the bolster she was shaking out of the window—"what can she want now ?"

She hurried out on the back porch, only to find her Aunt lying helplessly in the newly-fallen snow, half-way between the porch and the milk-house. She was groaning piteously ; "I cant get up, Ursula, I'm afeard I've hurt myself, somewheres !"

Ursula ran to her quickly.

"Oh, you can't lift me, child ! best run for your Uncle and Jeremiah."

She had slipped on a stone, which was covered with a thin coating of ice, and now lay there powerless to move with one foot doubled up under her, and with a sharp pain creeping up her right leg !

"I can't rightly say how it happened, Joshua" she said, after the two men had lifted her into the living room, and laid her on the bed, "butthis I do say, its the most onconvenient thing as ever happened me, let alone the misery, and it Thanksgiving, and the minister invited to dinner !"

"Now Seliny, don't you worry," begged Mr. Hall, "I'd best go after the doctor, right away, an' Jeremiah can step over to Silas Green's an' fetch Mandy back, an' she can look after the dinner, while Ursula stays by you."

The doctor's verdict was not a cheering one. "There are no bones broken, fortunately," he announced after examination, "but it may be six weeks before you can put your foot to the ground, madam."

"If it has to be, it has to," said Selina in a choked voice. To feel so strong, and to lie there helpless for six long weeks was almost more than Selina could bear to think of, yet I believe she would have borne it joyfully, if she could have postponed the accident until the day after Thanksgiving.

To lie abed while Mandy Green spoilt her dinner in the cooking, was a heavy cross to the poor woman.

But she was not called upon to bear it, in that form, at least. Jeremiah came back with the news that Mandy had gone to spend Thanksgiving with old Mrs. Hoover 'cross the river, and "Mrs. Green," he added, "was laid up with chills."

Blessings brighten as they take their flight, and even Mandy Green in the kitchen was better than no dinner at all, and now Selina fairly broke down and cried, to the discomfort of Joshua and Ursula, who had never seen her Aunt unnerved before.

"It do seem unfortunate," began the honest farmer, "p'rhaps I had best send 'em word to stay away—"

"Joshua-y," gasped Mrs. Hall—"I'm ashamed of ye ! Invited guests, never ! And you—as carried the message yourself—that turkey must be stuffed, someways !"

Ursula repressed a sudden desire to laugh. Her Aunt's distress was genuine. "Can't I help ?" she asked timidly, for she was well aware that her Aunt did not belive in her ability.

"You ?" exclaimed Selina, "why you ain't ever stuffed a turkey in your whole life !"

"But I've seen you do it, over and over; if Jeremiah will wash the vegetables and keep up the fire I think we can manage it between, us," urged Ursula.

"Well, I suppose if you must, you must," said her Aunt, ungraciously. "There's no one else to hand. It's a mercy I half-biled that turkey yesterday, an' the pies, an' the cookies is all ready."

Ursula put on a big apron which almost covered her slight figure and went bravely to work. The dressing for the turkey was the first thing to be attended to, and it seemed to poor Ursula that that particular fowl would never "fill up." But at last the neck was sewed up, and the bird of Thanksgiving placed in the oven to brown. Joshua was kept busy carrying messages between the house and the kitchen.

"She is a good girl, Ursula is," he said, after one of these jaunts, "I wish ye was fonder of her, Seliny."

"I never was one of them as pertends," answered Selina, sharply, and lapsed back into silence. "She don't earn her keep."

"I don't want she should," retorted the farmer. "She's my sister's child, an' welcome to all she has a need ! You never was willin' to learn her."

"I ain't no time to fool along with such a midget !"

"The way she's took hol' of things today, 's'prisin'," continued Joshua, unheeding his wife's growing anger.

"Ay, ay, its always the last one 'at comes along, with you, Mr. Hall," said Selina, snappishly, "an' I've been cookin' for ye, steadily, twenty-five years an' more."

"You've been a good wife to me," said her husband, solemnly—"no woman ever could hev done more, that I do say."

"I've done my level best, admitted Selina, "no more could I do, if I was to be hung for't," she added truthfully. "It allays did seem to me the Lord was a leetle unfair to them as bore the heft of the day, an' never complained, an' received no more than them as crept in at the last hour—"

"Seliny !"

"I've sed it. I was prepared to be real thankful when I got up this morning ! With the crops heavy, an' the cattle sold fair, an' the taxes reasonable, this season, but the feelins all gone, Joshuay ! There 'ill be the doctor to pay, an' help to hire, an' me lyin' here idle like the most no account woman in the land—it don't hardly seem fair, Joshua !"

"Come wife, 'taint your fault, the good Book says, when we hav' done all, we are onprofitable servants—"

"In a religious way—I ain't denyin' that, of course," admitted Selina, going on with her grievances—"an' the dinner spoilin' this very minute ! The Lord forgive me— I feel real spiteful, instead of grateful—"

"Shall we receive good at the Lord's hands, and not evil ?" quoted the farmer, but she snapped him off, with, "Them as like such texts is welcome to 'em ! I smell that turkey burnin' this minute, an' it was sich a beauty, weighed nigh on to twenty pounds, an' as clean picked as ivory !"

Ursula was just lifting the great fowl from the pan. It required all of her slender strength to land it safely in the blue dish.

She was sixteen, but she did not look to be over fourteen. She was very small for her age, and her dainty figure was lost upon her Aunt, who measured folks by their weight, and had never been able to overcome an unreasonable prejudice against the orphan girl.

To be sure, Ursula was looking pale and thin when she first arrived at the farm a year ago, but the fresh country air and healthy diet had made a different being of her ; she was now a hardy-looking, rosy-hued girl, but she did not look to be a very happy one. Ursula missed the brothers and sisters from whom she was separated. If her Aunt had taken her to her heart she would have felt reconciled to the change ; but Selina had not done this.

"She looks like a doll," she had said, on first seeing her, "and I needed some one who could take hold of the work."

She did not oppress the girl, but she let her see that she was in the way. And Ursula suffered in silence. She longed for love, and for active employment. To-day she had work enough.

There was the gravy to thicken, the potatoes to cream, the rolls to bake, the coffee to grind, the table to arrange, and a final survey of every dish to see that nothing was overlooked. She had just ten minutes in which to bathe her flushed face and slip into her green cashmere before sitting down at the head of the table. Here she made a pretty picture with her shining eyes, and modest air, with her brown hair tumbled about her flushed brow. Her uncle felt quite proud of Ursula.

The guests had arrived and were anxous to offer their condolence to Mrs. Hall, but she would not hear of it until they had eaten dinner. She had some tea and toast, and Jeremiah to keep her company in the interim.

"That Ursula is a smart gal," said Jeremiah, by way of opening the conversation ; "the way she did fly around them pots and kettles to-day, beat me clean out! You'd a thought she was playin' at cooking—she seemed plainly to delight in it."

"An' no more than a decent body should !" flashed out Selina.

"I wonder you don't take her in hand," continued Jeremiah, "she's rale handy 'bout things."

"I guess she'll have things her own way the next six weeks, an' me lyin' here onable to move hand nor foot! Things 'ill be in a purty mess, when I get up !"

"Wal she's real handy," re-asserted Jeremiah, who was slow in getting an idea into his head, and tenacious in clinging to one when it was once located. "Ursula's willin'."

Selina lay back with closed eyes. She felt that her sway was over ; both Joshua and Jeremiah had gone over to the enemy. Two salt tears forced their way from beneath her closed lids. The dinner was a long time in coming to an end. At last it was over, and she could hear them coming in. The minister was the first to speak.

"My dear madam," he said cheerily, "it did seem too selfish to be enjoying all those goodly viands, and you, that should have graced the board unable to sit down with us to the Thanksgiving feast. But what a charming little hostess your niece makes—I see you have trained her well."

Selina's face quivered. "I'm glad she conducted herself well, sir," was all she could get her consent to say. "The dinner was delightfully cooked," chimed in Mrs. Parker, thinking to gratify

JAMIESON, FAUSSETT, AND BROWN

A Popular Commentary on the Old an

New Testament: Critical, Practical and Explanatory. 4 vols. in box, 8vo., cloth, $8. Half mor. $10. A New Edition, containing the complete unabridged notes in clear type on good paper. With copious index numerous illustrations and maps, and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

This is the only Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within the reach of the masses, while no commentary published is so highly commended, or so well adapted for the home, the teacher, or the preacher

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent D. D.

"I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it."—C. H. Spurgeon.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THANKSGIVING.

The ripe rosy apples are all gathered in;
They wait for the winter in barrel and bin;
And nuts for the children, a plentiful store,
Are spread out to dry on the broad attic floor;
The great golden pumpkins that grew such a size
Are ready to make into Thanksgiving pies;
And all the good times that the children hold dear
Have come round again with the feast of the year.

Now what shall we do in our bright happy home
To welcome this time of good times as it comes?
And what, do you say, is the very best way
To show we are thankful on Thanksgiving Day?
The best thing that hearts that are thankful can do
Is this: to make thankful some other too;
For lives that are grateful and sunny and glad,
To carry their sunshine to lives that are sad;
For children who have all they want and to spare,
Their good things with poor little children to share;
For this will bring blessing, and this is the way
To show we are thankful on Thanksgiving Day.

How Katie "Endeavored."

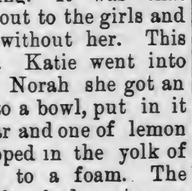
"Come on, Katie!" called the girls who were waiting at the gate. "What does make you so slow? It's awfully hot standing here in the sun."

Then Katie appeared at the door. "Go on, girls, please; I can't come just yet. I'll follow you."

"Why you'll miss the boat! We have just time to get there."

"Well, then, I shall," said Katie resolutely. "I am not coming now; I've something to do."

It was a very warm day. Father had just come in from the field; he looked utterly tired out as he sank into a chair and fanned himself with his hat. "Whew!" he said. "this day is a scorcher."



"You feel it more," said Katie's mother, anxiously, "because you ate almost nothing for dinner; I wish they knew how to fix something nourishing for you." Then she sighed. She was lying on the couch, and knew that she must lie there and not go into the kitchen on any account. All this Katie heard, while she was getting a clean handkerchief and making ready for a ten-cent trip on the little lake steamer with the girls to "cool off." Then she thought of something. It was that which made her dart out to the girls and tell them to go on without her. This they did grumbling. Katie went into the kitchen. From Norah she got an egg, helped herself to a bowl, put in it a teaspoonful of sugar and one of lemon juice; then she dropped in the yolk of the egg and beat it to a foam. The white of the egg she had put on a plate; she added to it a pinch of salt; then with the fine wire egg-beater made a wonderful foam of it, and poured it over the yolk. Now for a tumbler. The lovely, foamy liquid was lightly poured into it, and Katie ran to her father with the glass.

"Here is something very good and nourishing for you to drink," she said eagerly. And while he tasted, and tasted, and sipped, and smacked his lips, the mother, looking on well pleased, said: "Where did you learn to make it, dear? Way, I thought you were going up the lane with the girls."

"It was in our cooking lesson this very morning, mamma. I thought I wouldn't go to the shore this time."

"I promised to do just what Jesus would like to have me," said Katie to herself that evening as the girls stopped to tell her what a good time they had, "and I think He liked me to help rest papa."—The Pansy.

Study Law at Home.

It was the ambitious young man and woman on the farm, behind the counter, in the mill, in the lawyer's office, in the bank—the man and woman without the opportunity of a college education, that made this method of teaching law a necessity. We offer two courses—

1. A Course Preparing the Student to Practise Law;
2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the result perfect. Nicely printed catalogues explain both courses. They can be had for the asking. Address

Ursula's Aunt, "you couldn't have prepared better yourself. What a treasure you have in your niece! And how comes she to be living with you?"

The farmer was compelled to explain Ursula's presence at the farm, and as it was growing late the minister took his leave, after reading the 107th psalm and offering a short prayer for Selina's speedy restoration.

"I trust the Lord has a blessing for you in this affliction, Cousin Seliny," said Elder Banks, following his wife to the bed-side. "The Lord seems to hev a hand in this. Good-day."

"That sweet child 'ill be a comfort to ye," murmured, Cousin Sarah, bending over her pillow, "its too bad you sh'd be laid up Thanksgivin', of all the days in the year."

The unhappy Selina was glad they were all gone. She wanted to be left alone. Many thoughts were working within her. She was quite exhausted with the emotions of the day, and her limb pained her smartly. She would not taste the tray loaded with good things which Ursula brought in at dusk, indeed she could not. She was struggling with her ill feelings against Ursula. When Joshua came to bed that night she did not ask him if the dinner had passed off well. In the night she complained of feeling chilly, and by morning she was in a high fever. The doctor looked grave. "Too much excitement yesterday," he said, "those people should have been kept away."

His prediction came true, and it was six weeks before Selina Hall put her foot to the ground. She came down stairs looking like the ghost of her former self. No one would have recognized the wasted form and pinched features, as she sat in an arm-chair feebly sipping weak broth out of a bowl which Ursula had just brought in steaming hot.

"You're real good at nursin', Ursula," said Selina, slowly, "I wonder now where ye learned it!"

"You forget mamma, she was sick a long time."

"Do you miss her very much?"

"I can never forget her," said the girl, with a sob in her voice, "she was so good to me."

"Ursula," began Selina slowly, "I've bin thinkin'—I've bin rale onkind to you. Do you think you could get to care for me a little?" "Oh, Aunt, you never meant to—I—do—almost love—you. I will try—if you wish me to."

"I don't deserve it, Ursula, I don't! But if you will only try, I will be real good. I never had no child o' my own, and perhaps that was the reason I got sot against ye at the first. I'll make it up to you, Ursula, if you'll forgive me, an' try to love me ever and ever so little;" the tears were running down her cheek now.

Ursula put her arms around the shaken form. She whispered softly, "I've loved you ever since Thanksgiving, but I was too proud to say so."

"Cousin James was right when he said the Lord had a blessing for me in this affliction! I'm most glad I got that twist, child, painful as it was,—if it hadn't bin for't, I might hev gone on neglectin' you all my life. I'm thankful the Lord checked me up; the spirit I didn't hev to Thanksgivin's 'come to me now."

"Oh, Aunt Selina," said Ursula—"I always wanted to love you, and its not going to be hard, now!"

And Ursula went singing about her work with a strange new joy at her heart. She had won the victory, not by might, but by patience, and by a sweet humility, which are better than the weapons of the strongest knight.

THE END.

Lewisburg, W. Va.

ALL THE STRENGTH and virtue has sometimes "dried out," when you get pills in leaky wooden or pasteboard boxes. For that reason, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are sealed up in little glass vials, just the size and shape to carry about with you. Then, when you feel bilious or constipated, have a fit of indigestion after dinner, or feel a cold coming on, they're always ready for you.

They're the smallest, the pleasantest to take, and the most thoroughly natural remedy. With Sick or Bilious Headaches, Sour Stomach, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Dizziness, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach, and Bowels, they give you a lasting cure.

Headache; obstruction of nose; discharges falling into throat; eyes weak; ringing in ears; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility—these are some of the symptoms of Catarrh. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has cured thousands of the worst cases,—will cure you.

To Beautify the Complexion

—do not take the cosmetics, paints and powders which injure the skin, but take the easiest way to gain a beautiful color and a wholesome skin. Health is the greatest beautifier. The means to beauty, comfort, and health for women is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Dull eyes, sallow or wrinkled face, and those "feelings of weakness," have their rise in the derangements peculiar to women.

"Favorite Prescription" will build up, strengthen, and invigorate, every "run-down" or delicate woman by regulating and assisting all the natural functions.

To cure constipation, biliousness, indigestion, sick headache, take Dr. Pierce's Pellets. One a dose.

ORGANIC UNION.

One of the reasons given by our General Assembly for declining the invitation of the Northern Assembly to appoint a Committee of Conference to take into consideration the whole question of Organic Union of the two bodies was the belief that such a conference would "bring upon us needless agitation and hurtful disturbance." But the refusal to appoint the Committee of Conference did not avert the danger. The question of Organic Union is upon us, and already the Church is much divided, and considerably disturbed about it. The Synod of Kentucky has by a unanimous vote expressed its disapproval of the Assembly's action; the Synod of South Carolina had only a majority of two to declare its approbation; and the Synod of Georgia sends up an overture to the next Assembly, asking that such a committee of conference be appointed.

And not only are the Synod's discussing the matter, but the church papers are full of it also. Dr. Johnson, of Union Seminary has been writing for several papers a series of trenchant articles in opposition to Union, which have called forth ardent champions for the other side; until from the Mississippi to the Atlantic, and from Maryland to the Gulf the question is discussed with warmth and vigor. It is evident therefore that, so far from warding off the consideration of the question, the action of our Assembly has precipitated it upon us. But the agitation of the subject is not, in our judgment, wholly, nor even chiefly harmful. The discussion is instructive, and is necessary to enable the Church to arrive at a wise decision. The obstacles in the way are vigorously presented on the one hand; and, on the other the law of love is set forth, and the sin of yielding to prejudice and spite. An eloquent editorial in the Alabama Presbyterian closes with the following paragraph:

"The more excellent way which Paul pointed out is the way of love. It was not the way of retracting and explaining and apologizing, but of loving, so as to lose sight of petty or even of great differences. We need more of that divine charity which "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." To say that we may exercise it toward an uncongenial world and yet withhold it from those who are redeemed by the same precious blood and renewed by the same Holy Spirit, is to mistake the very essence of Christian love. It would not permit us to drag out into the light, and call attention to the blots and imperfections upon any part of the sacred Body of which Christ is the living Head. Sorrow and regret there may be for inconsistencies of Christian disciples, but love precludes any exultation in our own superiority, and any holding back of our garments for fear of pollution by contact. Our Lord and Master has given his approval not merely to bearers of "testimony" or to ecclesiastical hair-splitters, but he has declared in plain and simple language, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

But alas for the rarity of Christian charity under the Sun! He who preaches so sweetly of love and peace-making, in the same article, accuses Dr. Johnson of abounding in the most unchristian and uncharitable statements.

For ourselves, we regard the obstacles in the way of union as grave and serious, but, believing that the cordial reunion of the Church would be well pleasing to the Lord, we pray for and expect it.

To decline conference, as our Assembly did, suggests no desire to have the obstacles removed; and therefore, as we suppose, there has been such general dissatisfaction with its action.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

"Return, O Holy Dove, return." Some of our readers, who attended the last meeting of Synod, heard, as we did, a criticism of this sentiment, in the sermon of one of our able and prominent ministers. "Why," said he, the Holy Spirit abides with us. He never leaves us. How then can He return?"

Cowper's hymn, "O for a closer walk with God," has long been a precious favorite with the writer, and consequently to hear it condemned was painful, like the criticism of some dear friend.

Moreover, on reflection, the objection seems hypercritical. We do not understand the hymn to imply that the Holy Spirit ever forsakes the true Christian utterly, so that he falls from grace; it merely recognizes the fact that the child of God sometimes grows very cold and worldly, and expresses the yearning cry of such a backslider after holiness and peace with God. Very properly it teaches that revival must be brought about by the Spirit's influence upon the heart. It seems to us an echo of the prayer of David, "Restore unto me the joys of Thy salvation, and uphold me with Thy free Spirit;" certainly, it breathes the aspirations of many pious hearts before and during every revival of religion. And the whole hymn appropriately expresses the yearning of a penitent heart after holiness, and the joys of salvation.

"Return, O Holy Dove, return,
Sweet messenger of rest,
I hate the sins that made Thee mourn,
And drove Thee from my breast."

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from Thy throne,
And worship only Thee."

"So shall my walk be close with God,
Calm and serene my frame;
So purer light shall mark the road
That leads me to the Lamb."

Confessing Christ. Some years ago, a company of travellers sitting, one Sunday afternoon in a balcony of the Planter's hotel in St. Louis. About dusk, the news-boys came around, selling the evening papers, and distributing hand-bills of some entertainment at the Opera House. To one of the group this was evidently a welcome relief from the monotony of a dull Sunday, for he eagerly read the hand-bill, and then called out, "This is a good play. I've seen it in Denver. Let's make up a party and all go together." Then turning to one who sat next to him, he added: "You'll go, I suppose?" But the young man addressed replied with a little hesitation, "No. I don't go to such places on Sunday. I want to go to church to-night.' This answer made a deep impression; and a tough-looking fellow called out, "Good for you! I think I'll go to church myself." The name of Jesus was not mentioned in this conversation, and yet I believe, this is what Jesus meant when He said: "He that confesseth Me before men, him will I confess before my Father and the holy angels." To confess Christ before men; when we join the church is an easy matter. Every instinct of gratitude and honor prompts the saved sinner to confess the Saviour before men, and in the first glow of his new hopes and experiences, there is little temptation to deny him. But to confess Christ in society, to acknowledge Him always as our guide and pattern, requires the courage and the training of a veteran.

Ashamed of Jesus. That any one should be ashamed of Him is strange, and foolish, but it is very common. Paul thought it necessary to warn Timothy, "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of the Lord," and was careful to declare for himself, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." And many who hear the name of Christ have not the courage to speak out as did the young man mentioned above; but sit in silence and even blush, when their conscientious scruples subject them to the criticism or sneer of the worldly. Yet Jesus has said, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and of My Words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when He cometh in the glory of His Father with the holy angels."

"Ashamed of Jesus! Yes I may
When I've no guilt to wash away,
No tears to wipe, no good to crave
No fears to quell, no soul to save."

DAVIDSON NOTES.

Last Monday night, November 26th, Prof. Holmes delivered in the Y. M. C. A. Hall a lecture on Good Roads. The lecture was illustrated by handsome stereopticon views of the fine European and American roads, interspersed here and there with pictures of the wretched highways in North Carolina and in other States of the Union. Prof. Holmes paid a high tribute to the excellence of the Mecklenburg roads, and made an irresistible plea for roads such as these all over the State.

It was encouraging to be told that the old North State was one of the five in the United States, taking at present the most active interest in the subject of good roads. It is to be hoped that this interest will materialize in excellent roads which shall stir up other States to a generous emulation in this most needed of internal improvements. Prof. Holmes's lecture was not only instructive and stimulating, but highly enjoyable.

The usual Thanksgiving festivities brightened this festal season of rejoicing. Wednesday night the Glee Club assisted by the Kings' Daughters gave a very creditable musical entertainment which was repeated in Statesville, Thursday night to the delight of the inhabitants of the City of Elms. Dr. Shearer preached the Thanksgiving sermon. C.

PROTRACTED MEETING AT FLOYD C. H., VA.

Rev. C. M. Howard, has been preaching at this point for some time. The attendance has been good, the weather good, the attention excellent. Mr. Howard has preached some very fine sermons. His instructions have been sound and faithful. The spirit of the Church has much improved. The services have largely developed the power and faculty of prayer. I am persuaded we shall have for a long time more faithful praying here on account of this service. Family prayer, family religion, religious newspapers and valuable Christian reading in families have been much emphasized. Some fifteen or twenty persons have made profession of their faith in Christ. Most of these have been long in the very centre of our Sabbath-school influence.

The other churches of the community have attended the services and share the benefit. Mr. Howard's addresses to children in the schools and in the audiences have been well adapted and effective. His labor has been earnest and faithful.

Seventeen and a half years ago Mr. Howard preached here with great success. And then and now he has done good. Personally I am under great obligation. John K. Harris.

FROM FAYETTEVILLE.

Fayetteville is able, this year, to give an emphatic negative to the editorial question of this week. "Shall Thanksgiving (Day) be given over to sport?" All the churches of the town were open on Thursday, and large congregations attended the services. In the Presbyterian church a collection of about $70 was taken up for the orphanage.

We have been holding nightly prayer-meetings this week in anticipation of the visit of Rev. William Black. He expects to be with us for the week beginning the first Sabbath in December, and from the earnestness and prayerfulness of our people, we are looking for a great blessing from God upon our services. There have been seven additions to the church during this month. McK.

Rev. W. M. Eldridge, of Carthage, N. C., has accepted the appointment as evangelist of Fayetteville Presbytery, and will enter upon his labors in January, visiting first the churches, Bethel, Galatia and Shiloh. There will be a meeting of the Evangelistic Committee, December 27th, for the purpose of arranging a programme for his visit during January, February and March. Churches desiring his services will please notify the chairman of the committee.

LETTER FROM DR. J. HENRY SMITH.

Dear Bro. Rawlings:—On last Friday night we closed our protracted meeting, which commenced with devotional services on Monday night (the 12th inst.,) and on Tuesday night. On Wednesday night Dr. W. D. Morton came and has been with us—preaching, and conducting prayer and inquiry meetings for some ten days. He left on Friday night, the 23d inst. Bro. Morton had large and attentive congregations throughout. I have seldom, if ever, observed more rapt and closer attention than he received from the congregation that listened to his excellent and stirring discourses and talks, illustrated and enforced by many instances of awakening and conversion in his past ministry. We are all glad and thankful that he has been with us. The night he left, the choir and congregation sang, "God be with you till we meet again," and then the whole assembly young and old, came up and gave him their hand, with moistened eyes and grateful hearts invoking God's blessing upon him. On last Sabbath, which was our regular commuion, (and which I think, was the largest, I have ever seen in Greensboro, for nearly every body in the large church seemed to be a communicant—) the names of twelve were read out—as received at previous meetings of session, ten of them received by certificate, and two on examination. It was beautiful to see these ten—four of them heads of families—openly confessing Christ, and four also kneeling and receiving Christian baptism. Among them was a father and mother with their little infant boy, in the father's arms, who immediately after the mother's baptism, was baptized. "Lydia and her household," were called to mind. Several of these had been brought to satisfactory decision, during the recent protracted meeting. We hope that others will ere long come with them. Since the 22d of February, we have received, fifty-six (thirty ladies, twenty-six gentlemen.) Of this entire number thirty-four were by examination, fifteen of whom received baptism. It might be thought that so many adults baptized rather indicates some neglect of infant baptism, but this is by no means the case, for twenty-one infants have been baptized since March 1st—a much larger number than usual. Our congregations are larger than ever. Our Sabbath-school, our prayer-meetings, our senior and junior Christian Endeavor meetings are all increasing in number and interest. We wish, and are endeavoring, to bring up our people to "proportionate giving," and we hope and pray that we may reach it before long. A part of the church building debt, and the peculiar stringency of the times, still hamper us, but we hope soon, with God's blessing to get out of the woods. Our people are encouraged and hopeful.

J. Henry Smith,
Senior Pastor.

INK SPOTS.

There are some people's word we can no more doubt than the great visible facts of nature—when we have known St. Paul, have long communed with him in his writings, have learned his integrity, honesty, truthfulness, piety, sanity of mind and heart, how can we doubt what he tells us, when he says: "I certify you brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." There are some men contact with whom, gives us the same sort of support, sense of reality, in what they say, as the sunlight, and solid earth. Paul was one of them.

* * *

There are some of such wholesomeness of mind, such all-roundedness of thought, and feeling, a sort of natural gravitation toward sound views, that the mere fact that they hold an opinion, inclines you to it. That the late Dr. Charles Hodge held such a view in theology, or on a question of morals, would naturally incline me to it, from his known sanity of mind. That Dr. Bushnell held thus and so. I should just as naturally believe was a good reason for thinking it was absurd. That Beecher held an opinion that it was probably false or half-true.

* * *

St. Paul had no doubt of the piety of the Colossians from two marks which they exhibited. He gave thanks for them, since he heard of their faith in Christ Jesus, and love for the saints. A new-born soul instinctively turns to Christ, as child to mother, and as naturally puts out the hand to a fellow-believer.

* * *

Nothing is less noble than controversy for itself, the love of contest, or desire of victory, but nothing is more noble than conflict of mind with mind where the object sought is to find truth, where men talk not to entangle each other, not to embarrass and confuse, but to help each to clear views and sound principles, where the end sought is truth in its higher aspects, moral and religious. "The highest grace of manhood is the truth-loving spirit, it throws a strange and holy majesty upon life." So important is truth to the higher life of man, that our Lord could set no higher estimate upon it than to call himself the Truth—and the great blessing the Holy Spirit was to bring upon the apostles was that He should guide them into all truth.

* * *

Apart from the revealed truth, as regards truths pertaining to this life, every thinker contributes more or less. "Just as men make up man, and churches the Church, so truths make up Truth.

* * *

"Our Lord Christ, as Saviour, cannot be understood till sin is understood, "and sin is not really understood until the Holy Spirit convinces us of sin. Once convince a man of sin as the Spirit does, and the sinner at once sees henceforth it must be Christ or nothing. Once let the soul be enlightened as to its real condition and Christ becomes as much a necessity as does air for life.

REST.

The following lines, it is said, were found under the pillow of a soldier who was lying dead in a hospital near Port Royal S. C.:

I lay me down to sleep,
With little thought or care,
Whether my waking find
Me here or there.

A bowing, burdened head,
That only asks to rest;
Unquestioning, upon
A loving breast.

My good right hand forgets
Its cunning now;
To march the weary march
I know not how.

I am not eager, bold,
Nor strong—all that is past;
I am ready not to do
At last, at last.

My half day's work is done,
And this is all my part;
I give a patient God
My patient heart.

And grasp his banner still,
Though all its blue be sin.
These stripes, no less than stars,
Lead after him.

REPORT ON FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To the Synod of North Carolina:

In submitting its fifth annual report your permanent committee on Foreign Missions would humbly recognize "the good hand of our God" upon this important branch of the work of our Church.

This Synod has for years taken a conspicuous part in the Foreign Mission work and to-day your zeal and your liberality toward this cause is spoken of in all the churches. We thank God, therefore, that no backward step has been taken for, notwithstanding the trying times through which we have passed, the gifts of our churches have increased by more than a thousand dollars.

OUR WORKING FORCE.

The first matter of special interest to which your attention should be called, is its working force in the mission field. The Synod of North Carolina has seven representatives in the heathen lands, two males and five females, all of whom are at present in active service, and we record with gratitude the tidings of the continued health and safety of these beloved fellow-workers in Christ.

These missionaries are distributed as follows among our several Presbyteries: Mecklenburg heads the list with five out of the seven, Rev. John W. Moore, Miss Lizzie Moore, Miss Ella Houston, Mrs. C. K. Cummins (nee Miss Ona Patterson) and Miss E. V. Lee. It may be of interest to state that four out of the five representatives of the Presbytery are members of one church, Hopewell. Concord has one missionary, Rev. J. W. Davis, D. D. Fayetteville has one, Mrs. H. B. Price (nee Miss Robertson.) Two other young ladies from Mecklenburg are under appointment to the mission field and one for Fayetteville Presbytery is under the care of the Executive Committee. We regret to state that one of these devoted servants of the Master is held back from at once going to China, for lack of funds, although the expenses of her outfit have been provided for.

In addition to these laborers, your committee knows of at least four young men who are prepariing themselves for this work and will be ready in a year or two, to enter the field, Providence permitting.

It may not be out of place to add that twelve of our churches and missionary societies have been supporting in whole or in part thirteen missionaries—not to speak of a number which bear the expenses of Bible workers and active laborers:

The First church, Winston, supported Rev. H. B. Price; Henderson church, Rev. H. T. Graham; First church, Raleigh, Rev. Geo. W. Painter; First church, Concord, Mr. Geo. D. Adamson; Fayetteville church, Rev. R. B. Grinnan; Gentlemen's Missionary Society, of the First church, Charlotte, Rev. Jno. W. Davis, D. D.; Steele Creek, Miss Lizzie Moore; First church, Wilmington, Dr. Edgar Woods and Mrs. Edgar Woods; St. Andrews, Wilmington, Dr. Jas. B. Woods. All the missionary societies of Wilmington Presbytery, Mrs. H. B. Price and Mrs. F. A. Cowan.

In addition to what our churches are doing, it is gratifying to announce that Mr. C. E. Graham, of Asheville, has undertaken the entire support of our colored missionary on the Congo, Rev. W. H. Shepherd.

This is certainly a record for which we have cause to be exceedingly thankful, yet ought not our gratitude to be mixed with shame and regret when we look more carefully at the facts to be placed along side of these. God has preciously honored this Synod in calling these sons and daughters to this work, but are we not holding back many other gifted and devoted Christian workers whom He would delight to honor in the same noble service. This is surely, merely the beginning of a great work which lies open before the Christian people of our State. We are proud of Mecklenburg's five missionaries, but is not that after all a small representation with its membership of 8,190? Concord has 3,945 members, and Fayetteville 7,165, and yet each of these great Presbyteries has but a single missionary in the regions beyond!

Orange, Wilmington and Albemarle with an aggregate membership of more than 9,000 have no sons or daughters in this great harvest field.

In view of these humbling facts is it not time for this Synod to send forth a clear and loud call to all our churches, to their pastors and their officers and their entire membership, that there may be deep heart-searching and much prayer to God, that He may be pleased to call from our highly favored Synod not seven, but seven times seven laborers, and by the mighty influences of His Spirit "thrust them forth" to occupy these destitute places of the earth.

God forbid that it should be true any longer, that it takes more than 4,000 North Carolina Presbyterians to furnish one missionary of the cross.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

Passing now to the question of Christian liberality, we find, as has been already intimated, that our churches have given more generously to this cause than in any previous year of the Synod's history.

The whole amount contributed is $23,231, against $21,887 last year, a gain of $1,344.

In order to set forth clearly the true liberality of our churches the following table has been arranged, so that the gifts of each Presbytery may speak for themselves:

	No. of Churches.	No. of Members.	No. of Churches Contrbting.	No. of Chs. Not Contrib'ng.	Total Gifts	Average per Member.
Albemarle	28	1817	19	9	1675	92
Concord	50	4945	40	10	3793	70
Fayetteville	74	7169	59	15	4238	58
Mecklenburg	81	8190	55	26	7094	87
Orange	52	4549	38	14	3791	83
Wilmington	42	3416	22	20	2700	78
Total	327	30886	233	93	23231	77

Looking a little closer at these figures we discover four facts of interest. First that our Synod stands second among the Synods of the General Assembly, the average gift per member being 77, while that of the largest Synod—the Virginia—averages only .79 a member. 2d. Another fact is that one of our Presbyteries, Mecklenburg, gives more to Foreign Missions than seven of the eleven Synods of our Southern Church. 3d. The third fact is, that this, our largest Presbytery, with the great Home Missions also stands second in the Synod in its gifts per member, averaging 87, and that our smallest Presbytery itself so largely missionary territory—stands first—giving .92 per member.

There are thirty-three churches in the Synod that give as much as or more than $1 per member. These facts are not only gratifying in themselves, but they are suggestive because we find that these are the churches which support with greatest liberality the other great causes of Home Missions and Education.

List of these churches: $4.40 Charlotte 1st; $3.50 Durham; $3.40 Laurinburg and Wilmington; $3.00 Asheville First and Winston 1st; $2.75 Davidson College; $2.50 Henderson, Gulf, Chapel Hill, Turkey Cove; $2.25 Munroe, Graham; $2.00 Raleigh 1st, Concord 1st, Gastonia; $1.75 Maxton, Montpelier, Ida Mills, St. Andrew's (W); $1.50 Newberne, Keyser, Charlotte 2d $1.25 Dan River; $1.00 Greenville, Nut Bush, Centre (C), Statesville, Morganton, Bethesda (F) Pee Dee, Bethel, Lowell, Sugar Creek, Burgaw.

The following is a list of churches giving 75 cents or more: In Albemarle 1; Concord 5; Fayetteville 5; Mecklenburg 2—Giving 50 cents or more: In Albemarle 1; Fayetteville 9; Mecklenburg 7; Orange 1—Giving 25 cents or more: In Albemarle 5; Concord 11; Fayetteville 16; Mecklenburg 12; Orange 12; Wilmington 3—10 cents or more: Concord 7; Fayetteville 4; Mecklenburg 8; Orange 5; Wilmington 4—5 cents or more: In Albemarle 4; Concord 2; Fayetteville 5; Mecklenburg 5; Orange 2; Wilmington 5—Less than 5 cents: Concord 5; Fayetteville 3; Wilmington 3.

SYNODICAL SECRETARY.

In compliance with the action of the Synod at its last meeting, Rev. T. R. Sampson was re-elected Synodical secretary for a year, or for so much of that time as the subscriptions to his salary justified. After every effort had been made to raise subscription for the entire year's work, the Synod's agent found it possible to pledge the salary for only nine months, and therefore under the instruction of Synod, our secretary was employed for that length of time. Before the expiration of this term of months, Rev. Mr. Sampson received an urgent call to enter upon another important branch of Church work. After prayerful consideration of the facts in the case, he felt it to be his duty to accept the principalship of the Fredericksburg Collegiate Institute, and accordingly on the fifteenth of July severed his connection with the work of this. In losing the services of this efficient and untiring worker in the cause of missions, we feel that we cannot possibly overestimate the invaluable work he has done for the Master. He has endeared himself to all our churches and has left in hundreds of hearts by God's blessing—a new and abiding interest in the world's evangelization. He has gone forth bearing precious seed and though we may not be able to give the results of his labors in statistics—yet doubtless in the harvest time, he will return again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with them.

The limits of this report forbid our giving any satisfactory statement as to what he has accomplished, and we ask that Mr. Sampson's report to the Committee be published in the appendix to the minutes of Synod.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

One word must be said in regard to finances of your Committee in conducting this field service. It will be enough to say that our subscriptions are sufficient to pay the salary for eight months. By withdrawal of several subscriptions your committee lost something, but with the subscriptions to be collected during this month, we will be able to pay the balance of $75 still due our secretary for his last term of service.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S TREASURY.

The treasury of the Executive Committee is greatly embarrassed. The secretary writes "our receipts are several dollars less than the same date last year. Unless the churches will rally again we may have to take a backward step, which would be greatly to be deplored." Will not this Synod rally to meet this emergency?

We recommend the following resolutions:

Resolved 1st. That in view of our small number of missionaries a pastoral letter be addressed to our churches, appealing to our young people to heed this Macedonian cry for heathen lands, "Come over and help us."

2. That the treasurers of the Presbyteries and of the churches of this Synod be requested to forward at once to Nashville all money which may be on hand or available for this cause.

3. That this Synod pledge itself to do more than ever before to raise the $30,000 asked for by the General Assembly.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

Your committee beg leave to present the following tabulated statement based on the reports from Presbyteries for 1894 and the minutes of Synod for 1893, which shows a comparative statement of the work for 1893 and 1894.

PRESBYTERIES.	Schools.		Teachers.		Scholars.		No. Admitted.		Churches.		Membership.
	1894.	1893.	1894.	1893.	1894.	1893.	1894.	1893.	1894.	1893.	1894.	1893.
Albemarle	20	27	177	228	1395	1390	44	127	28	42	1817	3416
Concord	43	41	443	312	3998	2969	296	127	50	52	4945	4549
Fayetteville	57	58	346	544	3918	4829	100	296	74	81	7169	8190
Mecklenburg	58	41	462	540	3158	3526	296	100	74	81	7169	8190
Orange	41	58	462	540	3526	3526	127	296	52	81	4549	8190
Wilmington	27	41	312	333	2670	1818	44	127	42	52	3416	4549
	204	226	1800	2497	18665	20877	907	1073	320	391	29065	37394

From the above table it will be seen that there has been an increase during the past year of 136 teachers, 2,110 scholars, Again of 12 per cent.

Concord Presbytery has 7 more churches than Sabbath-schools; Fayetteville Presbytery 17; Mecklenburg Presbytery 23; Wilmington Presbytery 15; Albemarle Presbytery 8. Albemarle has 337 more church members than Sabbath-school scholars, Concord has 508, Fayetteville has 3,251, Mecklenburg has 2,821, Wilmington has 1,247. Making a total of 5,402 more church members than Sabbath-school scholars. The Presbyteries of Concord, Orange and Wilmington have held Presbyterial Sabbath School Conventions during the past year.

Fayetteville devoted one day of the Elders' and Deacons' Institute to Sabbath-school work. Mecklenburg has one Normal School, and devoted part of a day during the meeting of Presbytery to this work.

Your committee would call attention to and emphasise the recommendation adopted by the Synod of 1890, viz: "That Synod urge the Presbyteries to empower their Sabbath-school agents to appoint as many subagents, for their respective Presbyteries as they may deem necessary for the successful prosecution of this work; said subagents to labor under the direction of Presbyterial Agents."

Recommend 1st. That the Synod hereby earnestly urge parents and other adult members wherever they can in consistency with other claims, to take part in the Sabbath-school exercises either as teachers or scholars.

W. F. THOM,
Chairman.

THE COLORED EVANGELISTIC WORK IN OUR SYNOD.

RESOLUTIONS OF 1893-'94.

The undersigned would respectfully call the attention of our ministers and Elders to the two resolutions which we copy, the first from the minutes of the Synod of North Carolina 1893. After a recommendation, that of the $15,000 for this work requested by the Assembly, our Synod be urged to raise its proportionate part. It was resolved that:

"In December the month appointed for collections for this object, each pastor or church session be directed to lay this matter carefully before their charges."

Dear brethren was this injunction faithfully observed. In some cases assuredly some may have preached sermons upon this subject and the high and holy claims of these poor, helpless and ignorant millions upon us. Yet surely many were delinquent for nearly one-half of our congregations have reported nothing contributed to this work, and of the $3,000 requested by the Synod, less than one-half was realized. Yet compared with the year before there was some progress. Now for the future. Another December is at hand. Let us make an earnest effort and make some amends for past failures. Again there is a recommendation, and this to raise $3,000 for this work, and

Resolved, "That we urge all of our ministers to bring the spiritual interests of the colored people before their congregations in the month of December, and to give their earnest prayers, as they appeal to them for their benevolent aid." Minutes of 1894.

Now let each pastor and church session multiply by ten the number on their church rolls and they will have in cents the minimum which they should raise, Surely this can be done. Let it be said of no child of God, that he cannot give this, yea far more than ten cents to send the glad message of everlasting life to the benighted negroes of the South. Then too, by raising this full amount we can carry out another resolution of the Synod.

Place a colored evangelist in this Synod to press the work among his people in our own State.

Yours faithfully,
W. D. MORTON,
Synod's Agent of Colored Evangelization.

University Mission to Central Africa.

The University Mission to Central Africa has issued a report of work done through its agency in its principal stations in the Dark Continent. Since the beginning of the mission over twenty Cambridge men have joined the movement, including Bishops Mackenzie and Smythies. Five have died at their posts in Africa, and now the staff of Cambridge men is seven. Oxford has sent some thirty-six into the field, among them Bishops Tozer and Hornby. Of these thirteen are still working and ten have died in the field. Durham has sent two men, London three, Edinburgh one and Dublin one. This, of course, does not represent the total number of graduates at present laboring in Africa, for on the other hand the Church Missionary Society has over a score of university men in active service in Africa, besides many native clergy who have taken their degrees at Durham university.—Presbyterian.

AS A LITTLE CHILD.

"Except ye become as little children, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven."

"As a little child, as a little child!
Then how can I enter in?
I am scarred, and hardened, and soul-defiled,
With traces of sorrow and sin.
Can I turn backward the tide of years
And wake my dead youth at will?"
"Nay, but thou canst, with thy grief and thy fears, Creep into My arms and be still."

"I know that the lambs in the heavenly fold
Are sheltered and kept in Thy heart;
But I—I am old, and the gray from the gold
Has bidden all-brightness depart.
The gladness of youth, the faith and the truth,
Lie wither or shrouded in dust."
"Thou'rt emptied at length of thy treacherous strength:
Creep into My arms now—and trust."

PASTORAL LETTER.

To the Ministers and Churches in the Synod of North Carolina:

DEAR BRETHREN:—The Synod of North Carolina in session at Greensboro, N. C., October 26th, 1894, sends to you greeting, and desires to call your attention to the great work which was undertaken six years ago, of providing for the support and training of our destitute and helpless orphan children. God has so signally blessed this undertaking that we now own, free of debt, ground and buildings sufficient to accommodate about fifty children, and we have that number now gathered in the comfortable home provided for them. We have also been able to secure as superintendent a wise and humane minister of our church, who enjoys the tender love of the children, and the full confidence of the Board of Regents. Under his fatherly care, and that of his efficient assistants, these children are contented and happy, are learning to be useful, and are receiving an excellent English education. More than one third of those present have become consistent Christians, and church members, while a wholesome moral tone pervades the entire family of children.

But while so much good has been done for those who are permitted to secure an entrance, the Synod is grieved to learn that a large number of deserving children are kept away for lack of room. In tender love for these needy children we are constrained to call upon the people of God to furnish additional accommodations as soon as practicable. Our Board of Regents has procured plans for a commodious central building that shall contain a chapel, school-rooms, dining-room, cooking-room, store-rooms, office, and number of dormitories. Such a building will vacate rooms in other cottages, now used for these purposes, and thereby more than double our present accommodations. The cost of such a building will probably be about eight or ten thousand dollars. The Synod cordially expresses its judgment that a building is urgently needed, and at once, and commends the proposal to the favor, the prayers and the liberality of our people. We also exhort our brethren in all our churches to take immediate steps to raise, or pledge, a sum sufficient to erect the building, and to report the sum pledged to the President of the Board of Regents. With a membership of over thirty thousand in the State, it ought not to be difficult to raise the sum necessary to erect this building. Are there not at least ten thousand of this number that can and will give an average of one dollar to provide shelter and home for these fatherless children? Our God is pleased to call Himself the Father of the fatherless, and the Helper of the fatherless, and we, His favored children should not forget that He exercises His fatherly care, not miraculously, as in other days, but through the agency of His other children whom He has blessed with this world's goods. Let us attest our claim to be His children by manifesting that pure and undefiled religion that consists in visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction. Praying that you will give earnest heed to this our exhortation, we invoke upon you the rich blessing of our Father in heaven.

W. B. ARROWOOD,
Moderator.

The Home and the Ministry.

BY ETHELBERT D. WARFIELD, LL. D.,

The articles in recent numbers of your paper, on "The Colleges and the Ministry," lead me to direct your readers' thoughts to another phase of the question therein discussed. Why do so few young men enter college with the intention of studying for the ministry?

It is a question for no man to answer, but for the Church to lay to heart. Surely the pious men and women have not lost the fervent desire to see their sons called to the grandest and the most important work ever committed to man to do; surely the Church's zeal is not abated, and the power of the pulpit decreased. And yet there are many indications of a diminution of desire, at least of expressed desire, that the sons of the Church should become its devoted ministers. Particularly is this so among those best off in this world's goods, and best able to prepare the child from the outset for the high work to which he is consecrated. And early preparation counts for much. The loss of familiarity in the very earliest years with the instruments of culture can never be wholly repaired. The servant of the Lord needs not less than the servant of the prince of this world to be trained in all the useful branches of knowledge; not merely knowledge of books, but knowledge of men; not merely the learning of the schools, but the learning which comes from comradeship with good books and good men alike. The devoted piety of many humble families more than makes up for the loss of much else, for the culture which springs from the heart is richer and purer and truer than the culture of the intellect, but why can we not have both?

How many of our fathers and mothers, as they bend over the cradles of their infant sons, breathe a prayer that God will take them for his special and peculiar service; how many seek to shape the training of their children so as to make the way as plain, as easy, and as attractive to the ministry as the bar, and set before their little ones the infinite riches of him who is a messenger of the great King? Do our parents fear that they may be intruding into the Lord's business? Let us never think of the ministry as a mere profession, but though we wait for the divine call, may we not seek it diligently with prayer, and be glad if we are the chosen instruments by which the Lord makes plain his call to his and our children?

Let both our colleges and our homes do more to point out the supreme dignity, usefulness and excellence of the Gospel ministry; let not either seek to lay the responsibility on the other, but let the parent remember that the seed should be sown early and the young shoot tended carefully, if the mature tree is to stand at least in the Lord's house as a chosen pillar.—Presbyterian.

A Belief in Heredity.

Now, the longer I live the more I believe in blood—good blood, bad blood, proud blood, humble blood, honest blood, thieving blood, heroic blood, cowardly blood. The tendency may skip a generation or two, but it is sure to come out, as in a little child you sometimes see a similarity to a great-grandfather whose picture hangs on the wall. That the physical and mental and moral qualities are inheritable is patent to any one who keeps his eyes open. The similarity is so striking sometimes as to be amusing. Great families, regal or literary, are apt to have the characteristics all down through the generations, and what is more perceptible in such families may be seen on a smaller scale in all families. A thousand years have no power to obliterate the difference. The large lip of the House of Austria is seen in all the descendants, and is called the Hapsburg lip. The House of Stuart always means in all generations cruelty and bigotry and sensuality. Witness Queen of Scots. Witness Charles I and Charles II. Witness James I and James II, and all the others of that imperial line.

Scotch blood means persistence. Dutch blood means cleanliness and good breeding. English blood means reverence for the ancient. Welsh blood means religiosity. Danish blood means fondness for the sea. Indian blood means roaming disposition. Celtic blood mean fervidity. Roman blood means conquest.

The Jewish faculty for accumulation you may trace clear back to Abraham, of whom the Bible says, "He was rich in silver and gold and cattle," and to Isaac and Jacob, who had the same family characteristic.

BATTLING A BAD HEREDITY.

I think the genealogical table was put in the first chapter of the New Testament not only to show our Lord's pedigree, but to show that a man may rise up in an ancestral line and beat back successfully all the influences of bad heredity. See in that genealogical table that good King Asa came of vile King Abia. See in that genealogical table that Joseph and Mary and the most illustrious Being that ever touched our world, or ever will touch it, had in their ancestral line scandalous Rehoboam, and Tamar, and Bathsheba. If this world is ever to be Edenized—and it will be—all the infected families of the earth are to be regenerated, and there will be some arise in each family line, and open a new genealogical table. There will be some Joseph in the line to reverse the evil influence of Rehoboam, and there will be some Mary in the line to reverse the evil influence of Bathsheba. Perhaps the star of hope may point down to your manger. Perhaps you are to be the hero or the heroine that is to put down the brakes and stop that long train of genealogical tendencies and switch it off on another track from that on which it has been running for a century. You do that and I promise you as fine a palace as the architects of heaven can build, the archway inscribed with the words, "More than conqueror."

But whatever your heredity let me write to you this Chrismas: You may be sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. Estranged children from the homestead, come back through the open gate of adoption. There is royal blood in our veins. There are crowns in our escutcheon. Our Father is King. Our Brother is King. We may be kings and queens unto God forever. Come and sit down on the ivory bench of the palace. Come and wash in the fountains that fall into the basins of crystal and alabaster. Come and look out of the upholstered window upon garden of azalea and amaranth. Hear the full burst of the orchestra while you banquet with potentates and victors.

Spread a Christmas feast. Make merry this joyful Yule-tide. Let pleasant spirits abound, and happiness enter into every phase of the Christmas Day. Make it the happiest of all the days in the year for the children. But let God be an ever-present guest at your table. Then will your beyond be assured, while your children, looking backward, will bless your name.—Dr. Talmage, in The Ladies' Home Journal.

"Be Not Conformed to This World, But Be Ye Transformed."

Romans xii: 2.

To be conformed is to be so assimilated as to lose one's spiritual separation. Dr. Edward Judson says:

There is a kind of fish which resembles sea-grass. It hides itself in the midst of marine vegetation. Below is the head, looking like the bulb of the plant, and above is the body and the tail, looking like the blade of sea-grass. The ocean currents sway the fish and the grass alike, and so the little fish escapes being devoured by its enemies. It swims along, and one can hardly perceive where fish leaves off and grass begins, so perfect is the disguise. Now there are a great many Christians whose lives are so blended with the world that they cannot easily be distinguished. They are swayed by worldly maxims and habits; they share with the world in its sinful pleasures. The difference between such Christians and worldlings is not apparent. If this is the kind of Christian life you are living, you need not be afraid of persecution; the world will not think it worth while to molest such a Christian as that. You will not know what it is to drink of the cup that Christ drank of, and to be baptized with the baptism that He was baptized with. But let a man come out into the front, let him engage in some aggressive Christian work, and he will meet the same opposition which was experienced by the One who said: "I came not to send peace, but a sword."—The Watchword.

Why He Doesn't Go to Church.

A New York Press reporter represents W. D. Howells as saying in a recent interview: "I do not go to church because the sermons I am likely to hear make me antagonistic. I feel that I want to get right up in my seat and refute, then and there, many of the dogmas and arguments of the so-called Christian life." Very likely, and Mr. Howells is by no means alone in this experience. The faithful preaching of the Gospel often rouses antagonism when it does not lead to submission, and many a man, when his sin or prejudice or ignorance or conceit has been touched, has done just what Mr. Howells feels that he wants to do. The Pharisees could not endure John the Baptist's call to repentance, and Herod became so antagonistic that he shut him up in prison. The Jews in the synagogue at Nazareth were made so antagonistic by Jesus' sermons there that they talked right out and attempted to kill him, Paul's at Antioch in Pisidia so affected his hearers that they interrupted him, "contradicting and blaspheming." Stephen had a like difficulty with the Sanhedrim. He explained it by telling them that they always resisted the Holy Ghost, whereupon they undertook to "refute" him by stoning him. Now, it may be that John, Jesus, Paul, and Stephen knew as much about the Christian life as did the Jews; and it is certainly conceivable that Gospel preachers of to-day understand its principles quite as well as does Mr. Howells.—The Northern Christian Advocate.

The Child Character.

The first character of right childhood is that it is modest. A well-bred child does not think it can teach its parents, or that it knows everything. It may think that its father and mother know everything—perhaps that all grown-up people know everything; very certainly it is sure that it does not. And it is always asking questions, and wanting to know more.

A second character of right childhood is to be faithful. Perceiving that its father knows best what is good for it, a noble child trusts him wholly, gives him its hand, and will walk blindfolded with him if he bids it.

A third character of right childhood is to be loving and generous. Give a little love to a child and you get a great deal back. It loves everything near it when it is a right kind of a child; would always give the best it had away if you need it; does not lay plans for getting everything in the house for itself, and delights in helping people—you cannot please it so much as by giving it a chance of being useful, in ever so little a way. And because of all these characters it is cheerful.

Putting its trust in its father, it is careful for nothing, being full of love to every creature, it is happy always, whether in its play or its duty.

An Important Admission.

In a sermon preached in Baltimore, Cardinal Gibbons is reported to have said:

"It cannot be denied that lamentable abuses had crept into the Church in the sixteenth century. The age was sadly in need of moral reformation. Great abuses had crept into high places and low. Bishops and priests were relaxed in morality and discipline was disregarded. Ignorance prevailed among the clergy and the people waxed cold in faith, for as the priest is, so are the people. * * * The leaders of the reformation sought to abolish the Papacy, which had existed for sixteen centuries. They attempted to abolish some of the organic laws of the ancient Church; instead of laboring to lop off some of the withered branches they set to work to cut down at the roots the old tree that had sheltered their fathers for centuries and had nourished them with its spiritual fruit.

The Cardinal does not give us the whole truth. The facts are that the Reformation began, and for some time continued on the lines suggested by the Cardinal. Its object was "to lop off some of the withered branches" of "the old tree." The name that the movement took indicated as much—Reformation. But the Papacy would none of it. There was no Cardinal Gibbons for those days to recognize that "great abuses had crept into high places, etc." What the Church demanded was submission. The sword was evoked, and it was not until the leaders realized that reformation in the body was hopeless—it was not until then, that they severed the ties that had bound them to the Church of their fathers.—The Episcopal Recorder.

Imagine for a moment the condition of our world to-day if the Sabbath were entirely driven out and forgotten, and men plodded every day of their lives, without a day for rest, for worship, for their souls, for God. Imagine it, dream over it if you will. The thought of it, in our minds, converts this entire world into a workshop, a bacchanalian revel, a prison, an insane asylum, a hell. Yet this is what some are trying to bring about.

Imagine, in addition, the condition of our world if the Bible should be blotted out of existence. Think of the unenlightened darkness, the uncurbed immorality, the unrestrained cruelty and viciousness, that would curse the race. If these be held somewhat in check, and if good influences be somewhat active, remember that this is so because of the light and power that stream forth from the word of God.

Profession of faith in and love for our Lord are not to be discouraged. On proper occasions and in a proper manner it is proper to tell what great things the Lord hath done for us. But he who stands in the holy of holies in the conscious presence of the Lord of Hosts, under the subduing baptism of the Holy Ghost, will be too deeply impressed with his own unworthiness, and the glory of the cross ever to speak of it lightly or carelessly. Some experiences are too sublimely awful for utterance.

The following incident occurred when Mr. Gladstone was Chancellor of the Exchequer: "The vicar had recently been to see a crossing-sweeper in his parish who was ill. Asking him if any one had been to see him, the sweeper replied: 'Yes, Mr. Gladstone.' 'Which Mr. Gladstone?' asked the vicar. 'Mr. Gladstone,' repeated the poor invalid. But how came he to see you?' inquired the vicar. "Well,' answered the crossing-sweeper, 'he always had a nice word for me when he passed my crossing, and when I was not there he missed me. He asked my mate, who has taken my place, where I was, and when he heard I was ill, he asked for my address, and when he was told he put it down on paper. So he called to see me.' 'And what did he do?' asked the vicar. 'Why, he read some Bible to me and prayed,' was the reply." We all feel that this is as high an honor as some of his great acts of statesmanship.

NORTH CAROLINA.

THE COLLECTION FOR DECEMBER IS FOR WORK AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Wilmington :—Sunday was the ninth anniversary of Dr. Hoge's pastorate of the First church, and in his sermon he gave the following interesting information: In the nine years the membership of the First church has increased from 216 to 529, and during the past year there were 72 additions; 64 upon profession of faith, and eight by certificate. Rev. Faddoul Moghabghab of Zahleh, Mt. Lebanon, Syria, preached at night, and gave an account of the spread of the gospel in his country.

The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Societies of Wilmington Presbytery :—These societies held a mid-season conference in the Lecture room of the First Presbyterian church Monday and Tuesday afternoons of last week. There was a good attendance of the ladies of the city, but only seven societies were represented, notwithstanding due notice sent to all beforehand. The special feature of the meeting was the visit of Mrs. Randolph, who gave interesting accounts of her work for twenty-three years as missionary in China and Japan. The schools for girls at Hangchow and Nagoya were brought to permanent success by her faithful labors. A reception was given Mrs. Randolph in the Memorial Hall of the First church, Tuesday evening. On Sabbath afternoon Mrs. Randolph addressed the Children's Society of Earnest Workers of St. Andrew's church.

Charlotte :—The congregation of the First church, a large and attentive audience, listened to a most powerful, practical and appropriate sermon last Sunday morning in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, where the congregation is now worshiping. Dr. Jno. A. Preston, the pastor, took as his subject, "The Duty of Work," John ix: 4. He urged the duty of active work upon every church member. After the sermon, a congregational meeting was held, and a society for church work was organized. The society consists of two branches, a Senior and a Junior. The junior branch includes the Young People's Society already in existence. A large number pledged themselves for active church work.

At a meeting of the session of this church before service, one addition on profession was received. Notice was given that there would be no service in the First Presbyterian church next Sunday, as the Y. M. C. A. Hall will be occupied by two distinguished Baptist clergymen in attendance on the Baptist convention.

At the Second church in the morning, the regular monthly baptismal service was held, and two infants received the rite of baptism. The pastor, Dr. J. H. Boyd, delivered a sermon on "Christ before Pilate," that was pronounced by some the finest effort he has ever made. At night it was your correspondent's pleasure to hear him preach on the subject, "Dead Women." He took as his text, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth," 1st Tim. v. 6. His discourse was at once polished, and practical. He made the text include all those of either sex who have no higher aim in life than the gratification of their success and indulgence in pleasure.

The pulpit of the Graham Street church was filled in the morning by Rev. Jonas Barclay, who will act as stated supply for this church until some time in January.

A congregational meeting was held, and with reluctance, the congregation united with their pastor, Rev. F. D. Hunt, in his request to Presbytery to dissolve their relationship.

The communion service was then administered by the retiring pastor.

Rev. F. D. Hunt will leave for his new charge, Sanford, Fla., on the 18th inst. There is the most profound and sincere regret expressed at his departure. He seems very greatly to have endeared himself to the hearts of his people. J. H. R.

A New Church in Richmond County :—A new church, called Aberdeen, was organized in the western bounds of Laurel Hill congregation in Richmond county on the 26th of November, by a commission appointed by Fayetteville Presbytery, consisting of Revs. A.N. Ferguson, W. B. Arrowood, and Ruling Elders H. McN. Lytch and Hector McLean. This new organization consists of twenty members. The officers thereof are as follows: Elders—N. A. Currie, Jno. A. McNeill, A. H. McDonald. Deacon—D. C. McNeill. The clerk of session, Jno. A. McNeill. P. O, Laurel Hill.

Called Meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery :—Constitutional requirements having been complied with, I hereby call a meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery to be held in the Second church, Charlotte, Friday December 7th, 1894, at 11 o'clock a. m., to consider and act concerning the dissolution of the pastoral relations now exisiting between Rev. Frank D. Hunt and Graham Street church, and if the way be clear, dismiss him to the Presbytery of St. John's, Synod of Florida.

E. NYE HUTCHISON, M. D.,
Moderator.

VIRGINIA.

Charlottesville :—Dr. H. S. Hedges, Mr. J.S. McCue, and Mr. C. P. Hawes have been elected deacons.

Rev. B. M. Wilkinson :—It is with sorrow we learn that Rev. B. M. Wilkinson died Nov. 19th, at Hampden Sidney. This worthy colored brother labored for some years in Lynchburg, with great diligence and acceptability, and of late has been doing a blessed work among his own people around Hampden-Sidney. His funeral was conducted by Dr. McIlwaine from the College church.

Greenwich :—Rev. W. H. Robertson has been assisting Rev. A. B. Carrington in a meeting at this place. On Sunday five persons were received into the church and eight others have made profession of faith.—Central Presbyterian.

Harpin Creek :—Rev. G. W. Belk and Rev. G. G. Sydner have held a meeting at this place, resulting in nine additions to the church. The church was greatly revived.—Ib.

Abingdon :—Rev. T. A. Wharton, formerly of Steele Creek church, N. C., has been installed pastor of this church, and the manse has been enlarged and improved for his use. On Sunday, the 18th, Ashby, youngest child of Mr. Wharton, died in Roanoke.

Items from the Central Presbyterian :

Spring Gaden :—There have been thirteen additions in the past three months. There are nearly forty students enrolled in the Spring Garden High School. Prof. Arbuckle, of West Virginia, is principal, and has two assistants. This school was established by a joint stock company. Rev. G. W. Belk is president of the board of trustees.

Low Moor:—The Rev. L. W. Irwin was installed pastor, November 18th, 1894. Rev. E. W. McCorkle presided and preached the sermon. Rev. P. C. Clarke gave the charge to pastor and people. Mr. Irwin will continue to preach at Iron Gate and other points in connection with Low Moor, where he has done excellent service.

Waynesboro :—A largely attended and very successful meeting is in progress at the Presbyterian church. Rev. Mr. Howard, of Millboro, assisted the pastor, Rev. Dr. Cocke, last week. Mr. G. W. Argobright, formerly connected with Evangelist Fife, has been conducting the singing.

Blacksburg and Roanoke Valley :—Rev. James M. Holladay was installed pastor of Blacksburg and Roanoke Valley churches, on Sunday, 18th inst., the former at 11 a, m., and the latter at 3 p. m., by the Rev. Dr. Hooper, on the part of the committee appointed by Montgomery Presbytery.

TENNESSEE.

Memphis :—Rev. H. A. Hymes, pastor of the Idlewild Presbyterian church has accepted a call to the church at Webster, Mo., (suburb of St. Louis), and the people uniting with him (though with regret) in requesting a dissolution of the pastoral relation, the Presbytery of Memphis dissolved that relation to take effect December 1st, and granted him a letter of dismissal to the Presbytery of St. Louis (Northern Church). Mr. Hymes leaves for his new field of labor the first week in December. The Presbyterian churches of the city united in a Thanksgiving service at the First Presbyterian church. Rev. W. McF. Alexander had previously been appointed by the Presbyterian Pastors' Association to preach the sermon. The service was largely attended and the offerings were distributed among the "Children's Home," the "Leathe Orphan Asylum," and "The Refuge" (for fallen women.)

WOMAN IN THE PULPIT.

Our General Assembly has on more than one occasion explicitly condemned the practice of women speaking in mixed religious gatherings as contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures. This ought to be enough to prevent the practice in Southern Presbyterian churches, as we should either submit to the powers that be, or place ourselves under the authority of those whose views are in conformity with our own. It seems to the writer that the teaching of the New Testament is very clear in condemning the practice, and efforts of modern advocates of female evangelism to show that the restriction was intended only for the Church of Corinth and for a short time, are met by the insuperable difficulty, that Paul in writing to Timothy based the restriction on a fact that is as true at one time and place as at another. But Ellen Battelle Dietrich in the Church Union, disposes of the matter somewhat after the order of the German schools. This woman, who wields the pen of a ready writer, does not give us any intimation of her title, and not being so well known as some of the other higher critics, the "Modern Jehu" for instance, she will not be displeased at being spoken of simply as Dietrich.

She disposes of Rev. Geo. Hays' book in advocacy of the female preachers by showing, as others might have done, that he had not gotten 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35. and 1 Tim. 2:11-14, out of his way. She seems to admit that these passages clearly forbid women to speak in the church. But this admission does not give her trouble. She cares nothing for what Paul teaches. She undertakes to show:

1st. That we are not obliged to be guided by what Paul says. He was not divine. He was simply a man like any other Christian of his day. "The Saviour did not forbid women to speak in public, and if Paul's teachings conflict with His, we must reject Paul." But does Drietrich not see that it is absurd to say that a prohibition from the apostle conflicts with the teaching of Christ, when Christ is not reported to have said anything on the subject, one way or the other. And how are we to know what Christ said, if the apostles were not infallible in that which they were snspired to write? Did not Christ promise that they should be guided into all truth? and is He not respected by them?

2d. Paul is to be rnled out of court because his testimony is not self-consistent. He contradicts himself. He forbids women to speak in the Church in one place; in another he says, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." One Paul pompously asserts, "I suffer not a woman to teach, etc.," the other repeatedly eulogizes Priscilla as his helper in Christ. One Paul declares that woman must remain in silence with all subjection: the other Paul selects Phœbe to be sent as a delegate to the Church in Rome, armed with his request that they obey her instructions. We are not given the chapter and verse to prove that Phœbe's instructions were to be obeyed, or that she was a delegate. Surely the canse that is driven to finding contradictions in Paul's Epistles is in desperate straits. A helper in Christ need not speak in public, as many a pastor knows. A sister who is a servant (deaconess, if Dietritch chooses) of a church, worthy of being received and assisted in her business, is not necessarily a delegate or a preacher.

3d. Dietrich decides to annihilate Paul altogether. Paul's Epistles, she informs us are palpable forgeries, as is shown by the contradictions referred to. Tertullian, the woman-hater, in the third century, palmed off on the credulous Church his opinions as those of the apostle, and deprived women of the right which they had exercised since the days of Phœbe and Priscilla of serving the Church as preachers, ministers, and Presbyters.

Two facts well established in Church history it might be well for Dietrich to notice. First, the Church did not accept everything that Tertullian taught. He was a Montanist, and the greater part of the Church firmly opposed that part of his teaching. This shows that the Chrisrians of his time were not so gullible as to accept whatever he might give them. Second, Tertullian was in the main an orthodox and conservative writer, and his vigorous protest against female preachers was an evidence of their irregularity, especially as his own sect, the Montanists, had sanctioned them to some extent.

4th. But even more surprising than her rejection of so much of the New Testament, though not so serious in its consequences, is her effort to sustain her position by accepting Prof. Robertson Smith's theory that a long established matriarchate preceded the patriarchate when it was man that was inferior to woman. She rejects the testimony of Peter that in the old time women were in subjection to their husbands, even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, and intimates that Abraham was commanded to obey Sarah, not only in regard to Hagar but in all things.

5th. As we might expect, she disposes of Moses, except when she can use him, as she does of Paul and Peter, rejecting as a myth the story of Eve, which she tells us was not accepted as veritable history, till the time of Tertullian.

Now if to sustain a practice, growing in popularity, it is necessary to reject three of the most important authors of the Scriptures, is it not time for us either to protest against it more vigorously or to give up the Bible? And if the advocates of an Organic Union of all denominations, (prayed for by Miss Willard who desires to drive from the English language with a scourge of small cords the two expressions, "female," and "illegitimate child,") persist in giving us such damnable literature to read, ought we not to shut our ears to all that they have to say, lest they give us poison under the label of good food, or lest the emissaries of Satan come to us as angels of light?

Is it not true that the advocates of female evangelism and similar work for women have gone to the Bible with their minds already made up that it ought to forbid women to preach, and with a determination to explain away by any sort of ingenuity that they can use, any such prohibition it may contain? and is not this the veriest rationalism? Woman is as pious, and as intellectual, and as eloquent as man, then why not let her preach? It is true that she is as pious, as intellectual, and as eloquent as man, but we need no better reason for withholding from her the authority to preach than that the infinitely wise Head of the Church has said through His inspired apostle that she must not do it. Dietrich with her intense interest in showing that women may preach, has sense enough to see that the Bible forbids it, and honesty enough to admit what she sees, and so, rather than give up her darling theory she rejects so much of the Bible as is not in harmony with her views. What a church we shall have when each member may take his scissors to his Bible, and clip out and reject those parts that he does not like to be governed by. This seems to be the logical result of the teachings of many of these church-unionists, and to such a church we might apply in a new, but appropriate sense both the expressions, "E pluribus unum," and "Ne plus ultra."

NOTES FROM BELLE HAVEN.

DEAR BROTHER:—When I left North Carolina, a very dear friend and brother in Christ intimated to me that it would be very pleasant to hear from me occasionally through your columns, and feeling sure that there are others who would enjoy a few lines from the Eastern Shore, I make free to beg a little of your space.

This is perhaps one of the most interesting sections in all our interesting Southland, and my old friends in Iredell county, and regions adjoining will agree with me when I tell them that there is perhaps not a rock the size of a black walnut on all the Eastern Shore. Potatoes are the staple crop, and everywhere you turn you see laborers gathering potatoes and putting them in barrels for shipping, and meet almost every moment carts carrying these barrels to the various shipping points.

Imagine all ye lovers of the delicious strawberry, vast trains, of fifty and more cars, all loaded with the pretty fruit! And ye who are fond of the juicy oyster, think of him on your table three times a day, cooked in every conceivable way, from the nicest fry, to the state when he is not cooked at all, and all at a cost of about 12 cents a quart, already shucked, solid oysters, and you have The Eastern Shore.

And think, all ye who are jolting from rock to rock and swaying on hillsides and shaking a buggy to pieces in a few short months, of the luxury of spinning along on a level, almost without a jar, at the rate of ten good miles an hour!

But I must tell you about these two churches to which we trust the Lord has called me. Belle Haven church situated in the town of Belle Haven, is a little organization of now eighty-two members, founded by the labors, and fostered by the care of our good Brother Stimpson, of whom every one here speaks in terms of the most tender love. This church has lately taken on new growth and now in connection with Powelton has started out as an independent pastorate.

Powelton church situated in the little fishing town of Wachapreague over on the Atlantic coast is a church of about forty members, but like Belle Haven, there is room for good substantial growth. These two churches form the pastorate to which I have just lately been called.

I cannot however, close this letter without telling you of the good old fashioned "House Warming" that was given us by the good people of Belle Haven on yesterday evening.

I returned Monday the 19th inst., from Accomac C. H., where I had gone to preach for Bro. Clark and on my return I found my room full of people and the "other half" and better half" very much embarrassed; and on going to kitchen and pantry I soon found the cause. I will not try to itemize, for it would be useless. Suffice it to say that two sacks of flour headed the list, and it went on down through every conceivable article for the table in the same proportion and wound up with a small but very acceptable purse. But the warm hand shake, the tearful eye and the fervent, "Thank God we have a preacher all our own," so touched our hearts we could not even murmur our thanks. Brethren pray for us and pray for this people The Eastern Shore is a growing section in Presbyterianism and you are going to hear from it again some day.

Yours in Christ,

R. E. C. LAWSON.

INSTALLATION OF DR. PAYNE AT WASHINGTON.

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings of this week, November 21st, and 22nd, services of a very interesting, and instructive nature were held in the Presbyterian church of this place. When according to appointment of Albemarle Presbytery, Rev. C. M. Payne, D. D., was formally installed pastor of that church; by a committee appointed by Presbytery for the purpose On Wednesday evening the usual installation sermon was preached, by Rev. F. H. Johnston, D. D., it was a clear-cut, scholarly discourse from Canticles 1:3, "Thy name is as ointment poured forth." On Thursday evening the installation proper took place, Dr. Johnston presiding and conducting the services. The charge to the pastor was delivered by Rev. J. N. H. Summerell, in his own impressive style, with a dignity and gravity becoming the occasion. The charge was forceful and solemn, with a clear insight into the duties and responsibilities, the high privileges and possibilities, the encouragements and discouragements of the pastoral office. Rev. R. W. Hines delivered the charge to the people, and it was admirably done. He failed not to declare the whole counsel of God in the matter. His charge was full of instruction, and of gentle and loving, but firm and candid advice. The committee have faithfully performed their duty, and they have duly impressed both pastor and people with a deep sense of the great responsibility and solemn obligation, of their reciprocal relations and personal duties. At the close of the service, the whole of the very large congregation, filed up one aisle, and down the other, taking the newly installed pastor by the hand, with a grasp of warm and cordial welcome. The work looks very encouraging, and there is bright prospect that this church under the newly established pastorate may do valiantly in the service of the Master, and accomplish a noble work in His Name. Dr. Payne came to us, little more than two months since, in response to a unanimous call from this church. He left a large and thriving work in Concord, N. C., where he labored with eminent success for ten years, but the Lord has need of him in this part of His vineyard, and sent him to us. He was warmly and heartily received by his new flock and has already, we believe, without a single exception won the hearts of his people. Since his coming our congregations have grown steadily, and at our last communion, seven were added to the church roll. May the newly established pastorate, result in great good to this entire community, and redound to the glory of God. PRESBYTER.

Washington, N. C., Nov. 24th, 1894.

Church at Parmele, Martin County, North Carolina.

We need a church, and need it badly. My first appeal, and it is urgent. Parmele, Martin couniy, N. C., where the Scotland Neck, and Kinston Railroad crosses the Albemarle and Raleigh Railroad, and at the junction of the Washington Branch, is where we need it.

Read this article carefully and see our needs. Parmele is a new place with a promising outlook, seventeen families are now located here and new buildings going up every day, with a very large, and flourishing planing and saw mill, which gives employment to a number of young men, as noble and moral a set as can be found any where, yet there is not a church of any denomination within two miles of the place. Think of it!

These young men have subscribed liberally and have done what they could, yet we have not enough money to commence work.

We are now holding services in the reception room of the depot, as we have no stove for a hall we used during the warm weather. We are the first that brought the gospel to this place, and up to last spring one year ago there never was a Presbyterian sermon heard in this section. Remember this is in North Carolina!

The people are kindly to our Church, and the outlook for Presbyterianism very promising.

Brethren come to my help. Send what you can from a postage stamp up. Any amount will be appreciated and receipt acknowledged.

R. W. HINES,
Evangelist Halifax, Martin and Pitt Counties,

To The Churches of Concord Presbytery.

I wish, by this notice, to get the attention of some of the churches of Concord Presbytery; and not only their attention, but also an early response to the appeal herein made. I refer especially to those that are still delinquent upon the "Presbyterial," or "Commissioners' Fund," and to those that may have in hand, or can secure their apportionments to Presbyterial Home Missions. Out of the "Commissioners' Fund" all the expenses of Presbytery are paid; there are now due bills for printing minutes, &c., which should have been paid long ago, and ought not to be allowed to remain unpaid any longer. By referring to the many notices I have sent, you can know how much you are due this fund. Do not wait any longer, but forward it at once.

(2.) If you have made your contribution to Presbyterial Home Missions, and have not forwarded it, please don't hold it any longer; if you have not raised your apportionment, then put the proper officers to work, and let it be secured and forwarded at once; for loud and earnest calls are being made on this fund, and there is no answer to return, except "nothing in hand." Brethren, don't wait for another special notice.

J. ALSTON RAMSAY,
Treasurer Concord Presbytery.

A CARD OF THANKS.

Mrs. Sample and myself desire to express, through the columns of your paper, our heartiest thanks to the good people of Bethany congregation, for their kind and loving ministrations to us, at a time when such were peculiarly appreciable. We are unable to express to these people the gratitude we feel in our hearts for what they have done on our behalf.

I suspect they, only, who have furnished a house for the first time, can fully appreciate moving into one already "swept and garnished." Of this burden we have been almost entirely relieved.

Bethany manse, which we very recently occupied, and which has, for some time been vacant, has undergone a complete transformation. It has been neatly and comfortably furnished by the generosity of this kind people.

In our cook-room stands an excellent, new stove and cooking utensils; in the dining-room we find a beautiful set of table ware, including silver knives, forks and spoons; our rooms are carpeted and furnished with a handsome set of furniture; and this is not all, for provisions have been sent in, sufficient to last us many days, and still they come, almost daily. I feel that these people don't realize what great things they have done for our temporal comfort. We can only say: "As ye have done unto us, may the Lord do so, and more also to you, in temporal good things and cause the riches of His grace to abound towards you all!

Yours in Christ,

W. I. SAMPLE.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson XI.

Dec. 16.—The Twelve Sent Forth.

(Matt. x. 5–16. Commit vss. 7–10.)

Golden Text. "As ye go preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matt. x. 7.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. A considerable interval has elapsed since the last lesson. Then our Lord had just returned from a circuit of Galilee with the Apostles. Now for the first time he is to send them forth alone—that is without His presence. They are to go two and two preaching the message He gives them. It should be kept in mind that one great object of our Lord's ministry was the training of the Twelve. Until His death and the descent of the Spirit the world would not be ready for the reception of the truth. But He will leave behind Him a body of men trained under His teaching and filled with His Spirit.

The intervening events since the day of His preaching in Parables closed with the stilling of the Tempest, are: the healing of the man with the legion of devils (Mark v. 1–20); the return and reception in Capernaum and the request of Jairus (Mark v. 21–24; Luke viii. 40–42); the healing of a woman on the way (Mark v. 25–34); the healing of Jairus daughter, (Mark v. 35–43); the second rejection at Nazareth (Mark vi. 1–6.) It was on this tour and without (apparently) returning to Capernaum that He sends forth the Twelve.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: their field, vss. 5, 6; their work and message, vss. 7, 8; their outfit and support, vss. 9–11; their manner, vs. 12: their attitude towards those who receive and those who reject, vss. 13–15; their spirit, vs. 16.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 5. These twelve. Matthew has just named them. Mark and Luke named them in connection with their appointment. Mark (vi. 7) mentions that they were sent "by two and two," but he does not follow this arrangement in his list, but the order (apparently) of precedence, giving the three chief apostles first, and thereby separating Andrew from Peter. The others, Matthew and Luke give the names in pairs, the only uncertainty being as to the last two pairs. The probability is that James and his brother Jude (or Lebbaeus) went together, and that Simon Zelotes was the companion of Judas Iscariot. Luke probably changed the order to name the two Judases together so as more clearly to distinguish them.

Sent forth, the verb from which the noun apostle is derived.

Go not into the way of the Gentiles. Christ's personal ministry was to Israel. He came as the "restorer of Israel" that Israel in turn might be the source of blessing to all nations according to the promise to Abraham (Gen. xii. 3.) He knows, however, that not by Israel's acceptance but by its rejection of Him, will the fulness of the Gentiles be brought in. In the coming of certain Greeks desiring to see Him, He sees evidence of the approaching end, when by the sacrifice of the seed-corn the harvest will be gathered, and by His lifting up will men be drawn to Him (John xii. 20–33.) The time for the mission to the Gentiles is not yet come. When it does come He will give these same Apostles a world-wide commission (Matt. xxviii. 18-20.)

Vs. 6. Lost sheep. Not a general description of Israel but the description of a certain class, the neglected and outcast. Not that they were the only ones to be reached or sought, but they were the least prejudiced, the most needy, and so the most hopeful class. They were the "publicans and sinners" for consorting with whom He was so frequently reproached. They were the "poor" to whom the gospel was preached. They were the multitudes from the high-ways and hedges, from the streets and lanes who were bidden when those first invited refused to come to the feast. They are called by the Rabbis Am Haarez, the people of the land. They said of such, "Bear no witness for him, take none from him, reveal to him no secret, entrust nothing to his charge, make him not treasurer of monies for the poor, associate not with him on a journey." An echo of this sentiment is seen in the words of the chief priests, "This people who knoweth not the law are cursed." (John vii. 49). They were the "lapsed masses" of that day. But Jesus did not blame them, but the leaders, whose burdensome additions to the law, and harsh and unsympathetic requirements, had made the observance of the law so intolerable a yoke, that they had ceased from any attempt to keep it, and so had become the outcasts, "pariahs" of society.

Vs. 8. Freely Give. Ministers are to receive a support, as shown below (vs. 10), but they are not to condition the amount of their service upon the amount of their support, as in ordinary business. The support is in order to "free them from worldly cares" that they may give themselves heart and soul to their work, to rich and poor alike, "without money and without price."

Vs. 9. Provide. This word explains seeming differences in the requirements as given here and in Mark vi. 8-10. Mark says they might take a staff: Matthew "no staff;" Mark says: "Be shod with sandals;" Matthew, "no shoes." The whole series of injunctions are to the effect that they were to make no special provision for the journey, but were to go as they were. If they had a staff they might take it; if they were shod with sandals they might wear them, but were not to get heavier shoes or an extra pair.

Vs. 10. Nor scrip. Not the same as the "purse" in vs. 9. Money was carried in the girdle, the "scrip" was a pouch in which barley cakes and other food for the journey were carried.

Two coats. The word refers to the inner garment, or tunic, but those familiar with oriental customs say that an extra one for a change was never carried on a foot journey. The meaning then would be to prohibit the procurement of the outer and more flowing robe, that was worn by the upper classes, and by all on "dress" occasions. They were to go in the garb of peasant travellers.

Vs. 11. Enquire who in it is worthy. This precaution was not only desirable for guiding them to people likely to receive them, but in the case of their rejection by those pointed out as "worthy," would serve as a proper ground for abandoning the whole city. The town was to be judged by the conduct of those whom the people of the town regarded as their best people. The "worthiness" probably consisted not in a pronounced attitude toward the kingdom, but to that spirit of hospitality and kindness, and tendency to help worthy objects that is characteristic of some people and not of others.

Vs. 13. Your peace, alluding to the salutation spoken of in vs. 12. The form of salutation was "Peace be to thee." If the house was worthy the salutation would be no mere empty form, but a real benediction. Otherwise it would return upon them.

Vs. 14. The action spoken of was a common Oriental manner of expressing the breaking off of intercourse.

Vs. 15. The same condemnation upon those who refused the disciples as upon those who rejected the Master (Matt. xi. 20–24.)

Vs. 16. The weak things of the world were to conquer the strong; but they would need the prudence of the serpent in avoiding unnecessary danger, and the simplicity—better, than harmlessness—of the dove in meeting it. Too much shrewdness and cunning is worse than none in the servants of Christ.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson embodying the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. Christ's followers like their Master are to seek and save the lost; vs. 5; Matt. xxii. 9; Luke xv. 6, etc.; Luke xix. 10.
2. They are to begin nearest home, vss. 4, 5; Luke xxiv. 47; Acts i. 8.
3. They are not to be concerned about the things of this life, vss. 9, 10; Matt. vi. 24-34.
4. They who preach the gospel are to live of the gospel, vs. 10; Luke x. 7; 1 Cor. ix. 7-11.
5. In the home-field they are to be supported by those whom they serve. Compare vs. 6 and 11; Gal. vi. 6.
6. When going to the unevangelized world they are to make rational provision for their needs, Luke xxii. 35, 36, and should be supported by churches already organized, Rom. x. 14, 15; Phil. iv. 10, 14–16.
7. The victory is to be not by human resources, but by the power of God, vs. 16, 1 Cor. i. 27–29; Matt. xxviii. 18-20.

Sixth Step. The practical lessons are brought out in the Bible Reading above. They are to be prayerfully considered and faithfully applied.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Sum up the intervening events. Make the scholars repeat the names of the Apostles, and try to draw out something individual about different ones. Draw from the scholars as clear a statement of the Lord's directions to the Apostles as you can, clearing up any points of difficulty. Draw out the teachings through the Bible Reading.

NEW QUESTIONS.

124. Under what three figures (or metaphors) from Oriental country-life is the work of the Apostles described?

FOREIGN MISSION RECEIPTS FOR NOVEMBER.

Our receipts for the month of November were $11,710.07. For November, 1893, they were $16,296.01. The decrease for November this year is $4,585.94. The loss for the present year to Dec. 1st, as compared with last year the same date is $13,380.10.

We most earnestly ask attention to this statement, on the part of our pastors, our Presbyterial Committees of Foreign Missions, our Ladies' and Gentlemen's Missionary Societies, our Children's Mission Bands, and especially of individuals who have the Lord's money in trust.

It is the Lord's work that is thus suffering. It is the advance guard of the Lord's army that is thus being left without support. It is we who, in spite of the fact that hard times are pinching us a little, are debtors for untold mercies and blessings, who are thus making our necessary retrenchment at the wrong end of the line. Dear brethren. take these facts which we lay before you. Think over them, pray over them, and then let each one of us ask the question "Lord, what will Thou have me to do?"

Fraternally yours,

S. H. CHESTER,
Secretary.

A BOUNTEOUS THANKSGIVING PRESENT.

Please allow us through the columns of the PRESBYTERIAN to extend our sincere and heart-felt thanks to the good people of White Hill church and friends outside, for such a varied and bountiful Thanksgiving Present, delivered to us, through Messrs. Lemons, Cole, and Cameron in behalf of the church, on Wednesday, the 28th of November.

They brought us all that two good mules could pull—literally, in Scripture language, the load was "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over."

Space forbids an enumeration of articles here, suffice it to say that they seemed to know exactly what we needed and brought it in great abundance.

Indeed our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places. We take courage in the Master's work, and thank God that our lot has been cast among such people. May His rich blessing rest upon them!

Fayetteville Presbytery.

At a called meeting of Fayetteville Presbytery, held in Fayetteville the 27th inst., the pastoral relations between Rev. W. M. Eldridge and Carthage and Culdee churches were ordered to be dissolved January 1st, 1895.

Rev. W. M. Eldridge, asked Presbytery for a letter of dismission to connect himself with the Presbytery of North Alabama. Instead of granting this request, Presbytery placed in his hands the call of the Presbyterial Evangelistic Committee for his service as Presbyterial Evangelist to begin January 1st, 1895, and he accepted the same.

The time agreed upon for the next regular meeting of the Presbytery is 8 p. m, Tuesday after the third Sunday in April 1895, and not Friday.

A Special Request.

All our ministers are earnestly requested to see that their collections for Education for the ministry be promptly sent to W. G. Macrae, Treasurer, 383 Front St., Memphis, Tenn. Our candidates are in pressing need for the help promised them. If our ministers and people could see the letters written by candidates they would hasten to do their part. If any churches and schools have failed to take the collection will they not do so at once?

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Three negroes confined in a guardhouse at Polkton set fire to the building, hoping to escape, but they failed and were burned to death.

In some counties much more grain is being sown than is usual at this season and the people seem disposed to reduce the cotton acreage, but an advance of a cent or two in cotton in the spring, if such an advance should occur, would probably bring out the full acreage.

A Mr. Thomas was waylaid between Hope Mills in Cumberland county and Fayetteville last week by three white men and robbed of $12—all the money he had. A clear case of highway robbery. The robbers were tramps, without doubt.

Large amounts of cotton remain unpicked in the fields all over the State.

DOMESTIC.

There has been some improvement in manufacturing circles North, but the closing of the sugar refineries, has driven a large number of employees out of employment and had a depressing effect. On the whole there is some improvement.

Gen. Joseph E. Brown, the war governor of Georgia, and from 1880 to 1891 U. S. Senator from that State, died at his home in Atlanta last Friday, in his 74th year. The property left by him is estimated at from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000.

The weather was intensely cold in Chicago on last Friday. The streets became in course of a few hours slippery with ice and telegraph communication for a time became interrupted.

Wm. C. Oates took the oath of office as Governor of Alabama on Saturday last. Reuben F. Kolb claiming to have been legally elected took the oath before a justice of the peace and harangued a crowd in front of the capitol.

A Spanish steamer with 1,500 bales of cotton aboard caught fire in New Orleans on last Saturday and three men were suffocated by the smoke and came near losing their lives. A large part of the cotton was damaged or destroyed.

The Charity Hospital located outside the limits of Birmingham, Ala., was destroyed by fire last Saturday. The inmates escaped. The building cost $40,000.

Three students have died of diphtheria at Wesleyan College, Middletown, Conn. The last one died on Friday night.

The British steamship Maroa sailed from New Orleans for Havre on last Saturday with 18,348 bales of cotton on board, valued at $550,000.

DANIEL—ALLEN. On November 21st, 1894, at the residence of the bride's father in Granville county, N. C., by Rev. C. V. Wharton, Mr. James L. Daniel and Miss Mary E. Allen, both of Granville county.

SHAW—KILLMAN. On November 23d, 1894, by Rev. R. E. C. Lawson, Mr. Louis E. Shaw and Miss Arinthea S. Killman. The couple were seated in their buggy and the parson stood bareheaded in the cold wind; but the ceremony was performed according to the custom of the Presbyterian church and the laws of the Commonwealth of Virgina. The happy couple returned to their home in Northhampton county. R. E. C. L.

DIED.

On the 9th of November, 1894, in Maxton, N. C., ANGUS B. McELYEA, a beloved and highly esteemed young man in the 2t4h year of his age, was suddenly called from the scenes of earth to scenes celestial, and to enter, as we doubt not, upon a blessed immortality in the Father's house of many mansions. The very large and sympathetic audience that reverently attended his funeral service indicated something of the high esteem in which he was held by the citizens of the town where he had for some time resided, and in which he for two years past had been engaged in practice of the law—in which profession he was rising rapidly, making for himself a reputation highly creditable and altogether pleasing to his many friends and well-wishers.

He was a close student, and of very superior intellectual capabilities. He was fascinating in manner, always gentle, kind, and obliging. At the age of sixteen years he joined Smyrna Presbyterian church, (of which he had been a baptized member from childhood), and he adorned his profession of faith in Christ by living a consistent, earnest, and devoted Christian life. He gave pleasing evidence of constant growth in grace. And after entering upon his chosen avocation, his zeal for, and his consecration to the Master's service was in no way abated or hindered by the practice of his profession. Showing that one may be a faithful and successful lawyer, and at the same time a faithful and devoted Christian. May the gracious Saviour comfort those who have been so suddenly and sorely bereaved, by this seemingly strange dispensation of His providence.

At his residence in Robeson county, on the 22d of November, DONALD McLEOD, in the 39th year of his age.

He became a communing member of Ashpole church when he was seventeen years old. His membership was transferred to Iona in 1880. In July 1881, he was elected and ordained a ruling elder. And in the following December he was elected clerk of the session and continued to hold this office usefully and acceptably until his death.

One of the manliest of men, it may truly be said, is gone. His convictions were strong, his purposes noble, and his courage unflinching. The death of such a man is a great loss to the world's forces, to the church's activities, and to Christian manhood.

He was a thrifty farmer and in whatever way tested, proved to be an enterprising, progressive, and prosperous business man. Purposeful, persevering and of unswerving integrity, he naturally commanded the confidence of those who knew him. And he was a warm-hearted and loyal friend and an affectionate and helpful neighbor.

But while we admire him for his excellencies as a citizen and as a true and genial personal friend, yet more, on account of his strong Christian character. He was conscientious, he was faithful. Without display he deeply loved and quietly labored for his Master's honor and glory.

His life was short if it be measured by years and months and days, but such is not the true measurement.

"We live in deeds not years; in thoughts not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial. We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

Measured by this standard his life was a full and honorable one. Though young in years he was mature in equipment, in experience and in grace.

He was aware of the approach of death and met it with Christian fortitude. In full view of its presence, parting words of counsel were spoken to each of his four children and farewell to his affectionate wife; and then with and for all he prayed with the unction of a saint about to enter upon his rest. Such was the way he closed his earthly life.

His family grieves over the loss of a devoted father and husband; his community the loss of a valuable citizen; his church the loss of an efficient servant, but not without hope, while to him his death was "gain."

The large crowd which assembled notwithstanding lowering clouds and rain to pay their last tribute of respect to the worthy dead displayed the general esteem in which he was held. The funeral services were conducted from Iona church, and he was buried in a grave in the burial ground of the church to remain until he "shall come forth * * * "unto the resurrection of life."

"One more in heaven!
Another thought to brighten cloudy days,
Another theme for thankfulnes and praise,
Another link on high our souls to raise
To home and heaven."

FOR THE FAMILY.

BE KIND TO AULD GRANNIE.

Be kind to auld grannie, for noo she is frail,
As a time-shatter'd tree bending low in the gale;
When ye were wee bairnies, tott, totting about,
She watch'd ye when in, and she watch'd ye when out;
And aye when ye chanc'd, in your daffin' and fun,
To dunt your wee heads on the cauld staney grun',
She lifted ye up, and she kiss'd ye fu' fain,
Till a' your bit cares were forgotten again—
Then be kind to auld grannie, for noo she is frail,
As a time-shatter'd tree bending low in the gale.

When first in your breasts rose that feeling divine,
That's waked by the tales and the sangs o' langsyne,
Wi' auld-warld cracks she would pleasure inspire,
In the lang winter nichts as she sat by the fire;
Or melt your young hearts wi' some sweet Scottish lay,
Like "The Fowers o' the Forest," or "Auld Robbin Gray;"
Though eerie the win' blew around our bit cot,
Grim winter and a' its wild blast were forgot—
Then be kind to auld grannie, for noo she is frail,
As a time shatter'd tree bending low in the gale.

And mind, though the blithe day o' youth noo is yours,
Time will wither its joys, as wild winter the flowers,
And your step that's noo licht as the bound o' the roe,
Wi' cheerless auld age may be feeble and slow;
And the frien's o' your youth to the grave may be gane,
And ye on its brink may be tottering alane;
Oh, think how consoling some frien' would be then,
When the gloamimg o' life comes like mist o'er the glen—
Then be kind to auld gannie, for noo she is frail,
As a time-shatter'd tree bending low in the gale.

Items for Lady Readers.

The marriage of Czar Nicholas II to Princess Alix, of Hesse, occurred November 26th, at the Winter-Palace, and was attended with all the splendor and ceremony which characterize a Russian imperial wedding. The scenes of today were in strong contrast to the mourning which shrouded the city last week, but it is said the late Czar had requested that an early marriage take place and that none of the ceremony be omitted.

The procession to the Winter Palace started at 11 o'clock, the Czar riding with the Grand Duke Michael in an open carriage drawn by four white horses. They both wore the uniform of huzzars of the guard and were greeted with a vociferous outburst of cheering, which was renewed again and again. The Czar's equippage was preceded and also followed by detachment of Chevallers des Gardes and huzzars and lancers of the guard, all in brilliant gala uniforms. Then came a superb landau, also drawn by four white horses, in which was Princess Alix and the Czarina. They received, if possible, even a more hearty popular greeting than the Czar himself. After the carriage of the Princess and Czarina followed a long train of carriages with the royal guests, including the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Military bands were stationed at various points along the route between the two palaces, and they each struck up national anthem as the cortege approached. The national hymn was thus sounded in the ears of the imperial party along the entire route.

Reaching the Winter Palace the royal party entered the Malachite Hall, where the bridal procession was formed. After marching in grand pomp the bridal procession then found itself in the Piketnava room, which adjoins the church. In this room remained the majority of the officials and the members of the lssser nobility, only the imperial family and their royal guests and the indispensable functionaries passing into the small chapel, which is a most gorgeous little temple, glittering with gold and stucco work.

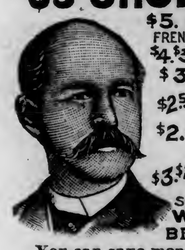
The costumes in the chapel were dazzling. * * * The bride's dress was white, richly embroidered with gold, and on her head was the usual kokoshnik, ornamented with diamonds. At the top of the kokoshnik was a small crown of diamonds. The bride's mantle was of purple velvet, lined with ermine. Her train was borne by five officials, two walking on either side, while the grand chamberlain held the hem.

All the royal princes wore the cordon of the Order of St. Andrew.

Close behind the bridal pair the imperial and royal spectators formed a semicircle.

The ceremony was concluded a few minutes before 2 o'clock. The Czar and his bride then approached the dowager Czarina to greet and thank her. She embraced her son and his wife, after which they were embraced and kissed by the King of Denmark and their other relatives.

On reaching the Cathedral of Kazan, which is a most imposing edifice, half surrounded by a colonade recalling St. Peter's at Rome, there was a remarkable spectacle.



A TeDeum was celebrated inside the Cathedral, the metropoiltan officiating, and praying the Almighty to bless the Czar and Cza rina and to guide them in their paths of dnty.

When the Czar reappeared on the Cathedral steps after the religious ceremonies within and kissed the miraculous image of Our Lady of Kazan the enthusiasm of the people was beyond all description. The brillancy of the spectacle at this moment was enhanced by a sudden burst of sunshine from the clouds, which had hitherto darkened the sky. The appearance of the golden rays were regarded by the immense crowds of spectators present, who cheered themselves hoarse as the Czar and Czarina re-entered the carriage and returned to the Anitchkoff palace.

When the newly wedded pair arrived at the Anitchkoff Palace they were received and welcomed by the Dowager Czarina.

In honor of the Czar's wedding, $40,000 poor people of this city dined at the expense of the Czar. All the schools have been closed for three days in order to give the children a holiday and enable them to celebrate the imperial marriage.—Baltimore Sun.

A Popular Commentary on the Old an

New Testament: Critical, Practical and Explanatory. 4 vols. in box, 8vo., cloth, $8. Half mor. $10. A New Edition, containing the complete unabridged notes in clear type on good paper. With copious index numerous illustrations and maps, and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

This is the only Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within the reach of the masses, while no commentary published is so highly commended, or so well adapted for the home, the teacher, or the preacher

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent D. D.

"I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it."—C. H. Spurgeon.

GOOD BY, LITTLE FLOWERS.

Bark! through the holly boughs
Cold wails the blast,
Birds south are flying,
Summer is dying,
Flower-time is past,
Flower-time is past.

Cold are November-skies,
Sunless and drear,
Golden rod, eyelids close,
Aster, tuck up your toes,
Winter is here,

"Good-by, little flowers,"
The icy winds sing;
Slow, blanket them over,
Sleep well, little clover,
Sleep till the spring,
Sleep till the spring.

"I am glad to see you," old Mrs. Morris greeted the girl. "I've been looking for you every day. I want you to open the mission-box. They tell me you're the treasurer."

"The mission-box?" questioned Katherine.

Mrs. Morris guided the girl from the back of the light-house to the dark, front entry, and, opening the door a little so that Katherine could see a small box that was fastened to the wall, the old lady sat down on the stairs that led to the upper part of the building, and told her story.

"Since we came here," old Mrs. Morris said, "my son has had rheumatism so badly in his knees that I haven't wanted to make him climb the light-house stairs any oftener than he has to, to see the lamp. Tuesdays and Fridays the light-house is open to visitors. They drive down from those great hotels beyond town. Some days there will be as many as six carriages around here at once, and every new person wants to climb the stairs, and see the lamp, and go out on the iron balcony, maybe. Of course we never allow anybody to go upstairs near the lamp without one of us going, too, for we don't let visitors so much as touch the lamp with one of their fingers.

"There are thirty-two steps between this floor and the lamp floor of the light-house, and when you climb thirty-two steps with one company of visitors, and then down again, and find some one else ready to go up, and you climb again and come down, and do that off and on through the day, it's real hard work. My son couldn't do it with rheumatism in his knees, though he tried when it hurt him terribly.

"So I took it upon myself. Besides the climbing, there is the talking I'd be so tired, saying over and over, 'This lamp's plunger is made of lead, and weighs thirty-five pounds, and it's to force the oil into the lamp. And this disk magnifies the light six times. And this oil-tank holds five gallons. This light can be seen, on clear nights, from twenty to thirty miles at least.

"When visitors would come, after seeing the lamp, very often they would offer me some money to pay for my trouble. But, of course, being employed by the goverment, we couldn't take money for showing anything, and so I always said, 'No, thank you.'

"One Sunday, I was away up stairs alone. I had my Bible, and I cried a little, thinking how I had always been used to being near church, and able to attend meetings, and help with church work some.

"'I'm worthless, now,' I said, 'I'm sure. I can't go to church, or do much of anything to spread His kingdom. I don't know that I'm good for anything but just to climb these stairs, and talk about this lamp.'

"I looked out at the water rolling, away, away, away, as far as I could see, and I thought of all the heathen off beyond the ocean. They hadn't any gospel, and here I sat with my Bible in my lap, and I could'nt reach the Book to them across the waters, and their souls were dying! 'Oh, I wish I could help them!' I said.

"Of a sudden I thought of something. I went down stairs, and found that box. Next day I fastened the box to the wall, and I said, 'I've been climbing these stairs because I couldn't help it, but now I'm going to begin to climb them for the spread of the kingdom!

"Since then, when anybody that I've shown over the light-house says to me, 'Here's something to pay you for your trouble,' I answer, 'We're government folks, so we don't take pay, but there's my foreign mission-box fastened on the wall, and if you drop anything into that I'll see that it goes to the spread of the kingdom.'"

Mrs. Morris paused!

"I don't mind getting tired so much, now," she added, "for I say to myself, every time I go up with my visitors 'I'm climbing for the spread of the kingdom.'"

Katherine looked at the wrinkled old face and the gray hair, and her eyes grew a little dim.

"Let's you and I open the mission-box now, and see how much is in it!" eagerly proposed Mrs. Morris.

The old lady laughed an excited little laugh. This was a moment to which she had looked forward for many a day. She was eager as a child while Katherine counted the money.

"Four dollars and sixty-five cents," announced Katherine.

A tear rolled down Mrs. Morris's cheek.

"Its more than I ever was able to give Foreign Missions in one year before, even when I lived near the church," she faltered. "I'm so glad! And I earned it myself, climbing! I can do something yet! I'm so glad! I'm going to try to fill that mission-box again,"

After Katharine had plodded back over the white sands, she stopped where the large gate marked the beginning of the pines. She looked back. The light-house stood, round and tall, against the western sky. Within the light-house was the feeble old woman, who climbed "for the spread of the kingdom."

"Dear heart!" murmured the formerly discouraged treasurer. "How could I despair over the outlook for Foreign Missions when such earnest, prayerful souls are at work?"

And the sight of the distant blue waves and high-tossed foam brought back to Katherine the words of a missionary laboring beyond those waters: "The world is to be Christ's even if some years are hard. When the final conquering day dawns, we shall see how every moment led up to it, and shall be ashamed that we reckoned any hour hard, when its results are so blessed."—Zion's Herald.

How Janie Settled It.

"Here comes mamma," said Janie. "O mamma! must I save some of my candy for Grace?"

"I think a good little sister would."

"But Grace didn't give me any of hers yesterday."

"Didn't she? How did you like that?"

"I didn't like it at all. And I want to make her not like it, too, because I think she was real mean."

"Dear, dear! And is mamma to have two mean little girls, then?"

Janie looked at her mother and was quiet a minute. Then she ran and threw her arms around her neck and said, "No, no, mamma dear! You shall not have any mean little girls at all! I guess Grace forgot; and I'll go and give her some of my candy now, so she won't ever forget again!"

Her mother smiled. "I think that is the way to make her remember," she said. "And I am so glad I am to have two kind little girls."—Picture World.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND, just as thoroughly and as certainly at one time as another, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery purifies the blood. You don't need it at any special season. But when any eruption appears, or you feel weariness and depression that's a sign of impure blood, then you need this medicine, and nothing else. The ordinary "Spring medicines" and blood-purifiers can't compare with it.

The "Discovery" promotes every bodily function, puts on sound, healthy flesh, and cleanses, repairs and invigorates your whole system. In the most stubborn Skin Diseases, in every form of Scrofula—even in Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages—and in every blood-taint and disorder, it is the only guaranteed remedy.

Study Law at Home.

It was the ambitious young man and woman on the farm, behind the counter, in the mill, in the lawyer's office, in the bank—the man and woman without the opportunity of a college education, that made this method of teaching law a necessity. We offer two courses—

1. A Course Preparing the Student to Practise Law;
2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the result perfect. Nicely printed catalogues explain both courses. They can be had for the asking. Address

COTTOLENE.

Lardepsia

would be a more appropriate name for that common cause of suffering—dyspepsia—because most cases of dyspepsia can be traced to food cooked with lard. Let COTTOLENE take the place of lard in your kitchen and good health will take the place of Dyspepsia. Try it. Every pail of the genuine COTTOLENE bears this trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath.

Its Dangerous Ground

that you stand on—with a cough or a cold, and your blood impure. Out of just these conditions comes Consumption.

You must do something. In the earlier stages of Consumption, and in all the conditions that lead to it, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a certain remedy. This scrofulous affection of the lungs, like every other form of Scrofula, can be cured by it. In severe, lingering Coughs, all Bronchial, Throat, and Lung Affections, and every disease, that can be reached through the blood, it is the only medicine so effective that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back. Nervous prostration and debility are conquered by it.

Be nice, even to superstition, in keeping thy promises—be equally cautious in making them.—Fuller.

Now—the Time to Make Money.

Last month I cleared, after paying all expenses, $175.46; the month before, $149.43. and have at the same time attended to my regular business. I believe any one, anywhere, can do as well, as I have not a particular good location and no experience. When you have an article that every family wants, it is very easy selling it. It seems strange that a good, cheap Dish Washer was never before placed on the market. With the Climax, which sells at $5, you can wash and dry the dishes for a family in two minutes, without putting the hands in water; as soon as people see the Washer work, they want one, and that is why so much money can be made so quickly. For full particulars, address The Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio. I feel convinced that any lady or gentleman, in any location, can make from $5 to $10 a day, as every family will soon have a Dish Washer. Try it, and publish your experience for the benefit of others.

Every absurdity has a champion to defend it, for error is always talkative.—Goldsmith.

State of North Carolina, New Hanover County, } Superior Court.

John D. Bellamy, Jr.,
vs
Emanuel Haggitt and wife Grace, Benjamin Tucker, et al.

This is a special proceeding instituted before the Superior Court of New Hanover county, to divide a certain lot in the city of Wilmington, N. C., among the plaintiff and defendants as tenants in common—and it appearing to the Court that Benjamin Tucker is a necessary party to this action, and that he is a non-resident and cannot, after due diligence be found in this State, and that a cause of action exists in plantiff's favor against said defendant.

It is now ordered that the defendant Benjamin Tucker be and appear before the Clerk of the Superior Court of New Hanover county, on Thursday the 17th of January, 1895, and answer or demur to the complaint already filed in this cause or judgment will be awarded against said defendant according to the prayer thereof.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

As some surprise has been expressed at views declared in the editorial on "Organic Union" in our last issue, it seems to us only proper to make some explanation. While the article set forth the opinion and feelings entertained by the present editor and from which he, of course, cannot recede, they do not coincide with the views held by the former editor and heretofore maintained by this paper. As these persons are joint proprietors of the paper, in justice to each it seems proper to state the points in which they agree and in which they differ:

They agree that the question of the propriety of "Organic Union" is one upon which Christian men may honestly and charitably differ. That there is no good reason for charging, or believing, that those either for or against it are actuated by motives of hatred or malignity, but that difference in views may and ought to be regarded as a difference of opinion as to what would please our LORD, and best promote the advancement of His kingdom.

The proprietors of the paper radically differ as to the propriety of agitation of the question, because of its possible results.

The present editor believes that discussion is not necessarily harmful but will be useful in teaching our own people, as well as our Northern brethren why we think it best to hold aloof, and further that union may by the removal of obstacles now in the way, be accomplished, and redound to the welfare of the MASTER'S kingdom.

The former editor continues to regard all agitation as hurtful, as being necessarily peace-disturbing and so retardful of the proper and legitimate work of the Church, and as being incapable of ever effecting an "Organic Union" of love and harmony; on the contrary as inevitably bound to create discord and strife throughout our Southern land and eventually to disrupt our Southern Church, leaving Synods and Presbyteries, even congregations and families, divided, while variance and bitterness, impeding the advance of the kingdom, pervade our beloved Church.

Organic Union again. When it was said last week, in an editorial, "Believing that the cordial reunion of the Church would be well pleasing to the LORD, we pray for, and expect it," there was no intention to declare a willingness to unite with the Northern Church, as things now are; for just a line before it was written, "The obstacles in the way of union are grave and serious;" and, of course, these obstacles must be removed before there can be cordial reunion. The unity, for which CHRIST prayed, is a oneness of mind and spirit, and, without this, organic union would bring discord and strife. But when this spiritual unity shall exist, organic union will be right and advantageous. And may the LORD hasten the time when the Northern and the Southern churches will see eye to eye, and be ready to work together without any serious differences.

COLORED EVANGELIZATION: The Synod of North Carolina enjoins the pastors and sessions to bring the spiritual interests of the Colored People before their congregations in December. Has this been done in your church? Last year it was sadly neglected, and nearly one-half of our churches gave nothing to the cause. If we are to do better this year, let the pastors and sessions first inform themselves of the importance and needs of this work, and then it will be easy to inform the people. Our issue of Nov. 22d, is rich in information on this subject. Read carefully, the able and interesting "Review" of our colored Secretary, Rev. A. L. PHILLIPS; read also "Our Duty to the Colored People," by Rev. W. R. COPPEDGE, and study the Synodical Report of Dr. W. D. MORTON. Then you will be ashamed to neglect the collection any longer, and eager and ready to present the cause to your people.

BACK SETS AND OFFSETS.

It was a cold, damp day—the last Sunday in November. My appointments were twelve and sixteen miles away. I reached the nearer church about the hour for service. There was no one on the ground, except an elder. The church had no stove, and we made a fire in the yard and waited for the congregation. After the hour when we should have been leaving the church, I began to preach with a heavy heart, to five adults and two children. I drove on to my next appointment. Here I expected better things. It was a little town of church-goers. But before supper was over, it began to rain in torrents. We had no service. The next morning I set out through a cold, drizzly rain, and over sloppy roads to return home. What had I done? So many back sets. Was there anything to offset? Yes. First, there was the family with whom I spent the night. During all the years of my ministry to them, I had never spent the night under their roof, and I was surprised and delighted to find so much interest in the work of the church. So much information on church matters, and such a determination to push forward the work of the Church. In the second place, as I proceeded on my way home, an acquaintance called to me and asked me to come into the house a few moments and see his brother who lay on a dying bed. I spent an hour in that chamber of death. I read the 103 Ps. When I came to the passage, "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us," the dying man with a feeble effort spread his arms to their fullest extent. Too weak to talk, he wanted to show the wideness of the separation made by the grace of God between his soul and sin. Oh, how earnestly his hungry ears took in every word of that blessed Psalm and the 23d, and when I had prayed and grasped his hand for the last time, he pointed upward, and said in a faint whisper, "It is all right." As I drove away the sun broke through the clouds, and I felt that light had come to my soul. I had received a sermon which I needed more than the congregation did the one they failed to hear. I came on three miles, and called at another home where one of God's servants lay dying in the midst of her years, with her fond young husband, and three little children by the bedside. But she was ready. How could she except through a miracle of grace, be ready to leave those so dependent, and so loving? In a few days both of these passed away. I had no congregations, but it was my privilege to cheer souls in the very midst of the swelling waters, with the sweet words of the loving Master, and perhaps, best of all, I was never so preached to.

THE CHINA WATCHWORD—GO FORWARD.

The key-note of our recent Mission meeting in Shanghai was, This Is The Time To Push. The country is at war with Japan and will make every effort to avoid complications with other nationalities. This year is considered specially favorable for renting chapels and opening work in new places. The Mandarins are unusually careful to afford protection to missionaries in the interior, and the cities of Central China at this time furnish as secure habitations as do Richmond and Atlanta, Louisville and Memphis. We know not what is in the future but at present the scene of conflict is far away from us, and if during the winter it is removed southward, Formosa is likely to be the objective point. Should the Japanese press on to Peking, occupy the Imperial city, and the Tartar dynasty be overthrown, then internal revolutions might affect the safety of foreigners, but this is yet far from being accomplished. If necessary, China can make her breastworks of men and place a thousand legions behind them. Our call is to the young men to volunteer in the foreign evangelistic service so that this fall they may be sent forth from our headquarters in Nashville.

OUR PRESSING NEEDS.

The Mission called for a physician to go to Kiangyin, a large city on the Yangtse, with a view also of opening by medical work Changchow, which is thirty miles distant. Two preachers for Kiangyin are needed. As our beloved brother, W. B. White has had to go home, it leaves Dr. Venable alone for the occupation of Kashing. This field needs two evangelists and were they at hand no doubt ready entrance could be effected by this gifted occulist. Rev. J. Y. McGinnis and Mrs. Sykes, are now alone at Wusih. The brethren at Tsingkiangpu are directed to call for men to occupy the part of the Kiangsu province which is north of the Yangtse and lies between the Grand Canal and the sea; a section 300 miles long by 150 broad, without a missionary. The Suhchien station is asked to move forward on the great city of Chuchow, eighty miles west, as soon as practicable. Rev. H. W. White, is ready to go to another province as soon as he learns something of the language and can procure colleagues. The Chinese army numbers hundreds of thousands; corps, and divisions and brigades. There is but one regiment of male missionaries to conquer China for Christ.

OUR SORROWS.

There were some shadows which crossed the pathway of our Mission. Our beloved brother, W. B. White, the disciple whom Jesus loved—whose life out here may be described as "leaning on Jesus' bosom"—and who had just become able to preach well in Chinese and was pressed in spirit to enter as a pioneer a new city, on account of severe illness had to return to the United States. We missed him.

Last year a bride arrived upon the field and was welcomed to a new home. Her progress in the language was good and there was special promise of usefulness in China as seen in her gifts of teaching children and her ready adaptability to entertaining heathen women. It was a happy year she spent in Sinim, and her friends rejoiced in the good cheer her presence diffused. Well-educated at school, a good student of the Bible, very deeply pious, robust and strong, the very picture of health, we fondly hoped for long life, but God called Mrs. Julia McGinnis Haden to Himself and she willingly obeyed the call of her risen Lord and descended to the tomb with cheerful resignation. Her little boy Julian is a large, strong, bright, beautiful baby and is left as joy to his dear father and afflicted grandmother.

At our last three Mission meetings little Georgie Graham was a great pet but soon after her grandfather returned from Nashville, the news was received that she had taken her seat in the General Assembly above.

THE REPORTS

from the stations were specially gratifying; quite a number of baptisms, especially at Hangchow; about 500 children taught in the schools; some thousands of women received in the homes, preached to in the chapels or visited in their houses; a large amount of itineration done; 20,000 patients treated by the doctors and others; about 30,000 tracts and books sold and tens of thousands to hear the gospel in the twenty chapels.

Though he did not mention it in his report, during May, on an itinerant trip near the sea, Bro. Graham was badly stoned. His head was protected by a thick pith hat or the consequences might have been serious. As it was for some nights he could not lie on his back. Our friends at Suhchien have had a rugged time, and Mrs. Patterson has endured hardness more than perhaps any of our ladies in any one year. For a time she could not put her foot out of the door. There was an ugly placard posted over the city, warning the women to keep away; that she was a man in woman's clothing. There is a touch of human nature in the daughters of Sinim and the result was they came in crowds to see for themselves and get cured of their diseases.

Our former secretary was welcomed to our counsels. He appeared in the sacred desk attired in of spotless white in which His Grace was not specially recognizable, but in which he could be all things to the sons of Han, save the queue. He labors in a fruitful field. Rev. G. Hudson, by medical advice on his wife's account, was assigned to Hangchow by almost a tie vote. He can be illy spared from the Kiangyin field, to which last year we together took ten trips, not "two" as reported in print. A majority recommended to the committee to locate Mr. Caldwell in Shanghai as agent of the mission. This was earnestly opposed by a strong minority because of the unnecessary expense, and that it would be unwise to remove an eloquent and effective speaker from a station where he is so much needed at this time to commence work at a port where there are 100 missionaries. Mr. Paxton presided over the sessions with ability and courtesy.

Though dark clouds overhang this land the

is now moving forward and guiding the Church. China has slept the last fifty years, fondly believing the foes she greatly feared—England and Russia—were far away. She did not watch the progress in civilization of the sunrise kingdom and now behold! at the door is a nation which contends for the supremacy of Asia. The empire is driven to the policy of teaching western science and opening vast systems of railways. This will modify China's pride—the great obstacle to Christianity—and undermine her prejudice. The rider on the "Red Horse" is seen in the North. Every step that China has taken has immediately followed a foreign war. The Scriptures in many places teach that the King of kings uses wars and tumults to overturn hoary systems of evil and to establish His kingdom. This is now

THE TIME TO PRAY.

O! let not Satan reap the advantage in this crisis. Pray that God would overrule this bloodshed for the furtherance of his gospel. Let the people of God ask Him to protect the missionaries scattered throughout the eighteen provinces. But most of all pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers and to grant that his young servants may not be timid and afraid to come China.

I am constantly on the streets of this city, teach daily in the chapels, and go to the country and all is quiet. With my family, I spent three days in Wusih; Mr. McGinnis and myself preaching in the chapels and Mrs. Sykes and Mrs. D., visiting among the women; all in perfect safety. During this month I have made two trips to Kiangyin, and sold books in the towns and villages and was received very politely by the people. Missionary work, in all its departments, is being carried on throughout the empire. Men and ladies travel everywhere. Let then the Church send us large reinforcements by the next steamers. We do need a teacher! H. C. D.

THE COLORED ACADEMICAL AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL OF THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

In accordance with the appointment and instruction of the Board of Trustees of this Institution, proposed for the benefit of the colored people of North Carolina, a committee consisting of Rev. E. W. Smith, D. D., and Elder J. M. Rogers, of Winston visited North Wilkesboro on the 15th ult.

Their inspection of the property was carefully conducted. This committee was favorably impressed with the tract of land offered as a site for the Institution. It consists of 300 acres of good land, much of it fairly timbered, and the soil fertile.

On the 24th of November a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees was called to convene in Durham. Rev. L. B. Turnbull, Secretary, Mr. Geo. W. Watts, Treasurer, and Rev. W. D. Morton, Chairman, were present. The report of the Committe of Inspection was received and considered and action was taken accepting the offer of the owners of the tract afore mentioned at $10 per acre. Rev. S. G. Walker was elected superintendent and financial agent of the Institution. Mr. Walker has impressed the Board as a man of consecration and earnestness, deeply enlisted in the welfare of his people and worthy the confidence of the Synod of North Carolina. He was authorized to erect at once a building upon the land for church and school purposes, and to open the school on January 1st, 1895. Furthermore, the chairman of the Board of Trustees was directed to give to Mr. Walker such credentials as are necessary to introduce him to the charitable people of our own and other States where he may go to solicit funds for the furtherance of this enterprise. It is hoped that in his efforts to secure aid for this Institution (the first of the kind which has been inaugurated by our Southern Presbyterian Church) Mr. Walker will have the prayers and the hearty co-operation and assistance of the Presbyterians of our Synod and Assembly.

Respectfully,
W. D. MORTON,
Chairman.

A distinguished Methodist preacher once said: "But for the interest and devotion of the women of our churches, one-half of them would die the first year, and the other half the second." The same remark is largely applicable to our Presbyterian churches. A considerable proportion of the Sabbath congregations consist of the women. And as for the week-night prayer-meeting, it would have to be given up in a good many of our churches were it not for the women. —Mid-Continent.

The Presbyterian.

NOT CHANGED, BUT GLORIFIED.

Not changed, but glorified! O beauteous language
For those who weep,
Mourning the loss of some dear face departed,
Fallen asleep;
Hushed into silence, never more to comfort
The hearts of men,
Gone, like the sunshine of another country,
Beyond our ken.

O dearest dead, we saw thy white soul shining
Behind thy face.
Bright with the beauty and celestial glory
Of an immortal grace.
What wonder that we stumble, faint and weeping,
And sick with fears,
Since thou hast left us—all alone with sorrow,
And blind with tears?

Can it be possible no words shall welcome
Our coming feet?
How will it look, that face we have cherished,
When next we meet?
Will it be changed, so glorified and saintly
That we shall know it not?
Will there be nothing that will say "I love thee
And I have not forgot?"

O faithless heart, the same loved face transfigured
Shall meet me there?
Less sad, less wistful, in immortal beauty
Divinely fair.
The mortal veil, washed pure with many weepings,
Is rent away.
And the great soul, that sat within its prison,
Hath found the day.

In the clear morning of that other country,
In Paradise,
With the same face that we have loved and cherished,
He shall arise!
Let us be patient, we who mourn with weeping
Some vanished face;
The Lord has taken, but to add more beauty
And a diviner grace.

And we shall find once more, beyond earth's sorrows.
Beyond these skies,
In the fair city of the "sure foundations,"
Those heavenly eyes,
With the same welcome shining through their sweetness
That met us here;
Eyes from whose beauty God has banished weeping
And wiped away the tear.

Think of us, dearest one, while o'er life's water
We seek the land,
Missing thy voice, thy touch, and the true helping
Of thy pure hand.
Till, through the storm and tempest safely anchored,
Just on the other side,
We find thy dear face, looking through death's shadows,
Not changed, but glorified.

REPORT ON BIBLE CAUSE.

To the Synod of North Carolina:

The committee on the Bible cause would respectfully report that we have received a letter from the Rev. Thos. H. Law, D. D., the District Superintendent of the American Bible Society, expressing his regret that he cannot be present in person at this time on account of the meeting of the Synod of South Carolina, now in session. We quote the following paragraph from his letter:

"I hope you will be able to get the attention of the brethren to this matter, awaken more interest and secure more general collections. If you can just get the cause regularly presented to the churches, I think we should have no difficulty."

In pursuance of this appeal of the District Superintendent, we would say:

First. That the cause itself should claim the earnest attention of every one who loves the word of God especially every minister, who feels so deeply the responsibility of the sacred trust committed to his hands, the glorious gospel which "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Our General Assembly has invoked the attention of all our ministers to this matter by its pronounced action in engaging with the American Bible Society in its work of Bible distribution, and commending so strongly as it does, the society, to the prayers and sympathy of the whole Church and making it a separate item for our Christian benevolence. We would especially call attention to the following recommendation adopted in the report at the last meeting of Nashville:

"That the Assembly repeat its cordial endorsement of the purpose of the Bible Society to place a Bible, the whole inspired word of God in the hands of every child who can read. * * * It is of profound importance that the rising generation should read at home and study directly in the Sunday-school the word of God."

Second. We would say that in order to awaken more interest in this matter your committee would call the attention of all our ministers to the abundant facts and material at command for making this important cause, both plain and pleasing to their people. The manual of the American Bible Society, together with a number of small pamphlets, can be had free upon application to the Rev. Thos. H. Law, D. D., Spartanburg, S. C., or to the Bible House, New York city, while for the sum of five cents the large and interesting annual report of the society can be procured each year. Facts constitute the fuel for the flames of interest which we should love to see enkindled.

Third. We would say that, earnest attention and a fair measure of information concerning the society and its world-wide work will secure the desired result in larger and more general and cheerful offerings to this cause and this is a most pressing need as appears from the exhibition made in the special column recently raised in our statistical reports. There are three hundred and twenty-seven churches in the bounds of Synod, only seventy-nine contributed during the year ending April 1st, 1894, and the total amount given was only $465. This is in deplorable contrast with the amount estimated and recommended at the last meeting of Synod, viz: one thousand dollars. Six churches in the Presbytery of Concord contributed $57; twenty-two churches in the Presbytery of Fayetteville contributed $103; nineteen churches in the Presbytery of Mecklenburg contributed $107; twelve churches in the Presbytery of Orange contributed $74; nine churches in the Presbytery of Wilmington contributed $51. The largest amount contributed by a single church was $44 reported from the First church, Raleigh. It is interesting and important to compare the collections for the last four years. By this we find that while there has been a slight increase in the number of churches there has been a decrease in the amounts contributed. In 1891 fifty churches in the Synod gave $643; in 1892 seventy-five churches gave $536; in 1893 seventy-three churches $419; in 1894 seventy-nine churches gave $465.

Your committee would make the following recommendations:

1. That the Presbyteries be urged to make this cause more prominent at their regular meetings and especially that they make it a part of the duty of their Presbyterial agents to forward in each case a copy of the annual written report to the chairman of Synod's committee on Bible cause.

2. That our ministers be urged to inform themselves and their people more thoroughly concerning the work of the American Bible Society and our relation to it.

3d. That as far as possible the collections for this cause be taken in all our churches at the time named for it by the General Assembly, the third Sabbath in October or as soon thereafter as practicable.

ROBT. E. CALDWELL,
REV. J. HENRY SMITH,
R. P. DICK,
Committee.

THE EXTREME OF UNBELIEF.

BY REV. DUNLOP MOORE, D. D.

I received, lately, from a young man, who was quite unknown to me, a respectful communication in which he requested me to give him some satisfactory proof that such a person as Jesus Christ ever lived. He said that the statements of the New Testaments were sufficient for most people, and that others were content with the Old Law; that there must have been some fire to make such a great smoke, but he wanted to get hold of something more tangible. He said that he had learned that the books of the New Testament did not appear till long after the death of the Apostles, and that the passage in the Jewish historian Josephus, in which reference was made to Jesus Christ is not genuine, and that he could find nothing in any Roman history accessible to him in which mention was made of the things described in the Bible. He thought it strange, too, that the teaching of Jesus was entirely oral, and that he left no writings. The last difficulty that he instanced was that the Jews, the chosen people, among whom Christ lived, "almost unanimously deny him." He concluded in these words: "My Christian friends advise faith, but I am not constructed that way, and ask for more; and if you can give it to me, I will try to spread it among others of my way of thinking."

A Christian friend of the writer of this remarkable letter advised him to consult me in regard to his difficulty in believing that Jesus Christ had ever lived. This was the reason assigned by him for addressing me. Of course, I did not leave this letter unanswered; and it has occurred to me that a brief paper expanding somewhat my reply might be useful to not a few in these days of doubt and unbelief.

The insignificant appearance, in its beginning, of that spiritual kingdom of which Jesus was the founder is shadowed forth in the Gospel, under the image of a minute grain of mustard seed. "Jesus Christ," says Pascal, "lived in such obscurity (using the word in the worldly sense) that historians who record none but important events scarcely discerned him." But he was not quite overlooked by them. When Tacitus wrote his Annals he little thought that a time would come when the most highly valued record in them would be this short sentence: "The founder of this name (Christians) was Christus, who, in the reign of Tiberius, was put to death by the procurator Pontius Pilatus." (Annals XV. 44). Tacitus testifies, in his account of the burning of Rome in the reign of Nero, that, some thirty years after Christ's death, a vast multitude of his followers suffered the most cruel tortures in Rome. If we had only this passage in Tacitus to refer to, it ought to prevent any reasonable person from doubting whether Jesus Christ ever lived. Suetonius, too, the contemporary of Tacitus, in his life of the Emperor Claudius, has occasion to make mention of Christ, whom he calls Chrestus; and in his life of Nero he refers to the punishments that Christians had to endure. Pliny, the Roman governor of Bithynia, in a letter written 106 A. D., to the Emperor Trajan, gives interesting information regarding the Christians in that region. Christ as a real person was the object of their supreme reverence. The famous Syriac scholar Cureton published, in his "Syriac Gleanings" (Spicilegium Syriacum), a Syrian letter by the heathen philosopher Mara to his son Serapion, which was written about the year 73 A. D. This letter even unbelieving critics allow to be genuine. In it Jesus is compared to Socrates and Pythagoras, and the Jews are declared to have been justly punished for killing him. The destruction of Jerusalem had taken place shortly before the writing of this letter.

As to the celebrated passage concerning Jesus in the eighteenth book of the "Antiquities of Josephus," its genuineness has been long questioned. I think that, on the whole, Renan has judged of it correctly when he says that he believes it to be authentic, though retouched by a Christan hand and modified in some of its expressions. Josephus, in a passage whose genuineness cannot be justly impugned, makes mention of the forerunner of Christ, John the Baptist, and relates how Herod unjustly put this righteous man to death. ("Antiq." XVIII. 5). Josephus again, in his "Antiquities" XX. 9), describes the death of James, whom he speaks of as "the brother of Jesus, called the Christ." Schaff states that this passage is "genuine." He concedes that the words "called the Christ" may be an interpolation. But the testimony of Josephus to James being the brother of Jesus still remains after these words are cancelled.

My correspondent said that "the Jews almost unanimously deny Jesus." If he had affirmed that, as a nation, they reject him, he would have stated a fact. That Jesus was a real person, and performed wonderful works, and was crucified, is what the Jews of old freely admitted. What if the Jews rejected him? Was not their rejection of the Messiah foretold by their prophets? He who attentively reads the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah in the Bible of the Jews, will not find in their rejection of Jesus anything to militate against his claims.

It strikes me that the fact that no writing ascribed to Jesus as its author has been put among the documents forming the New Testament is a point in favor of the genuiness of that collection. It certainly tends to show that the Christian Scriptures were not the work of men who gave a loose rein to their imaginations. The four Gospels that describe the life of Christ belong to the class of writings which were uncoutradicted in the Christian Church. The Church in all ages is a witness to them. The internal and external evidence of their genuineness is of the most varied and satisfactory character. The attempt of the very learned critic, Baur, to assign their composition to a later date than the days of the Apostles has proved an utter failure.

New evidence of the early recognition of the gospels has come to light of late years. We have the witness of a Gnostic heretic like Basilides that the latest of the Gospels—that of John—was appealed to as authoritative when multitudes of those who had associated with that Apostle were still living. And we may ask with John Stuart Mill, an avowed unbeliever, "Who among his disciples or among the proselytes was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or of imagining the life and character revealed in the Gospels?" Another Rationalist, Lecky, speaking of the life of Christ, as given in the Gospels, declares that "it may be truly said that the simple record of three short years of active life has done more to regenerate and soften mankind than all the disquisitions of philosophers, and than all the exhortations of moralists." Even those who are outside the pale of the Christian Church are constrained to admit that the character and life and sayings of Jesus, as presented in the Gospels, are their own best witness, and need no testimony beyond themselves.

We are accustomed to regard the New Testament as a single book. It is of great importance to the Christian argument to bear in mind that it is really a collection of memoirs and letters, and one prophetical writing, composed by at least eight different persons. Each of these is a distinct and independent witness. The value of the testimony of the epistles of the New Testament to the life and work of Christ cannot be overestimated. Take one epistle—the first to the Corinthians. Can any one mention a writing in all antiquity that has better external attestation than this epistle? Baur would not dispute its genuineness. There are marks of truthfulness in it which every intelligent man can appreciate. This epistle contains many weighty statements regarding the life and work of Christ, and, indeed, the essence of Christianity. If it is a credible document, then Christianity is divine.

What is the moral condition of mankind where the influence of Jesus is but faintly felt. The sceptical author of the "History of Morality" freely confesses that as a mighty moral power in the world the influence of Jesus surpasses that of all philosophers and moralist. He is the light of the world. Carlyle has truly said that Christianity, "under any theory of it, in the believing or unbelieving mind, must ever be regarded as the crowning glory, or, rather, the life and soul, of our whole modern culture." And with such evidence of the beneficent influence of the religion of Jesus, there are men groping in darkness, and professing to be in doubt whether such a person as Jesus Christ ever really lived on our earth! This is the extreme of unbelief. A very little inquiry should suffice to dissipate it.—Presbyterian.

The Story of a Silver King.

The story of the career of H. A. W. Tabor, of Colorado, is a picturesque and romantic one, interspersed with episodes of both comedy and pathos, and conveying some lessons that have general interest and importance. He was born and raised in New England, where he learned the trade of a stonecutter. From there he went to Kansas during the slavery troubles, and engaged in farming, but gave a good share of his time to politics, as an ardent friend of the free state cause. Then he moved to Colorado and opened a small store at Leadville, being then so poor that his wife did washing. One day he casually "grub-staked" two ragged and hungry miners, and they "struck it rich," and he became a millionaire before he knew it. He was the principal owner of the Little Pittsburg mine, which yielded over $4,000,000 in two years; he bought the Crysolite which yielded $3,000,000 in less than one year; then a part of the Robert E. Lee which yielded as much more; and then the Matchless, which paid him $2,000 per day, and at times as much as $35,000. Everything that he touched turned to money, and he accumulated "wealth beyond the dreams of avarice." He built magnificent blocks of houses in Denver, and established various business enterprises; and at length he was sent as a Senator to Washington, where he promoted the gayety of nations by wearing night shirts that cost $250 apiece.

That was only a little over a dozen years ago, and to-day Tabor is a bankrupt, and an assignee has possession of the small remnants of his once colossal fortune. For the past five or six years he has known nothing but reverses. His property steadily dwindled in value, his speculations all proved disappointing, and the payment of high rates of interest upon money borrowed in the vain hope of turning the tide once more in his favor has finally forced him to capitulate, and placed him practically where he was when he kept the little store at Leadville, and his wife, from whom he has meanwhile been divorced, was helping him along by doing the service of a mining camp laundress. This goes to show in a striking way how riches take to themselves wings and fly away. When Tabor was at the zenith of his marvelous success, it did not seem possible that he could ever become a poor man again; and yet a comparatively short period has sufficed to strip him of his great estate, and scatter it in all directions. It is so with these big fortunes much oftener than we stop to think. They have no assurance of permanence. The causes that produce them are not stronger than the influences that operate to undermine and dissipate them. In cases where they do not, as in this instance, collapse during the lifetime of the original possessor, those who inherit them are rarely able to preserve them; and thus, apparently, by force of some unknown law, they are redistributed and made a part of the common fund of society in which every man has such a share as he can acquire by his diligence and intelligence.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

THE HUMAN HEART.

The human heart is a tiny ship,
On without rest it steers;
On, straight on, to its haven bright,
Laden with hopes and fears.

Life is the ocean deep and wide,
And fate the winds that storm
And drive and stir the gloomy clouds,
Clouds that our teardrops form.

The sail is made of visions fair,
And honor, the upright mast;
Well, little ship, if these stand firm,
Through strong and sudden blast!

Desires move the rudder small;
Love is the magnet strong;
The compass, friendship, plainly shows
If e'er the course be wrong.

Around each dangerous rock and reef
Steers judgment, quick to mark;
The eye upon the magnet fixed
Is pilot of the bark.

Sail, little ship, with calm, sure trust;
With joy and courage sail;
In the safe haven shalt thou rest,
In spite of flood and gale.

MAGAZINES.

McClure's Magazine for December is the Christmas number and is very attractive, opening with the second paper of Napoleon Bonaparte, finely illustrated. Dikkon's Dog, A Christmas Story, by Dorothy Lundt. H. J. W. Dane, gives a Morning with Bret Harte. Some Impressions and Facts are given of Mr. Moody, by Prof. Henry Drummond which is exceedingly interesting. Other articles are found that make up a number worthy of its name. Price, $1.50 a year. Address S. S. McClure, Limited, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Admiration and Love.

Most people prefer admiration to love. The Devil knew it when he tempted Jesus in the wilderness. Jesus knew it when the group of disciples returned from their first journey, flushed with success, and boasting about the evil spirits that were subject to them. The man who gets admiration feels that he has a power which others do not have. He walks on air while it lasts. It is the most buoyant thing in the world.

Perhaps it is not unfair to suppose that the disciples were so human and natural that they remembered more plainly the way the crowds stood in awe of them, than the longing and loving way in which the healed ones looked up at them. There is, no doubt, something in people's admiration which Jesus would have liked to have. But the men whom he chose to be with him seem to have ministered very little to that desire. Probably neither Peter nor John was graceful at a compliment, while, if Jesus could only have had six of those keen-minded and well-bred lawyers to understand him, it seems as if they might have done it better than the twelve apostles. The disciples failed to appreciate their Master over and over again, but they were walking in the only way that would ever lead to real appreciation, slow and difficult as it was. With a troop of flattering philosophers around him, perhaps Jesus had never been Christ. One of the greatest outcomes of his temptations was the preference of love to admiration.

Those who love us do not give us half the occasion to feel proud of ourselves that those who admire us will. Admiration is pointed and tangible. It can be put into a word and handed over to the admired one, and he knows just what he is getting. But love is such a general, indefinite, stammering sort of virtue, that it bungles things often, and has not as much grace and tact as its more presentable relative. Men like to be loved, but when some one is slow and blundering in expressing it (for to express it you have to learn a half-dozen other languages beside that of the tongue), they are forced to own up that those who admire them are more practically useful than those who love them. So they are—for a little while. But admiration in the long run, (and thousands have been quietly crowded on to the discovery of it,) is to love and fellow-feeling what lightning is to the sun,—it shows better while it lasts, but it does not make anything grow.

We can look over our friends, and see that some admire us for some success or skill,—not for ourselves, but for something we possess. If those powers depart, we have to admit the likelihood that the friends will depart with them. Love, slower-footed, stays around after all is over, and does last offices for men only because they will not let it do the first ones. Admiration always keeps in reserve a large power of being disappointed in us. When it begins to disclose it, men long for a little love. But if a man, stakes his satisfaction on admiration all through the healthy years, he must not look for love when the years of weakness come.—Sunday School Times.

Papal Decrease.

A Roman Catholic layman, in his "seventh decade," has published some facts in the Westminster Gazette which throw a flood of light on the foolish boasts of Cardinal Vaughan. It appears that in the United Kingdom, as a whole, the Catholics are now a million and a half less than they were fifty years ago. In 1841 there were 1,000,000 Roman Catholics in Great Britain, and 6,000,000 in Ireland, making a total 7,000,000. In 1891 the British Roman Catholics had increased to 2,000,000, chiefly of Irish immigration, while the Irish Roman Catholics had decreased to 3,500,000, making total for the United Kingdom of 5,500,000, that is to say, 1,500,000, less than in 1841, although the population had increased in the interval by 11,000,000.

That is to say, in 1841 the Roman Catholics were twenty-six per cent of the whole population, but in 1891 they had dropped down to sixteen per cent. The total population of Great Britain now is 34,000,000, among whom the Roman Catholics are not more than 2,000,000—1,750,000 in England and Wales, and 250,000 in Scotland. Only six per cent. of the inhabitants of this island are Roman Catholics, and most of them are Irish immigrants. There never was a greater journalistic delusion than the notion that Romanism is increasing in England. Why General Booth alone within the last twenty years has gathered around him a larger number of adherents than all the cardinals, converts, peers, perverts, and foreign orders put together! No wonder that the venerable Catholic layman, who writes to the Westminster Gazette, is disgusted with Cardinal Vaughan's braggadocio, sensational ism and extravagance.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Rubies, Emeralds, and Opals.

In addition to being the most sought for, the diamond is generally supposed to be the most precious of the jewels of the earth. This, however, is not so. The ruby, at the present time, is far more valuable. Large rubies of perfect color being very rare, their value increases in even greater proportion than in the case of diamonds. Thus, a perfect ruby of five carats weight will be worth ten times as much as a diamond of the same weight.

The ruby originally came from Asia Minor, but was afterwards obtained from Peru. Of late years, however, nearly all our rubies have come from Burmah, where there are large mines. The scarcity, coupled with the small size of rubies, (compared with the diamond), make this stone very valuable. A ruby of one carat weight is worth from $70 to $100, according to the purity of the stone. But a ruby weighing four carats is worth from $2,000 to $2,300. A perfect stone of a greater weight than four carats is a great rarity.

Among the imperial crown jewels of Russia is the supposed largest ruby known. It was brought from China. The largest ever brought to England weighed over 47 carats, and was sold for $100,000.

The emerald is a great stone, and occurs in seven different shades. It is found chiefly in the south of Asia and Mexico, those from the latter place being often of a better color and superior to the Asiatic stones. The emerald is extremely liable to flaws, so that a really perfect stone is rare, and on that account much prized. There are eleven emeralds in the English crown, and the Czarina of Russia has a necklace consisting of forty magnificent emeralds.

The finest and most numerous collection of this jewel is said to be that belonging to the Spanish crown. They are of American origin. The Duke of Devonshire is the possessor of the largest emerald in the world. It is two inches in diameter, weighs nearly nine ounces, and is of the finest color. In consequence of the large increase in the value of emeralds of late years (owing to the scarcity) the Devonshire emerald, as it is called, must be worth a fabulous amount.

The opal is superstitiously supposed to bring bad luck to its owner. The cause of this superstition is rather obscure. It may be due to the nature of the stone it self. The opal is covered with an infinite number of small cracks in the surface, and sometimes these enlarge, splitting the stone in pieces. Thus a very valuable jewel may, in a short time, become absolutely worthless—certainly a stroke of bad luck for the possessor of the gem.

The stone is milky-white or yellowish-white in color, and is found in various localities—Arabia, Ceylon, Mexico, Hungary, America, and others. One of the finest opals ever discovered is that worn in the cap of the Chinese Minister at Washington. It is as large as a pigeon's egg.—The Whole Family.

"There's No Harm in It."

Why do you say this? It is because you really and honestly think so? Perhaps, on the contrary, conscience whispers that there is harm in it; but you wish to do it, and therefore you do your best to persuade yourself that it is not wrong. Is it so?

This is dangerous work. On the very face of it, this saying looks ill. It does not seem like the saying of one who is resolutely set against evil; rather it shows a wish to go as near as possible to what is wrong. But we ought to treat sin just as we do a contagious disease; that is, to keep as far from it as possible, for fear of infection.

Do not look with a longing eye at things which you half suspect to be wrong. Do not try to persuade yourself, against your better judgment, that there is no harm in them. The Bible rule is this, "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." Go by that rule. Take the word of God for your guide, seek the Lord Jesus as your Saviour, ask for the Holy Spirit, live watchfully, and be much in prayer. This is the better, wiser, happier course.

What Shall We Do.

BY REV. H. H. HAWES, D. D.

"In" the discusssion about the formula of baptism, have we not gotten "into" a muddle? Must we now say "into the name of" etc? What then are we to do with our Confession of Faith, Chap. 28, Sec. 2? There, the words still remain: "in the name of" etc. So in our Larger and Shorter Catechisms. Here are three against one—the Confession of Faith, the Larger Catechism and the Shorter Catechism, against the New Directory. If we obey the latter we cannot adhere to the other three. True in Matt. 28:19 we read: Baptizontes autous eis to onoma, etc. Our Lord was stating the authority under which His ministers were to work. In His name—by His authority, they were to baptize. If this be not so, where does the authority come from?

Is the preposition "eis" to guide us to, or into the upsetting of our Standards? I In Matthew it has no less than eighteen, in Mark, ten, in Luke, twelve, in John, thirteen, in Acts, eighteen different translations, in our version. Out of all these, is "into" to rule? If so, why? And what am I do with my ordination vows, which bind me to abide by our standards? I must abide by my sacred vows! Therefore I cannot accept the new ritual on this point. Not only so, but I cannot accept it because I do not believe there is either sense or right in this change, not meaning any disrespect to others of contrary views. The Church would better guard against the change fever now raging.—Christian Observer.

Doubled Minded.

He was a double-minded man, keen, sharp, shrewd. He was not an irreligious man. He feared God a little, and loved the world a great deal. He wished very much to go to heaven when he died, but he wanted to get all he could out of this world while he was here. He was willing to serve any party who would pay well for his services. He was everybody's man. He did not wish to offend any one, so he on both sides of the question. He was not narrow; he would not let his religion stand in the way of his worldly advancement. His motto was, Look out for No. 1. He thought religion was a good thing to save a man from hell, but not exactly a thing to suffer for; at least, not if he could help it. He was liberal; he was willing to make concessions to the religious prejudices of others, provided that the prejudiced people would help him along. He was ready to pocket his scruples, provided he could pocket a little gold along with them. He got left. His name was Balaam. He is dead. He died long, long ago. He left no successors. Of course, not.—Baltimore Christian Advocate.

NERVES AND DIGESTION.

Greatly Improved.

After less than a month's trial Rev. W. A. Wright writes as follows:

Summerville, S. C., Sept. 20th, 1894.

Dear Sir:—I am much pleased with the Electropoise. I used it according to directions and my nerves are greatly improved and also my digestion. I can stand twice as much exercise and am gaining in flesh daily. Wish I had gotten an Electropoise at an earlier date.

Yours truly,

(REV.) W. ASBURY WRIGHT.

This experience was given after less than a month's trial. Shall we mail you a circular with hundreds of such testimonials, as well as an explanation of the working of the instrument. It is sent free on application.

I Know Him.

John gives this as the sum and substance of practical Christianity. And Paul says: "I know whom I have believed." Christ comes to us as a person. He asks us to take him as our teacher and Savior, not merely to believe in what he says or in what inspired apostles say about him, but to believe in him. This, and this only, is living faith. A man may be as orthodox in doctrine as the chiefest of the apostles, but until he knows Christ individually, enshrines him in his heart as a bride her husband, or a mother her child, he is a theologian merely, and not a Christian.

The great charm of this personal faith is its simplicity. The babe knows its mother, and trusts in her because it knows her. The babe cannot tell how tall the mother is, or how much she weighs, but it reads love in her eyes and rests sweetly in her arms. And Christ tells us that we are to be converted and become as little children. We are to say as a child would: "Jesus died for me. I know, therefore, that he is both great and good. He is able to save me. He wants to save me, and I will take him as my Savior." The unlettered Christian may not understand the Thirty-nine Articles, or even the five points of Calvinism, but as long as he can say, "I know him," he is thoroughly orthodox. I do not mean by this to disparage written creeds, but only to emphasize the superior excellence of the creed of John and Paul—"I know him," "I know whom."

It is well to know what we believe, and to be able to state it clearly and concisely. But there is no vitality, no living force, in such a creed. It expresses merely the state of our opinions, the progress we have made in our knowledge of things. But a living faith is far different. An eminent preacher, commenting on 2 Tim. i. 12, says: "Such belief is not mental attitude, but moral appropriation. It is the bee clinging to the clover blossom and sucking out the sweet. We are determined by the person we believe in. Belief makes him mine. It breaks down his walls and widens him out until he contains me. His thoughts reappear as my thoughts; his ways, manners, feelings, hopes, impulses, motives, become mine. I know whom I have believed. We make our ordinary creeds, and revise and amend and repeal them. But personal creeds make us, revise, amend and repeal us. No picture of a friend can be accurate enough to take the friend's place or do his work. No idea of a person can ever be enough like the person to serve as a substitute. Knowing what God is to perfection would never become the equivalent of knowing God."

In these days of conflicting creeds and clashing theologies, let us cling to our child-like faith in a personal Savior.—Herald and Presbyter.

"Scorching" Not the Highest Attainment.

Ability to give pain is not a high order of accomplishment. The person who sets out to offend or to hurt another, will find the world full of reinforcements for his purpose. There are persons who will boast far more of having written a "scorching" letter, than of having written an apologetic, conciliatory, or healing one. And yet the latter act, if boasting were in order at all, would be by far the more admirable, because it is infinitely the more difficult of attainment. The man who would be generous toward an antagonist who seemed to deserve the "scorching" is more likely to be a man of power than one who gives less study to the turning of wrath by a soft answer. Severe words are often necessary. But the glory of giving pain through them is quite a different thing from the glory of administering kind reprost. And it is well, when one is tempted to exult in his power of scoring his fellow-men, to ask himself just what it is in his exultation that is laudable and worthy of prosecution.—Sunday School Times.

We see in the present movement of individual cups an uncalled-for emphasizing of the divisions of scciety, and a mistaken concession to the too prevalent tendency toward cleavage on personal or class lines. The danger in this direction to our unity as a people, no one need be told, is very great. It is a danger that threatens Church and State alike. The communion-table has been hitherto jealously guarded as the most powerful protest against this whole spirit, as the strongest possible witness that the Church is one from top to bottom, from centre to circumference—that it is a brotherhood within whose sacred circle no distinction of black or white, rich or poor, male or female, young or old, bond or free, should be recognized. Where prejudice or patronage or pride of purse have been permitted to have their way in this matter, it has been felt by every true-hearted, unsophisticated disciple that the religion of the lowly Nazarene had been misrepresented. Caste-barriers in India have been prostrated at the communion table. Shall we erect them here in America?—Herald.

Holding Congregations.

We would like to give emphasis to the subjoined paragraph. It contains a wholesome truth, and we commend it to the sober consideration of all whom it concerns:

"We suspect that those preachers who are driven to extremities—to their wits' ends, say—for novel and interesting themes with which to 'hold' their congregations might learn a profitable lesson from those preachers whose one unbroken theme is religion, and whose congregations hold themselves. There is probably the relation of cause and effect here. Congregations fed on religion usually have a healthy habit of going to church, and giving to make the church go. Congregations accustomed to the caprices of a caterer's diet are likely to go only when there is to be a 'spread,' and to give, not from principle, but only on persuasion."—Dr. I. M. Atwood, in Baltimore Christian Advocate.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address:

Rev. W. G. Vardell, calls attention, in the Christian Observer, to the fact that his post-office is incorrectly given in the Assembly's Minutes. It should be Newberne, North Carolina.

THE COLLECTION FOR DECEMBER IS FOR WORK AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Geneva Church:—Rev. C. N. Wharton, writes: We have had a precious season of grace here during the last two weeks. Rev. F. D. Thomas, the former pastor, preached twice a day for a week. His preaching was attractive, forcible and with power and was accompanied with the Holy Spirit. Bro. Thomas left us on the 19th, but it was thought best by the session not to close the meeting then, and the pastor continued the services two days longer. Six young people made a profession of faith and others were deeply moved. To God be all the praise.

Durham:—Rev. William Black, the Chairman of the Synod's Committee of Home Missions, recently paid a visit to Durham, which will long be remembered by the Christian people of that busy and growing town. On November 18th, he began a series of meetings in the Presbyterian church, holding services twice a day, and from the beginning large crowds attended the services. Bro. Black's preaching was "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." Many from other churches were attracted by his earnest, forcible sermons. God's people were greatly stimulated, backsliders were reclaimed and sinners were born again. On Sunday, Dec. 2nd, twenty-two were added to the Presbyterian church upon profession and four by letter. Some who made profession at the meeting will go to other churches.

Albemarle Presbytery:—Adjourned meeting at Synod: At this meeting, Rev. C. M. Payne, D. D., was received from Concord Prebytery, and a call from the Washington church accepted by him, and Revs. Johnston, Summerell and Hines, appointed a committee to install him during the third week in November.

The Agent of Home Missions was instructed to insure the property of Second church, Raleigh. Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff, resigned his work as evangelist of Lenoir and Craven counties—and was granted permission to labor outside the bounds of Presbytery, and the following resolution was adopted:

"In accepting the resignation of our brother, Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff, as evangelist of Lenoir and Craven counties, the Presbytery of Albemarle would record its sympathy with him, in the sickness which in his family and in his own person, renders his resignation necessary.

We commend him as a faithful expounder of the Word, a man of pure life and cheerful spirit. And wherever he may labor, we pray God's blessing upon him and his."

Permission was granted to Bro. Hines to organize a church at Roanoke, and Bro. Thomas and Elder Bray, of Nahalah were appointed to assist him in this duty. Oxford church was given permission to change the terms of their call for their pastor. Bro. Thacker was requested to give one Sabbath per month to Louisburg.

Revs. C. N. Wharton and W. T. Walker were appointed a permanent Advisory Committee on Home Missions with Dr. Morton as agent. Presbytery adjourned to meet in New Bern, April 10th, 1895, 7.30 p. m.

J. N. H. SUMMERELL,
Stated Clerk.

Buffalo Church:—On last Sunday this church joined the Extra-cent-a-day group. It is a historic country church and a mother of churches. In recent years its strength has been greatly reduced by removals. Yet in its weakness it liberally subscribed about $50 to Bro. Miller's salary. See Zech. 4:10 again.

EGBERT W. SMITH.

Refreshings in Laurinburg Church:—On yesterday, December 9th, a meeting of eight days closed with the celebration of the Lord's Supper in the Laurinburg church. The pastor was assisted by Rev. A. N. Ferguson, whose clear, forcible, earnest presentation of the "Old, old story of Jesus and His love," was very much enjoyed by our people.

As a result the church has been edified and refreshed, and thirteen added to her membership by profession of their faith in Christ. These thirteen are all young people, children of the convenant. For these tokens of the divine favor we thank God and take courage.

W. B. A.

Little River Church:—On yesterday, December 9th, at 11 a. m., installation service was held at Little River church. According to appointment of Presbytery, Rev. S. O. Hall conducted the service. In his usually, appropriate, effective, and impressive manner, he presented the humility that ought to characterize the minister of the gospel, and the high estimate he should place upon his calling. After which with equal impressiveness he delivered charges to pastor and people. On the same occasion the following officers were ordained and installed: Elders: William P. Villines, William R. McKee, James W. Allison. Deacons: William A. Hall, John Woods.

At 7 p. m., December 9th, Bro. Hall preached at Hillsboro, N. C., to a large and attentive audience. He was with us a short time ago, and our people were delighted with this opportunity of hearing him the second time, and hope to have him come again, to do as he has done, preach the pure gospel, with acceptance and power.

Fraternally,
H. S. BRADSHAW,

VIRGINIA.

Richmond:—The communion was observed in most of the churches on the 2d, and the following additions, are reported in the "Central." At Grace St. church, (Dr. J. Y. Fair, pastor,) there were eleven additions, four of them on profession of faith. At the Church of the Covenant five were received; two by letter, and three on profession.

Second Church, Staunton:—Dr. Wm. Cumming, the pastor, has for ten days been holding a very interesting meeting, preaching to large congregations every night. Great solemnity and earnestness pervaded the congregation, and over twenty persons have professed their faith in Christ. Dr. A. R. Cocke will assist him several days during this week.

Cook's Creek:—Rev. L. H. Paul has been assisting Rev. W. C. Hagan in a pleasant meeting and there have been fourteen additions to the church.

Ridgeway Church, (Colored):—At the adjourned meeting of Roanoke Presbytery, on Nov. 21st, Rev. Abel Davis (colored), and his congregation of Ridgeway asked for dismission to the Presbytery of Southern Virginia, of the Northern Church. Action upon the request was deferred till the stated spring meeting.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Church Organization:—The commission appointed at last meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery to organize a church at Columbus Polk county, met at that place, December 1st, and organized under very flattering circumstances. Seventeen members of the Sandy Plains church entering the new organization and three entering on profession of faith. The people seemed throughly in earnest, have a fine church lot, and appointed a building committee to proceed at once with the raising of funds for a house of worship. We of the commission exceedingly enjoyed their hospitality and were encouraged by their zeal, Rev. E. A. Sample, chairman preached and presided.

H. M. PARKER,
Clerk of Commission.

Rev. H. C. Fennel:—Who has been serving the Lowndesville church has accepted a call to Toccoa, Ga.

Greenville:—Last Friday Dr. J. R. Wilkinson and family left Greenville to go to China. Dr. Wilkinson is a surgeon of rare ability and has left a large practice to enter missionary work, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. He will put up a hospital of the most approved pattern, the money for this object being on hand awaiting his arrival in China.—Anderson Intelligencer.

MISSISSIPPI.

Natchez:—The church of Natchez has called Rev. J. R. Howerton, D. D., now in Little Rock, but it has not been reported whether he will accept or decline.

French Camp:—At a meeting held by the pastor of French Camp church for a week, there were seven additions by profession. Dr. J. A. Mecklin, preached four excellent sermons. The pastor and people are much encouraged. The Presbyterial Schools in French Camp are in more prosperous condition than ever in their history.

Central Mississippi, abounds in corn, meat and molasses. Thousands of gallons of the finest syrup have been made from Louisania cane. Some cane has matured eight of ten feet long.

ALABAMA.

Dr. Waddell:—A friend in Birmingham writes that Dr. J. N. Waddell still lies in a critical condition. Some weeks ago he fell down the steps and struck his head, causing concussion of the brain. Since then he has rallied considerably in some respects, and has been able to take food. The power of speech, however, has not returned, and his mind wanders most of the time.

Avondale:—Rev. Geo. F. Robertson, has recently held a meeting at this church, resulting in eight confessions of fath.—Alabama Presbyterian.

South Alabama Presbytery:—Met in Montgomery, November 19th. Calls were received from the Clayton and Palmyra churches for the pastoral services of Licentiate E. H. Gregory, and from Pea River, Union and Ozark churches for the pastoral services of Licentiate J. F. Ford, and from the group of churches in Monroe county for the services of Licentiate N. B K. Hamey, as evangelist. These calls having been accepted, these brethren, after examination, were solemnly ordained and set apart to the gospel ministry, by the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. In this interesting service, Rev. Paul C. Morton preached the sermon, and Rev. J. R. Burgett, D. D., of Mobile presided and offered the prayer. Three churches, Hurricane, Bayon, and Orion were dissolved.—P. P. Winn, in Southwestern Presbyterian.

KENTUCKY.

Central University:—Rev. Joseph Rennie conducted a series of services beginning Nov. 8th, and closing the 13th.

Somerset:—Rev. I. S. McElroy, has been assisting Rev. Harvey Glass for two weeks, and great good has been done. There have been twenty additions, and others will come in. This church has received about fifty this year, many of them heads of families.—Christian Observer.

Morganfield:—Bev. J. C. Caldwell was installed pastor on the fourth Sunday of November.

Lewisport:—This church was dedicated on the 3rd Sunday of November, by Rev. J. G. Patton, who preached several days during the following week. The small debt still remaining has been assumed by individuals.

GENERAL.

Bishop Atticus Haygood:—The following telegram was sent out from Atlanta on the 4th instant, to the papers: Bishop Atticus Haygood is dangerously ill at his home Oxford, Ga. He attended the Annual Conference at Rome last week, but was too ill much of the time to preside. The symptoms indicate pneumonia.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN THE FIRST FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, GREENSBORO, N. C.

DEAR BRO. RAWLINGS:—I see that the editors of the "Central Presbyterian" note that the Presbyterian congregations of the city of Richmond, Va., held a joint service in the Grace Street church on Thanksgiving day and that Dr. Kerr preached from Christ's word before Pilate. "I am a King." They add, "it was very notable and impressive that of all possible and appropriate subjects for a Thanksgiving contemplation the theme selected was the lofty and inspiring one of the "Kingship of the Kingdom of Christ," &c., &c. This leads me to drop a line or two to you in reference to our recent Thanksgiving Day in the First Presbyterian church, of Greensboro. We had no joint services on that day in our church. The Westminster Presbyterian church held joint service with the Protestant Methodist, Friends and Methodist Episcopal church, South, in that portion of the city called South Greensboro. As our Synodical Orphans' Home looks to and expects a contribution on that day, and our Synod "urges upon all our churches to take up a collection, or otherwise raise a contribution for the Orphans' Home on Thanksgiving Day," and especially as there was no service in either the Methodist Episcopal church, South, or the Baptist church, we held our usual service, and we had a congregation nearly as large as we have on Sabbath evenings, indeed, the church was nearly full. When I announced my text, I said that perhaps some might be disappointed, as the theme to-day would nor be, as it had generally been year after year, and for many years of a national outlook and topic, indicating some of the various and manifold tokens of God's providential favor to us as a people. I said that day—especially as we had just closed a series of protracted services, and on the preceding Sabbath we had enjoyed an unusually interesting and very large communion, in which a goodly number had sat with us for the first time. I wished to turn their attention not from those other tokens of God's mercy, but rather to other grounds and reasons for thanksgiving—not so much to the riches of God's material and earthly blessings scattered in bountiful profusion in our happy homes in this free and favored land, but to the other and better riches offered, bestowed and enjoyed through the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. "The unsearchable riches of Christ." (Eph. 3:8). "Riches" for want of which no national blessings could compensate, and in the possession of which we are rich and blessed for time and eternity. I specified seven of those unsearchable riches—which I shall not enumerate, but leave to every devout and thankful child to recall as he kneels at the throne of grace.

Our collection for the Orphans' Home, at the church, and what was sent in both before and after, to Wm. S. Moore (one of our elders and a tender and devoted friend of the orphan,) amount to some sixty or more dollars, with a large box of valuables gathered and forwarded in time to reach and gladden the orphan children—at Barium Springs—on Thanksgiving day.

LOWERING THE STANDARD.

In the recent meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery a resolution to this effect was introduced, viz:

That the Church search out pious, godly, men, apt to teach, with an abundant supply of common sense, and deep and sincere consecration, and ordain them to the ministry.

This is not the exact wording; but in the general idea. It is hardly necessary to say that it was promptly voted down. It would have been voted down in any Presbytery North and South. We are a very jealous people for a high standard in the Gospel ministry. Anything that manifestly tends to the lowering of our standard raises our bristles. And well may we with jealous care guard against any thing that has even the appearance of admitting to our ranks ministers who are poorly qualified to preach the gospel. The other two great denominations by the side of whom we labor are advancing their standard constantly. It would, in the face of this fact alone, be suicidal for us at this present time to take a backward step.

Yet our Church would seem to be on the very eve of such a thing at this present time. Of all the articles I have read on this subject in our recent Church papers not one called attention to the fact that the proposed amendments to our "Book of Church Order" did in fact lower the standard for ordination. It is proposed to license the candidate at the expiration of his first year in the seminary, and then require him to go two or three years longer. The object is that he may preach with the authority of the Church during vacation. Not stopping at present to question the wisdom of such a course we will pass on to consider the most important phase of the whole question, viz: The Lowering of the Standard.

The licensing act reads: "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, * * * we do license you as a probationer for the holy ministry, to preach the gospel, under the direction of Presbytery, wherever God in His providence may call you; etc. Now the very thing which the candidate is licensed to do, is "to preach the gospel." He goes out and preaches. The Church is edified. The probationer is satisfied. The church calls him as its pastor. The call comes to Presbytery. It is in due form (regular)? What will Presbytery say? Send the call back? On what grounds? When this question was put to a certain preacher he glibly replied, "Because he is not yet fit to be ordained." "Not fit?" the people will say, then why did you authorize him to come and preach the gospel to us? If he is not yet fit to be ordained neither is he fit to preach the gospel. "Will Presbytery say He is only on trial?" The people will answer yes, and he has been tried and proved satisfactory." He was to be tried not before Presbytery, but before the people. He was not to satisfy Presbytery, but the people. The only two things Presbytery is concerned with are his soundess in the faith and his qualifications to preach. When they license a candidate they express themselves as satisfied on those points. There will be but one thing for Presbytery to do consistent with what it has done, and that is to proceed to his ordination. This would be a manifest lowering of our standard.

Some one will ask, What then is to be done with our candidates during vacation? "Let them preach. It is nowhere said in the word of God, or our Book," that a man must be licensed before he can preach. Any elder, any deacon, or any private member may get up and preach, or exhort as much as he may choose, and there is no power on earth that has the right to stop him.

Some one will ask, "Suppose he preaches heresy?" I answer that he had better preach it without the authority of the Church than with it.

In conclusion allow me to say, that no kind of makeshift is going to solve the problem of demand and supply. Unless we have the licentiates to ordain there can be no ordinations. Unless we have candidates to license there can be no licensures. But if we have candidates to license, we will also have licentiates to ordain. So the whole question is based on the number of candidates. Let us then pray the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth more laborers.

W. C. C.

TO THE MINISTERS AND CHURCHES OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Two urgent matters—only two.

(1) At the last regular meeting, your committee of Home Missions reported that we were compelled to incur a debt of about $200 to meet some special emergencies in Rev. R. P. Pell's field. The Presbytery authorized your committee to make a special appeal to all our churches for a contribution of five cents per member to liquidate this debt. This appeal was promptly made by postal card to each of our churches. Result—only two churches—Hickory and Lenoir have responded. More than three months have passed away and that debt is pressing us. Will not all those churches which have already taken this special collection promptly remit to our treasurer? Is it asking too much to meekly request that those churches which have not taken such collection do so immediately and also promptly remit?

(2) Our Presbytery made larger appropriations for Presbyterial Home Missions at last spring meeting—by several hundred dollars—than has been done in several years; and so far, our churches have contributed less than they have in sometime, for lo these many years. Result: Brethren who are depending upon these appropriations are pressed down almost beyond measure with debt—that dire necessity just simply made inevitable. The good name of some of these brethren as honest debt-paying gentlemen is now in jeopardy and they are calling loudly upon your committee to borrow the money, settle for the Presbytery and save the good name of individual ministers. This distressing situation is growing worse every month. It could be entirely relieved by the close of this month by a collection taken in every church. Will you take it?

In behalf of the committee,

C. A. MUNROE,
Chairman.

OUR CHRISTMAS GIFTS. TO WHOM?

The General Assembly's Treasury of Home Missions will lack only $2,500 of being able to pay seventy-five missionary ministers and teachers (in the Indian Territory in the southwest and west) the last quarter's salary for 1894 in full. These missionaries have been faithfully at work and their work has been blessed. In the next fifteen days our two hundred thousand church-members will almost surely spend two hundred thousand dollars in giving Christmas presents to our friends and in other Christmas enjoyments.

Now cannot five hundred of us unite and make a Christmas, (gift shall we call it? No, but a Christmas) offering, directly to our Lord, for the support of these His ambassadors? This is not to be taken from our contributions to other branches of the Master's work. Let us give this as we give presents to our friends, a special offering of love. Imagine the cheer of these missionaries, if they be thus enabled to pay their grocery and other bills. Imagine their discouragement if the Church of God shall leave them to close this year and to begin next year in debt with their own names and the name of our King discredited—all for the lack of only $2,500. Will you be one of 500 contributors? Send from one to one hundred dollars according to ability. If you can send at once, the money will reach the missionaries by Dec. 25th.

J. N. CRAIG,
Secretary.

A Visit to the Presbyterian Orphans' Home at Barium Springs, N. C.

While in North Carolina last August it was my privilege to visit the Presbyterian Orphans' Home at Barium Springs in company with a devoted friend of the Home from Charlotte.

Mr. Boyd kindly met us at the station and after a short walk we were ushered into the beautifully furnished parlor of the Annie Louise cottage, which is occupied by the girls.

Soon after our arrival supper was announced and we were invited into the large dining hall. The tables were neatly spread with cloths, all the food was well prepared, and as nicely arranged and served as in a private family. The children all took their accustomed places in beautiful order. An officer sat at the head of each table. We were seated at Mr. Boyd's table. The children have nice table manners, and fare just as the officers do. In fact it appears as one great happy family. After all had finished eating the chairs were moved back from the table for family worship. The readiness with which the children answered questions on Bible history, asked by Mr. Boyd, was truly surprising. Thh singing was very fine, giving evidence of careful training. At an early hour the next morning the children were all astir, attending to their various duties.

After breakfast Mr. Boyd showed us over the buildings and grounds. The houses are well built and nicely furnished. Every room contains a complete set of furniture. We were especially pleased with the Infirmary which we considered a model structure. We were delighted with all that we saw, and it seemed but two things were lacking to complete the arrangements. One of these is a chapel, the other a large dining hall. There is not a room in either building suitable for an assembly room and the dining hall is crowded.

A sweet confidence exists between officers and children, while the children are obedient and happy North Carolina Presbyterians have great reason to be proud of their Orphans' Home. Is any work more directly for the Master than this? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

The pleasant hours spent at the Orphans' Home will ever be remembered by us, and we never think of the little children and the officers there without breathing a prayer to "our" Father for a blessing on them.

MRS. LAURA F. KIRKPATRICK,
Presiding Teacher at Talladega Orphanage, Alabama.

Will you kindly allow me through your paper to call attention to and if possible to prevent the repetition of an error in the statistics of the Sabbath-schools that was made in the report to the General Assembly of 1892, and has been repeated, emphasized and used as an argument in each succeeding report. In order to see the mistake let us compare the figures of the Standing Committee, (pg. 447 Minutes General Assembly 1892,) and those of the Clerk, pg. 583:

Standing Committe Reports: Schools, 2,045; Teachers, 17,962; Scholars, 145,257. The Clerk Reports: Schools, 1,602: Teachers, 16,271; Scholars, 118,852..

The committee makes an increase of teachers over 1891, 3,761; the clerk of 2,299. That is bad enough, but when the committee reports an increase of 30,680 scholars and the clerk of 1,433 over 1892, we are at a loss what to think or say. We are not able to say which are the right figures, but we do say that there ought to be at least a show of consistency in this tabulated history of our Church.

Let us turn now to the report of 1893. What do we find? A lament of an alarming decrease all along the line; of teachers the decrease is reported by the committee as 3,264 (Minutes pg. 49,) of scholars the alarming falling off of 26,255, and of schools 285. All through the report the word "Decrease" appears. What does the clerk say? He says

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson XI.

Dec. 23.—The Prince of Peace.

(Is. ix. 2–7. Commit vss. 6–7.)

Golden Text. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end. Is. ix. 7.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

The translation in the A. V is in some places so defective as to be misleading. It will facilitate study, therefore, to give the R. V.

2. The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwelt in the land of the shadow of death,
3. upon them hath the light shined. Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased their joy; they joy before thee according to the joy of harvest, as men rejoice when they divide the
4. spoil. For the yoke of his burden and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor, thou hast broken as in
5. the day of Midian. For all the armor of the armed man in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood, shall even
6. be for burning, for fuel of fire. For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty
God, Everlasting Father, Prince of
7. Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to establish it, and to uphold it with judgment and with righteousness from henceforth even forever.
The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall perform this.

First Step. The prophet was addressing a few faithful disciples, at a time when widespread defection had been punished by destruction after destruction, till the future seemed hopeless. He has reminded them of the promise given to Abraham, renewed to Israel, and again to David, that they shall be the channel of blessings to all nations. Years before he had given them the sign of the child Immanuel, and now the threats and promises made in connection with that sign have been fulfilled. "Now he renews the sign of the child that shall be born, connects it with the throne and lineage of David, and with the promise of blessing to all mankind, and ascribes to the child a government, founded in righteousness and resulting in peace, that shall become larger and larger beyond all limits of time and space." (Condensed from Willis J. Beecher in S. S. Times.)

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: The light breaking upon the darkness, vs. 2: the joy of harvest and of victory, vs. 3: the breaking off of the oppressor's yoke, vs. 4: the destruction of the implements and vestiges of war, vs. 5; the cause of this light and joy and liberty and peace, in the advent of a Divine Child to be their King, vs. 6; the spread of His kingdom, its nature, duration, and source of strength, vs. 7.

Third Step. Study with your helps points needing explanation:

Vs. 2. Walked in darkness. See preceding verse for a description of that darkness. Ruin, ignorance, despair, sin, are all included in the term darkness. Spiritual darkness, beginning in apostasy from God was its source. It refers specifically to Israel but if such the condition of Israel—God's light-bearer in the world—how much more so the condition of the whole world. "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

Vs. 3. Multiplied—in contrast to their depletion by wars and captivities.

Increased their joy. The A. V. has "not increased the joy," which mars the whole picture. The error grows out of an incorrect reading. In Hebrew lo' is "not," and low is "its" or "their." The latter is evidently the true reading.

Dividing the spoil, indicating victory. The joy of harvest and the joy of victory were the two most expressive descriptions of the joy of a people, as the joy of the bridegroom was the most expressive description of the joy of an individual.

Vs. 4. Yoke....burden....staff.... rod, all symbols of oppression. Their breaking was the symbol of deliverance.

As in the day of Midian. See Judges vi-viii. The greatest of the deliverances of Israel; in the depth of their previous depression (vi. 1-6); the multitude and power of their enemies (vii. 12); the feebleness of the opposing army (vii. 7); the completeness of the victory (viii. 10–12); the abundance of the spoil (viii. 24-26). Then it was in just the same section of country to which the present message now comes. Compare vs. 1 with Judg. vii. 23.

Vs. 5. Armor.... ..tumult. There is a difference of opinion as to the precise meaning of the terms here used. The term armor seems to mean war-boot, and the term tumult (literally earthquake) seem to refer to the trembling of the earth under the tramp of heavily booted soldiers.

The general meaning, however, is plain enough. The implements and paraphernalia of war shall be consumed in the fire, as well as its tokens—the blood-stained garments. This verse promises peace as the last promised deliverance.

Vs. 6. For—what follows is the explanation of all that has been promised.

Unto us. For our benefit, and peculiarly belonging to us, i. e., to Israel. By the new-birth, and the acceptance of His authority all may enter into the same relation of kinship and allegiance.

A child is born—a son is given. This is the sign given to Ahaz of a child born of a Virgin who should be named Immanuel, chap vii. 14. Here the meaning of the sign is developed and the fulness of the promise unfolded.

Wonderful, Counsellor. It seems better to connect these two into, "Wonderful Counsellor." All the terms are then in pairs. This name then refers to the King as great in statesmanship—that part of government that is done in the cabinet rather than in the field.

Mighty God. The term asserts unequivocally His divinity, but there is more in the original Gibbhor than in our adjective mighty. It is a noun, Mighty one, and is used of a Conqueror or Hero. Yet Divine Hero (Briggs) is too weak. It represents the King as God riding forth as Conqueror.

Everlasting Father. Referring to Him as the eternal source of all things.

Prince of Peace. This is an expression that we will never change. However, we fail to grasp fully its meaning. It is the concrete noun of which the word for government in vss. 6, 7 is the abstract. It means a general-in-chief, like the Latin Imperator, Emperor; the word government would then be empire. "Behold I have given for .... a leader and commander to the people." (Is. lv. 4.) But unlike other generals or emperors his leadership in conquest is not one of war but of peace. He conquers by peaceful means and for peaceful ends.

Vs. 7. Of the increase, etc. Compare Ps. lxxii; cxlv. 13; Is. xi. 10–12; Dan. ii. 4.

Peace. Compare Is. xi. 6–9, Ps. lxxii. 7.

Throne of David. Compare Is. xi. 1, 10; Jer. xxiii. 5.

With judgment and righteousness. Compare Is. xi. 3–5; xxxi. 1.

The zeal....will perform this, or jealousy, i. e. God's unwillingness that any should represent His authority but the One whom He hath appointed. Compare Ps. ii.

Fourth Step. Write a summary of the lesson embodying the results of your study.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word:

The Promise and its Fulfilment.

a. The blessings of the kingdom.
Light, vs. 2; John i. 9; viii. 12.
Joy, vs. 3; Luke ii. 10; Matt. ii. 10; John iii. 29.
Deliverance, vs. 4; Luke iv. 18, 21, 36; John viii. 32, 36.
Peace, vs. 5, 6, 7; Luke ii. 14; Eph. ii. 14-17.

b. The Person of the King.
His humanity, vs. 6; Is. vii. 14; Luke ii. 11; Gal. iv. 4.
His divinity, vs. 6; Matt. i. 23; John i. 1, 14.
His authority, vss. 6, 7; Matt. xxviii. 18; John i. 12.
The Wonderful Counsellor, vs. 6; Matt. vii. 28, 29; John vii. 46; Eph. i. 8–10.
The All-conqueror, vs. 6 (see note); Rev. xix. 11–16; Phil. ii. 10, 11.
His peaceful means, vss. 6, 7; Luke iv. 22; Matt. xii, 15–21; 2 Cor. x. 4, 5; Eph. vi. 14–18.

Sixth Step. The practical question for each of us as we enter upon Christmas joys is: Have we taken Him for our King, and are we seeking to spread the blessings and joys of His kingdom?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Give the scholars a brief view of the historical situation and of the purpose of the prophecy to those to whom it was spoken. Draw out the exact meaning of the prophecy first, and then consider its fulfilment in Christ, using the references in the Fifth Step

n. Man taking a journey, Mark xiii. 32-37. Watchfulness.

The Two Foundations, Matt. vii. 24-27, may be put under either 122 or 123. Other Parables, such as the Rich Fool refer to those outside of the kingdom, and others, such as the Net Cast into the Sea, to other aspects of the kingdom. There are a good many metaphors and similitudes of our Lord that are not included above. Where they are correctly given they are counted instead of an omitted Parable, as it is difficult—if not impossible—to draw an exact line between them. There is no parable of "The Sheep and the Goats." In our Lord's account of the last judgment He makes an incidental comparison to the separation of the sheep from the goats, but the metaphor is not carried out through the description of the last judgment. So the only part that is parable has no reference either to blessings or duties, but to an act of the King. The numbers in parenthesis refer to the number of parables correctly given under each.

NEW QUESTIONS.

125. Of what people precisely was the prophecy spoken and by what event in the life of Christ was it specifically fulfilled?

Note. This will be the last question.

that there has been no falling off, but a gain all along the line. Of teachers the gain is reported as 376, instead of a falling off of 3,264; of scholars the gain has been 902. Not much to be sure, but better than a decrease of 26,255.

The report of the committee of 1894. They compare with 1893, and find that we have about held our own; but they turn with sorrow to that report of 1892 and we again hear of a "decrease" of schools 371, of teachers 345, of scholars 21,909. We seem to have caught up on that "decrease" in all except the schools. If on the other hand the clerk is correct, there has been a most decided increase over 1892; of schools we do not know how many, (There is no tabulated statement of the number of schools, but there ought to be.) In the number of teachers we note an increase of 1,485 and of scholars of 15,896. To appreciate the magnitude of this error we must add the real increase, that is persuming the clerk to be correct, to the supposed decrease and we find that the report of the committee is in error 4,440 teachers and 37,805 scholars. It seems that the report of the committee of 1892 must be in error and if so let us make certain of it if possible and not have this mistake perpetuated upon our minutes. The serious question is which of these sets of figures are to be history? To two General Assemblies the clerk has reported through the published minutes that the attendance of scholars in 1892, was 118,852. Both these Assemblies 1893 and 1894, have listened (?) to and received and adopted reports that say that these figures are not correct and the attendance was 145,257 in that year. We are at a loss in this matter and wish that some one would give us light. It does look as if the General Assembly knew and cared very little for this great branch of her work, for most certainly the other statistics of the Church must be more correct than these, if not—who knows what?

McGEACHY.—Near St. Paul's, Robeson county, N. C., October 23rd, 1894, Mrs. Margaret McGeachy departed this life, having just entered upon her 93d year. She was born Sept. 9th, 1802. At her death she was the oldest member of St. Paul's church.

God gave her great strength, strength of body and strength of mind. She retained her mental vigor up to a short time of her death, but for ten years she was an invalid, the result of a fall, then she exhibited her spiritual strength in patience, submission and devotion.

CAMBLE.—At his home, in Moore county, N. C., Nov. 11th, DANIEL C. CAMBLE, in the 84th year of his life.

Mr. Camble connected with the Presbyterian church at Euphronia at the age of 18, and was ordained elder July, 1834.

He was a consistent and zealous member of the church for more than 65 years, and a faithful ruling elder for over 60 years. A late pastor of that church said to the writer that he never knew a more devout and consistent Christian. RUSTIC.

PATTERSON.—At the home of her parents, Robt. D. and Annie D, Patterson, of Orange county, N. C., on Nov. 15th, 1894, little Ella Jane (aged 7 years, 8 months, and 10 days) was called away from the sickness and sufferings of earth. "He shall gather the lambs with His arms, and carry them in His bosom."

I could no longer let her stay,
She served her mission there—
She cheered awhile your weary way;
I want her with Me here.

AT EVENTIDE.

Around my neck I gently feel
Two chubby white arms softly steal;
A little cheek like velvet fine
Is closely, lightly pressed to mine.

Two eyes, as blue as blue can be,
Look shyly, sweetly up at me;
Two lips as red as buds unblown,
With fondest kisses greet my own.

Lo, soon upon my loving breast
The tiny golden head seeks rest;
In lisping tones I faintly hear,
"Please rock me, mother, mother dear.

There, while the shadows slowly creep,
I lull my little one to sleep;
And pray, oh God, keep undefiled
For e'er my darling babe, my child.

Through all the struggle, all the strife,
Be, Father, hers a blameless life;
Be she as pure when called to rest
As when she slept on mother's breast.

A Cranberry Bog.

The men, women and children of Cape Cod earn considerable money every autumn by picking cranberries in the bogs. A large portion of the cape is bog land, which was practically worthless of a few years ago. Thousands of acres have been reclaimed, and extensive cranberry bogs have been constructed at a cost of from $250 to $300 an acre.

There is now a cranberry belt extending along the north shore of Buzzard's bay and the southern part of Cape Cod. This region has become one of the greatest cranberry-growing districts of the world.

The cranberry-growers make great preparations for the small army of people which must be housed and fed during the picking season. The accommodations are rude and primitive. Some of the pickers live in board cabins, but most of them dwell in tents. It is a curious and novel sight to see several hundred pickers in camp about the swamps.

The cranberry pickers are out in the bogs soon after daylight, and they remain as long as they can see a berry. In large cranberry bogs, where several hundred people are at work, the pickers are divided into companies, each company consisting of 120 persons. The company is in charge of a "boss," who keeps account of the amount each picker gathers during the day.

The bog is lined off into rows with twine, and each picker has a strip about three feet wide, which must be picked clean. The pickers, men, women and children of all ages, work along the bog on their knees. The berries are usually gathered from the vines by hand, although a picking machine is sometimes used. When pickers are scarce the berries are raked off with a garden rake.

The pickers are paid by the measure, which is a broad 6-quart pail. The price paid is from 8 to 10 cents a measure. The amounts which pickers will gather in a day vary from 150 to 250 quarts. Some of the most expert workers, when the yield is heavy, have been known to garner 65 measures, or 390 quarts of cranberries in a day.

There are always many boys and girls in the bogs picking berries, and when they work together time flies rapidly. After the day's work is done, young couples are seen walking home hand in hand. The tots are carried in father's or mother's arms. The cranberry season lasts about three weeks, and when it is over the children are sent back to school and their lessons. Most of them are sorry that the vacation is at an end. —Ex.

Things Useful.

A PRETTY WRITING TABLET.

A very serviceable and pretty writing tablet can be made at home with very little trouble, and at the minimum of expense. To make it, get from any carpenter a stout, smooth board 2 feet square. Cover it smoothly on both sides with pretty figured French cretonne. In the lower part of the center of the board tack diagonally across the corners of a place 8 inches wide by 12 inches long small straps of silk ribbon elastic. Under these straps slip a piece of blotting paper just 8 by 12 inches in size. On the left of the blotter tack two straps of the elastic to hold the package of note paper and the pack of envelopes.

In the upper middle portion of the board a strap of elastic is tacked up and down, making three places in which to stick a pen, pencil and paperknife. Just above the blotter a traveler's inkstand is firmly glued. To the right of this a small strap is tacked on, in which to slip a little book made of oil paper, in which to keep postage stamps. The right side of the board has straps so arranged as to accommodate postal cards and another package of paper and envelopes. When good taste is used in the selection of the cretonne and neatness in the tacking of it and the straps on the board, the effect is something quite artistic and pleasing. The tacks are brass-headed, and two small ones are really better than one large one, and are prettier as well.

In covering the board, cover the bottom part first, leaving a small margin of the goods, which must be tacked upon the thick edge of the board with small, ordinary tacks. The upper cover of the board is cut with a margin a little wider than the board is thick. This surplus margin is turned under and the cretonne tacked very smoothly with the fancy nails, which must be very close together.

THE HEN WITH ONE CHICKEN.

The white turkey is dead ! The white turkey is dead !
How the news through the barnyard went flying !
Of a mother bereft, four young turkies were left,
And their case for assistance was crying.

Een the peacock respectfully folded his tail,
As a suitable symbol of sorrow,
And his plainer wife said, "Now the old bird is dead,
Who will tend her four chicks on the morrow ?"

"And when evening around them comes dreary and chill,
Who above them will watchfully hover ?"
"Two each night will I tuck neath my wings," said the Duck,
"Though I've eight of my own I must cover."

"I've so much to do; for the bugs and the worms
In the garden 'tis tiresome picking,
Have nothing to spare, for my own I must care,"
Said the Hen with one Chicken.

"How I wish," said the Goose, "I could be of some use,
For my heart is with love over-brimming;
The next morning that's fine, they shall go with my nine
Little yellow-backed goslings out swimming."

"I will do what I can," the old Dorking put in,
"And for help they may call on me too,
Though I've ten of my own that are only half-grown,
And a great deal of trouble to see to.

But those poor little things are all heads and wings,
And their bones through their feathers are sticking."
"Very hard it may be, but oh ! don't come to me !"
Said the Hen with one Chicken.

"Half my care, I suppose, there is nobody knows,
I'm the most over-burdened of mothers !
They must learn, little elves, how to scratch for themselves,
And not seek to depend upon others."

She went by with a cluck, and the Goose to the Duck
Exclaimed in surprise, "Well, I never !"
Said the Duck, "I declare, those who have the least care,
You will find are complaining forever !

And when all things appear to look threatening and drear,
And when troubles your pathway are thick in,
For some aid in your woe, O, beware how you go
To a Hen with one Chicken."

The Larch Tree.

A FAIRY TALE.

Once there grew a beautiful maple tree in the centre of a large park. All summer it had stood there covered with green leaves. Many people had stopped to rest beneath its shade.

But when fall came a change took place. The leaves began to turn red and yellow. Then the people said, "How beautiful the maple is! In all the park there is not a tree whose leaves are so pretty and bright." The maple was so pleased to hear herself praised that she began to flutter her leaves and toss her head in a very proud, vain manner.

She spread out her boughs so far that a little larch close by was almost hidden from sight. But the maple said, "It does not matter if I do hide the larch, for no one cares to look at him, he is such a plain little tree. His leaves do not turn red and yellow like mine !"

The larch heard the unkind words of the maple, but did not say anything. He only rustled his stiff little leaves and sighed.

The good fairy of the park passed by just then and said, "Why do you sigh, little larch ? Do you feel unhappy ?" The larch replied, "I only sighed because the maple is so much more beautiful than I, and seems to please every one."

The good fairy felt sorry for the poor little larch, for he did look plain and small by the bright maple. She touched him with her wand and said :—

"Tree, tree, be cheerful for me,
And you forever green shall be."

The little larch smiled brightly, and rustled his leaves contentedly.

In a few days the bright maple leaves turned brown and fell to the earth, and left the branches bare. The beauty of the maple was gone.

Then the snow came, and in all the park there was but one bright, cheerful spot. There the little larch bravely stood, his leaves as green as when they first came out.

And all through the cold winter he cheered the people who passed. So they said, "Let us call the larch an 'evergreen' !" And to this day the larch keeps green all the year round !—The Whole Family.

A Little Help.

The summer vacation in Mayville was over. Alice Gaston had spent her first day in the academy, while her sister Tossy had been spending her first one in the grammar school. Both had a great deal to tell and to talk over after going home in the afternoon, and both sat down to study in the evening with a zest which showed that they were not lacking in fondness for food.

Tossy began with arithmetic, Alice with geometry, and, as mathematics required closer attention than their other studies, it would seem that they made a wise beginning. For a time both were quiet, but after a while there came a deep sigh from Tossy. Soon there was another.

"Oh, dear !" she exclaimed. "I don't understand this at all."

Alice appeared not to hear.

"I don't believe that I ever can get it right," Tossy said, in mournful tones. "What am I going to do ?"

Still, Alice made no response. She seemed wholly absorbed in her geometry.

"Oh Alice, sister Alice, can't you help me just a little ?"

The question came pleadingly from Tossy's lips, but Alice gave no answer.

She had heard, certainly she had heard; but was she not busy with her own work ? And was it not very rude in Tossy to interrupt her ?

Presently the younger girl pushed her book aside, laid her head on the table by which they were sitting, and burst into tears.

"Tossy, I do wish you would be quiet," said Alice, impatiently. "How do you expect me to learn my geometry lesson when you are disturbing me all the while ?"

"I—don't—know," moaned Tossy, between her sobs. "How—do—you—expect me—to learn—mine—when—I don't—understand it—at all ! I think—you might—help me—just a little."

Alice's conscience told her, too, that she might easily render assistance. Yet she tried to disregard this voice, as well as her sister's.

"Looking not each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others."

Alice was reading the New Testament through in the Revised Version. She had read this verse on the morning of that very day, and had resolved to obey its teachings. Yet this evening she tried to put it out of her mind. But, somehow, she could not. It kept forcing itself upon her. "The things of others, the things of others." The words rang in her ears, and unintentionally she was mixing them up with angles, straight lines and triangles. Pretty soon she gave up her resistance to the call of duty. She laid down her book and spoke in a pleasanter voice than before :

"Let me see what is the matter, Tossy."

At this note of encouragement, the little girl raised her head and looked up wistfully.

"Oh, will you show me about this ? I'll be so glad, for I don't want to fail on the very first lesson, and I can never do it alone."

Alice examined the difficulty, and understood it at once. A very few words of explanation made it clear to Tossy also and she had no more trouble that evening.

"You're the best sister that ever was !" she exclaimed gratefully, as she threw her arms around Alice in kissing her at bedtime. "Just that little bit of help from you made my whole lesson easy."

"But I ought to have given it sooner," said Alice, honestly. "I might have saved you a fit of crying, and I shouldn't have been disturbed half as much myself.—Chrisiian Intelligencer.

A LIGHT HEART, strong nerves, bodily comfort — these come to a woman, with the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. You can't be anything else but nervous and spiritless, as long as you suffer from any womanly ills.

The "Prescription" relieves every such condition. It builds up your general health, too, better than any ordinary tonic that many women owe their beauty to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. The reason—beauty of form and face, as well as grace, radiate from the common center—health. The best bodily condition results from good food, fresh air, and exercise, coupled with the judicious use of the "Prescription." In maidenhood, womanhood, and motherhood, it's a supporting tonic that's peculiarly adapted to her needs, regulating, strengthening, and curing, the derangements of the sex.

If there be headache, pain in the back, bearing-down sensations, or general debility, or if there be nervous disturbances, nervous prostration, and sleeplessness, the "Prescription" reaches the origin of the trouble and corrects it. It dispels aches and pains, corrects displacements and cures catarrhal inflammation of the lining membranes. It's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or the money paid for it is refunded.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure constipation, indigestion, biliousness, headaches and kindred ailments.

The liquor in which a fowl is boiled should have the fat skimmed off before making it into soup. CHRISTMAS.

In what year was Jesus born? Some persons perhaps will smile at the question, and reply, that our very system of measuring time from the year of the Lord, (Anno Domini), gives the answer. Of course he was born 1894 years ago, at the beginning of year one. But the question is not so simple as it seems. For the Christian Era was not introduced for more than 500 years after the birth of Jesus, and then it was difficult to get the exact date. Time used to be measured from the accession of the reigning king, as when Luke dates the beginning of John Baptist's work "in the 15th year of Tiberius Caesar." But this was so unsatisfactory, that Latin scholars selected the year when Rome was founded as a starting point; and this era was generally adopted, so that A. U. C. (anno urbis conditæ) is familiar to all readers of history.

When, after 525 years Dionysius undertook to introduce the present system, he made a mistake of several years in the time. Modern scholars, with greater advantages and better training, find the problem obscure and intricate; so it is not surprising that Dionysius, living in an uncritical age, should have made an error in his calculations. The most important data are (1) the death of Herod, which occurred after Jesus was born, and (2) the beginning of John's ministry which Luke dates in the 15th year of Tiberius Caesar—and says that Jesus was then beginning to be about thirty years of age.

The time of Herod's death is determined, and it occurred four years after the date taken by Dionysius for the beginning of the Christian era. Hence it is evident that he was wrong by at least four years. Scholars differ as to the exact time, but they agree that the beginning of our era was put from four to seven years too late.

CAN WE TELL ON WHAT DAY JESUS WAS BORN?

Here we have less information than with regard to the year. The Scriptures do not give the day, and no tradition of any value has been preserved. Dr. Edersheim (an authority of great weight), thinks that the 25th of December is probably the correct date, but his authority has little weight after he gives his reason. Every month in the calendar has had its advocates, and the celebrated Lightfoot thinks that December is the most unlikely of them all, because then the rainy season is at its height in Judea, and it is very improbable that shepherds would be watching their flocks by night.

Perhaps God has concealed the day and the year for wise reasons, as He hid the body of Moses. The blessed fact that Jesus was born of Mary is of immense consequence: the exact time of very little.

God does not command the celebration of Jesus birthday. It is His death that we are commanded to show forth, till He come. Nevertheless the observance of Christmas has become a custom of the Church, and is strongly intrenched in the affections of the people. Let us therefore study to observe it in a proper spirit. It is hard to see how eggnog, dancing and fireworks have any special appropriateness to the occasion.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

"Glory to God in the highest." Let us take our cue from the song of angels, who first celebrated His birth, that night when Jesus was born and laid in the manger. Suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Some new manifestation of Jehovah's glory, grander than had ever been given before in earth or heaven, now stirred the souls of the angels to their depths, and they, who had tuned their hearts to the heavenly anthem when, at nature's birth, the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, now rouse them to the contemplation of a noble theme, and worship in more exalted strains, singing "Glory to God in the highest." The birth of the babe at Bethlehem roused them to praise not only because of the blessing it would bring to fallen man, but because of the fuller insight it gave them of the glorious character of God. Let us also, as we celebrate the birth of Jesus, rouse our hearts to the contemplation of the glory of God, who humbled Himself to be born of a woman.. "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

Lord of every land and nation,
Ancient of eternal days,
Sounded through the whole creation
Be Thy just and awful praise.

For the grandeur of Thy nature,
Grand beyond a seraph's thought
For created works of power,
Works with skill and kindness wrought.

For Thy providence that governs
Through Thine empire's wide domain:
Wings an angel, guides a sparrow,
Blessed be Thy gentle reign!

But thy rich, Thy free redemption,
Dark, through brightness all along:
Thought is poor, and poor expression;
Who can sing that awful song?

Brightness of the Father's glory
Shall Thy praise unuttered lie?
Fly my tongue such guilty silence;
Sing the Lord, who came to die.

Did the angels sing Thy coming?
Did the shepherds learn their lays?
Shame should cover me ungrateful,
Should my tongue refuse to praise.

From the highest throne in glory
To the cross of deepest woe!
All to ransom guilty captives!
Flow my praise, forever flow."

What think ye of Christ? This question which Jesus addressed to the Pharisees, I would press upon my readers at this Christmas season. Many, if they answer candidly, must say, "I do not think of Him at all." And those who celebrate His birth with greatest gaiety are least disposed to cherish loving, reverent thoughts of Him. Have you any reason to rejoice that Christ was born? Do you accept Him as your Saviour? I can imagine that the devils chuckle in ghastly glee at the wickedness of men who reject Jesus as a personal Saviour, and yet celebrate His coming. Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Will you let Him save you? "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him might be saved." Will you keep Christmas and not regard that love?

Permit us to express our gratification at the interest in the paper manifested by many friends. The increasing number of communications, not from North Carolina alone, but from several other States, is accepted as an evidence of appreciation and good will, and our readers will join us in thanks to the correspondents who add so much to the worth of the paper. Besides this, the kind words of encouragement and of criticism, which come by nearly every mail, are acknowledged with grateful thanks. We are very desirous of making a good paper, one that will help our readers to grow in grace and knowledge and overcome the world, but we are aware that, so far, we have fallen much below our ideal. It is easy to make a paper; very difficult to make a good one. So have patience with us, for we shall prayerfully and laboriously strive to do better and better.

To our friends who desire to help us, we offer a few suggestions:

(1) In writing for the paper, study to be crisp and pointed. A weekly paper is burdened by long articles, suitable for the Reviews; and, as a general rule, we had rather receive five pages of manuscript than twenty. We have declined some valuable communications because of their length, and may be forced to do so in the future.

(2) Mail your communication in time for it to reach us by Monday at latest. The paper goes to press Wednesday morning, and the contents should be arranged by Monday night.

(3) Send us promptly notices of marriages and deaths and all items of religious news—many persons are now helping us in this way, to whom we are grateful.

(4) Help us to get new subscribers. Our list is growing steadily, but slowly; more slowly than we desire or expected; and consequently needed improvements of the paper are postponed for lack of means. If our paper helps you, commend it to some friend or neighbor. A good many persons send us the names of those who, thus think, may take the paper, and ask us to send them sample copies. Will you not help in this way? We will gladly send the sample copies, and you can speak a good word for us.

A LETTER FROM DR. FLEMING.

Dear Bro. Rawlings:—Knowing your special interest in the Church of which you were the pastor for ten years. I write of the meeting which closed on Thursday, December 6th.

For weeks past it was manifest to the pastor and to the members of the session that there was a growing interest in the worship of God and in His Word preached from Sunday to Sunday.

I determined to have a week's preaching before our winter communion, which as when you were here, takes place on the first Sunday in December. At my request Rev. Theron H. Rice, Jr., of Alexandria, Va., came to my help.

Attention had been called to the true meaning of revival, a reliving of God's people, and special prayers had been made for a blessing upon the Church.

At our regular prayer-meeting, November 21st, the Spirit of God was manifested in the short, earnest prayers, hearty singing of good old hymns, and in the reading of the Word of God.

When Mr. Rice came, we could say, "Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." With fidelity, this preacher executed his commission. The sinner's helplessness, God's sovereignty, electing love, and infinite grace were declared with earnestness, such as one who could say, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel" must exhibit, accompanied with a tender, pathos of one who loves his fellowmen.

Twice daily, large congregations heard the Word. Those who came once were constrained to come again.

The pastor invited enquirers to meet him in his study, or to remain after the worship to meet his co-pastors, the elders, who were in constant attendance, and in readiness for every good work.

The communion was administered on Sunday, December 2nd, when several persons sat with us for the first time at the table of their Lord.

With unflagging interest the meeting continued until Thursday, 6th inst. A revived church is the result. Pastor and people are ready to say, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy Name give glery, for Thy mercy and for Thy truth's sake."

We were not a little comforted by the knowledge that you and brother Hooper, former pastors, were praying for us, as were also the good people of Alexandria, who kindly lent us their pastor. My brethren Hall, McMurray and McCorkle, were constant in attendance. They were greatly helpful in every way.

Let me add, that we are specially interested in your new work, and we pray that needed grace may be yours to edit a religious newspaper—a paper which will carry the gospel into many homes.

Yours fraternally,
R. H. Fleming,
Westminster Church, Lynchburg, Va.

INK SPOTS.

"The broken heart sees further than the clearest intellect." Truth, over which the intellect may stumble or from which the intellect may recoil, the heart readily takes in. Years may make the eyes dim, for ordinary seeing, but through tears, we may get what we never had before, the first clear view of Christ on the cross for us. "The atonement cannot be dealt with by the mere intellect as with a problem in mathematics which appeals only to one set of faculties." It must be seen through the conscious sense of helplessness from sin or not seen at all, the agony of broken-heartedness which cries, "Hide thy face from my sins, blot out all my iniquities."

* * *

"Tell the self-righteous Pharisee that Christ died for him he is shocked"—he needs nothing, why should one die for him? But tell the sinner "in the agony of remorse, that Jesus, the Son of God, died for him, and the statement becomes the glorious gospel of the blessed God. Through his remorse he sees what he could have never seen through his philosophy."

* * *

The paradoxes of the sinner, are the commonplaces of the saint. What are stumbling blocks to the one, is smooth, level road to the other. What are discords to the one, is music to the other, or as St. Paul puts it where one sees all folly, the other knows all is wisdom. Where to one is profound silence, the other hears distinctly the audible voice of God.

* * *

"In that supreme moment when man is first conscious of regeneration there is no miracle in the life of Christ which does not appear to him simple and easy." The touch of God's finger on him, infusing life into his dead soul, has revealed to him new possibilities not realized before. Why should he not believe in miracles? he a man surrounded by the natural, has suddenly come in contact with the supernatural. And flesh has become spirit—God met him, touched him, and the blind saw. Can he doubt henceforth, the supernatural?

* * *

Two things in the Christian life astonish us; these open up to us sometimes by a temptation suddenly set before us, or some blasphemous suggestion suddenly springing upon us the awful possibilities of sin within us; but likewise there come happy moments, when such inspirations of the higher life come to us, and such longings for purity that there opens up the glorious possibilities of holiness—what we may yet become.

* * *

Is it not true that the greatest theological thinkers and constructive men, have been more or less Calvinistic? The fullest, richest, profoundest treatises have come from such. Have not even the best practical, most fervent, uplifting, soul-enriching books for the daily food of the Christian come from the same source? The Calvinistic order of mind seems more inclined to build on God as its foundation. Takes its point of departure thence, and in all its discussions in the field of Theology, seems to carry something of the grandeur of the source, with it. The activity of the Calvinistic mind in practical Christian life is based on the meditative. It is not active first, then meditative. It meditates before it acts. "It is equable in religious emotion," its thoughtfulness calms it. Its sense of God subdues. "It is calm, reverent in its modes of worship, looks before and after, seeks the reasons of things," knows the kingdom of God cometh not with observation, knows regeneration is God's work—has a strong sense of human limitations, hence is not "staggered by beliefs which seem to border hard on contradiction." Loves to test its faith and put its mental power out, by grasping paradoxes before which weaker minds recoil. It builds for permanence and looks a long way ahead for results." It has the strength of God behind it, it builds on His eternal decrees. "If you want to make anything eternal in human affairs, you must build into it and especially under it a large proportion of Calvinistic elements." It is the unconscious source of strength even in those who in words discard it—they live upon it in fact.

A CARD.

In the report of the Committee on Church and Christian Education, published a few weeks ago. Peace Institute is spoken of as "doing fairly well." When the report was read at Synod—such is the difference between the intonation of the voice and cold print—I suppose none of us noticed that this was faint praise indeed for the Institute. Peace has an enrolment now of 165 pupils—and has not fallen below that number in recent years. It is admirably equipped, and more than all, it has preserved the highest standard in its educational work—in spite of the present tendencies in the opposite direction.

It is not only an Institution of which the State and our Church should be proud—but it is successfully winning the best patronage.

This much is said in the hope of correcting an impression which we feel sure was not intended.

A Friend of Peace.

"Through the Church into Society" is the chief display line in a handsome double column, illustrated advertisement, annoucing to the readers of several contemporaries that an article of that title, by Rev. J. R. Paxton, D. D., will be an early feature of a popular woman's journal. If experience were worth anything, there are many who could write graphically on Through Society Out of the Church; but experience without brains is rather a lame affair. There are doubtless many others who might write a volume or more on Through Society into the Ditch; but people in that situation probably do not care to write on the subject; and, surely, if the dead could write, many and long and realistic would be the dissertations sent up to earth on Through Society to the Devil. But it remains for Dr. Paxton to explore the devious path "Through the Church into Society."

Surely the reverend writer has dipped into the realm of the fantastic. Is it really possible that he knows some one who actually trod the path of which he is to write? Perhaps so; but it is evident that he beheld that one in the act, for it is quite beyond doubt that the most acute observer would never suspect one in society of having actually come through a sure enough church—not, at least, if actions haven't lost their historical vociferousness.—Exchange.

THE CHAMBERED NAUTILUS.

This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshadowed main—
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the siren sings,
And coral reefs lie bare.
Where the cold sea maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl;
Wrecked is the ship of pearl!
And every chambered cell,
Where its dim, dreaming light was wont to dwell,
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
Before thee lies revealed,
Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed.

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread this lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archways through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
Child of the wandering sea,
Cast from her lap, forlorn!
From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathed horn.
While on my ear it rings,
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free.
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

FINER CHURCHES; OR MORE CHURCHES?

Is there a spirit of ostentation shown in our churches—especially in the towns and cities? This question has been raised; and it is repeated here with the hope of eliciting serious reflection, rather than with the purpose of giving a direct answer. It is easy to find people who think that any house is good enough to worship God in, if it holds the audience and keeps out the rain and cold. But this is an error, on the one extreme.

It is an old argument, yet always in place, that perhaps the most splendid building that was ever erected, was a house of worship, planned and specified by the Lord Himself, viz: The Temple of Solomon. True, that was intended to prefigure the glory of Christ; but we may learn something more than that from it. David, in whose heart God put the desire for a house of God, as he sat at peace in his own palace, said, "See, now, I dwell in a house of CEDAR, but the ark of God dwelleth within CURTAINS." He seemed to think that he, who had been so richly blessed of the Lord in temporal matters, ought to build a house for the Lord corresponding with the one which he had built for himself. Would it not, therefore, be a shameful ingratitude for a people, to whom the Lord has given beautiful residences, to be contented with common, or unsightly church buildings in their community?

Further, a beautiful and commodious, or, we may say, grand, church will draw larger audiences to hear the gospel preached. But now, some one is saying, "If that's all they go for, they'd better stay at home." Not so fast! brother or sister. If we can only draw them to church, we may do them some good, otherwise they may be entirely out of our reach. Just now a line from Goldsmith comes in mind:

"And fools who came to scoff, remained to pray." Let them come from any motive whatever—to scoff, or to see a beautiful church, or to sit in comfortable seats, or to hear sweet music—if thereby we can have them to "remain to pray."

But are there no errors in the opposite direction? Have we any churches (Presbyterian, Methodist, Lutheran, Baptist, or others) that stand as monuments of self-glorification? In almost every town the spirit of emulation is manifest in other edifices. Certain persons vie with each other in the cost and appearance of their residences, until some one is tempted to build a house too large for his purse, and is thereby overwhelmed with debt. Has this spirit entered the Church, or not? One congregation builds a beautiful, or elegant, church; another tears down its old church and builds one more elegant; and perhaps the last to build surpasses all the rest in cost and embellishments. Why is this? Is it from an increase of gratitude to God, "from whom cometh down every good and every perfect gift," and a growing desire to glorify Him and win more souls for Christ?

There are doubtless many who give of their means to build churches of their own, or in their own vicinity, from purely selfish motives. The appeal, "A twenty-five thousand dollar church will enhance the value of property in your part of the town," or, "It is a shame to us that we have no better church," or, "Our sister denominations are away ahead of us," or "We are able to have the finest church in town," will act more powerfully on the purses of such persons, than an appeal for winning souls and glorifying God. But it would require a pessimist not to believe that the Lord has his many wealthy people, or people "in good circumstances," who desire to serve Him with their money. And to those who are thus reminded, we have an earnest appeal to make, not to selfishness, but to self-denial—believing that it must meet with favor in your eyes. While your beautiful sanctuaries are drawing their large crowds of people whose polish and tastes are in keeping with them, they also stand in the way of another class, who would feel out of place in them. Every town has its population who cannot feel at home in elegant churches with elegantly dressed people, and therefore will not attend such churches, but who are nevertheless going to destruction, simply for the want of some church influence. Then, here is our Home Mission work, in small towns and rural districts, which is suffering, and retarded, for want of means to erect plain and cheap houses of worship. Very little progress can be made while we have to preach in school houses, or opera houses, or store-rooms. Would it not, therefore, be serving the Lord more effectively, when you are building, to put only a little less in the twenty, or thirty tohusand dollar churches and save only a little more for the poor, who have no congenial place of worship to attend. This idea, we are aware, strikes at the very citadel of human pride, and will be repulsed wherever the Spirit of Christ does not reign. "My money is my own," and shall I rob my house of one farthing, that others may receive the benefit? Preposterous! But one of the sure signs that Christ reigns, is that "the poor have the gospel preached to them," and, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me."

Now, we confidently believe that we have Scriptural authority for saying, that no congregation, with the glory of God at heart, can put too much money in its church edifice—while there is no other way in which it can do more good with some of that money. And now, when it comes to the question of, finer churches; or more churches? there may be a point reached when one dollar, used in church erection on mission grounds, will do more for the glory of God, than five times that much added to the sum made up for a costly edifice. How many churches have we, from which five hundred dollars, or even a thousand, might have been left out, and would scarcely have been missed? And yet, we find here and there, all over our Synod, some little struggling congregation, vainly trying to build, to whom a pitiful hundred dollars would be a real boon. And shall any of us as Christians, bearing the name of Jesus Christ, go on striving against others for the finest churches, while these little organizations of faithful Christians are left in their struggle, perhaps ultimately to dissolve for want of a house of worship to hold them together?

Brethren in Christ, when you sit at worship in your beautiful sanctuaries, for which you are to be congratulated, will you not think kindly of those who are longing even for the plainest house in which to worship God, and have the gospel preached to their neighbors? If you could visit them, as many of us have done in our Home Mission work and become acquainted with them in their labor and self-denial for Christ's sake, we are confident that your hearts would be opened, and your purses also.

RESIGNATION OF REV. H. D. LEQUEUX.

At a congregational meeting held at Poplar Tent church, Dec. 9th, 1894, the following paper was adopted:

WHEREAS, Rev. H. D. Lequeux has offered his resignation as pastor of this church, we, having confidence in his judgment, and believing that he would act for the best, with humiliation acknowledge that we have failed in our duty to him as our pastor. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That in reluctantly accepting his resignation we desire to express our confidence in his Christian character, and our love for him as our pastor; and we pray that the great I Am may direct him in the future; that his health may be precious in His sight; and that the divine blessing may go with him wherever he may be called to labor.

S. S. JOHNSON,
Secretary.

THE SYNOD OF ALABAMA.

The Synod of Alabama met in the Central church of Montgomery, Ala., November 20th, 1894, and after the moderator's sermon the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered.

Membership. Seventy-seven, (forty-six ministers and thirty-one elders.)

Officers. Rev. Prof. Thornton Whaling, moderator, S. P. Gaillard and Rev. J. D. A. Brown, temporary clerks.

Memorials of Rev. J. H. Skinner, D.D., and of Rev. J. K. Spence were adopted.

Orphans' Home. On Thursday night a popular meeting was held in the interest of this institution in which Synod feels so deep an interest and which it has fostered with such a tender care for nearly thirty years. The meeting was presided over by Rev. J. M. P. Otts, D. D, LL., D., Chairman of the Executive Committee that Synod appoints to control the home, and addresses were made by various persons. About fifty children are now in the home. During the year homes have been found for three that had reached the age of sixteen, and accordingly they were dismissed, two others have gone to the Assembly's Home and School at Fredericksburg, Va., to prepare for the foreign missionary work, and ten under sixteen years of age have been indentured or adopted in Christian families. All the children over twelve years of age are members of the church, and seventeen recited the Shorter Catechism perfectly during the year.

The children are taught to work and are taught in school, and usually they are faithful in both departments of labor. Last year $4,441.98 was contributed to its support by churches, Sabbath-schools, societies and individuals. Another building is imperatively needed as a dormitory for the boys, and for a school-room, and Synod decided to begin building as soon as two-thirds of the amount need to complete it was donated. The management of the home is economical and judicious, and the members of Synod and visitors present showed their appreciation of this work by subscribing $2,279.26 towards its support next year. The Sabbath preceeding Christmas is made by Synod Orphans' Home Day, on which churches and Sabbath-schools are to take up a collection for this cause.

Home Missions. All the constituent Presbyteries agreed to the following plan for conducting their Home Missions. Synod appoints a committee of fifteen members who are to elect a treasurer to whom all money for Home Missions in the State is to be sent. This committee elects also a superintendent of Home Missions who divides his time equally among the Presbyteries subject to the control of that Presbytery's Committee where he is laboring. The money remaining after the salary of the superintendent and the necessary expenses of the committee are paid, is to be equally divided among the Presbyteries to be used by their Home Missions Committee.

In three years time Synod has held, through her evangelists, 140 protracted meetings, preached 2,890 sermons, organized seven new churches, aided nine in securing buildings, received 1,343 members on examination and 200 by certificate. Most of the time, three evangelists have been kept at work. Help in money also has been given the Presbyteries in the Home Missions, work which they have been doing. The entire cost to Synod for all its Home Missions work for three years has been $13,909.62.

Resolution. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this Synod does hereby express its deep sense of regret that our late General Assembly in its sessions at Nashville, Tenn., could not see its way to appoint a committee to meet a like committee appointed by the General Assembly in its sessions at Saratoga, N. Y., to confer about such matters as seem to be in the way of close relations between the two churches.

And this action is all the more to be regretted because it has the appearance, if it does not in fact, bar the way to such co-operative work and fraternal relations as the two Assemblies have already agreed upon and established.

An Elders' and Deacons' Convention was held on the day preceding Synod and it was decided, in future to make this convention a permanent feature in each meeting of Synod.

Place and time of next meeting. Selma First church, on Nov. 5th, 1895.

Central Presbytery, colored, which was organized nearly four years ago by order of Synod was taken under the jurisdiction of Synod.

Statistics. Four Presbyteries, and (in connection with the three white Presbyteries), seventy-one ministers, 174 churches, thirty candidates and nearly 12,000 communicants. The colored Presbytery made no statistical report.

Publication. Synod's Colporteur during the past year traveled 5,397 miles, visited 2,241 families, thirty-seven Sabbath-schools, made nineteen religious addresses, donated $114 worth of books, Bibles and tracts, and sold $1,028 worth of them.

The Assembly's Home and School was heartily commended after hearing the interesting address of Rev. A. P. Saunders. Synod adjourned on Friday night, November 23rd.

W. I. SINNOTT.

A Holy Care.

We have the faculty of forethought; but, like all our faculties, it has been perverted, and is often abused. It is good for a man to have a holy care, and to pay due attention to every item of his life; but alas! it is very easy to make it into an unholy care, and to try to wrest from the hand of God that office of providence which belongs to him and not to ourselves. How often Luther liked to talk about the birds, and the way God cares for them! When he was full of his anxieties, he used constantly to envy the birds because they led so free and happy a life. He talks of Dr. Sparrow, and Dr. Thrush, and others that used to come and talk to Dr. Luther, and tell him many a good thing. You know, brethren, the birds out in the open yonder cared for by God, fare far better than those that are cared for by man. A little London girl, who had gone into the country, once said, "Look, mamma, at that poor little bird; it has not got any cage!" That would not have struck me as being any loss to the bird; and if you and I were without our cage, and the box of seed, and glass of water, it would not be much of a loss if we were cast adrift into the glorious liberty of a life of humble dependence upon God. It is that cage of carnal trust, and that box of seed that we are always laboring to fill, that makes the worry of this mortal life; he who has grace to spread his wings and soar away, and get into the open field of divine trustfulness, may sing all the day, and ever have this for his tune—

Mortal, cease from toil and sorrow,
God provideth for the morrow.

Not Unitarians.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale, in a speech at the Saratoga meeting of the Unitarian Association, stated that all of the four American poets, Bryant, Holmes, Longfellow and Whittier, were Unitarians. The Southern Churchman has shown that Bryant held to the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the same we have been assured was true of Whittier. Mrs. M. C. Hubbard, a cousin of the poet, who resides in the same place as the writer of this, and who formerly lived in the same town as the poet did, and was fully acquainted with his religious views and associations, denies that he was ever a Unitarian or Hicksite Quaker, and says that he was always an orthodox Quaker, holding firmly to our Lord's divinity. We doubt, also, if Longfellow was a Unitarian in the sense in which the large majority of those so-called now are.

MAGAZINES.

The Century Magazine. New York, $4 a year. The Christmas number is rich in good reading matter and beautiful illustrations.

The Cosmopolitan. New York, $1.50 a year. This month there are stories by Rudyard Kipling, Mrs. Burton Harrison, Wm. Dean Howells, Katrinr Trask, and Albion W. Tourgee.

The Eclectic. New York, 144, 8th St., $5.00 a year. Contains the cream of the English magazines and Reviews.

Ladies' Home Journal. Philadelphia, $1.00 a year. The Christmas number contains among other good things—a poem by Eugene Field, and the beginning of a story by Frank R. Stockton.

The Missionary Herald. Boston, $1.00 a year.

The Blue and the Gray. Philadelphia, $1.00 a year, leading articles are Christmas at Valley Forge, "Was Santa Claus a Nigger?" The Coming National Currency.

Miss Havergal's Search Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., Publishers 182 Fifth Avenue, New York, have issued a charming collection of hymn poems, with sweet songs to suit, in a very attractive binding of blue, black and gold colorings of cloth. This, at the price of fifty cents makes a very pleasing form for a Christmas gift.

BOOKS.

We have received the following books and tracts from the Presbyterian Board of Pulication, Philadelphia, Pa.:

1. Ragweed. A West-World Story. By Julia McNair Wright, 16 mo. Pp. 317. Price $1.55

This is an exceedingly bright story of Western life. It illustrates the power of religious principle in conquering the obstacles of lowly birth, and evil surroundings, and winning noble place and usefulness. Divine grace transforms "weeds" of humanity into value.

2. Jacob's Heiress. By Annette L. Noble. Pp. 310, $1.25.

A narrative laid in an historical basis of the seige of Antwerp by the Prince of Parma, representing Philip of Spain. The scene changes to France and England. The spirit of those stirring days, and the trials and heroism of afflicted Protestants are vividly portrayed in a rapid and pleasing narrative, which will instruct our youth.

3. The Pilgrim's Progress. By John Bunyan. Price 75 cents. P. 341.

This is a very neat issue, in clear type, on good paper, at a low price of this immortal allegory by the Great Dreamer.

4. The Holy War. By John Bunyan. With a preface by Alexander White, D. D., 75 cents.

A book too little read. Macaulay said it would have made Bunyan immortal if he had not written Pilgrim's Progress. This excellent, cheap edition may lead many to consider the history of "the losing and taking again of the town of Mansoul."

5. Bunyan's Characters. Lectures delivered in St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh, by Alexander Whyte, D. D. Second Series. Pp. 307. Price $1.

These are able and popular presentations of Bunyan's Allegory as translated into Christian Exprience. It is very profitable to follow the various characters in their trials and joys, and apply the history to actual life. Many need help to do this; and these lectures skilfully unfold the signification of Bunyan's parable. To many the comment will be more useful than the text.

6. The Wedded Life. By J. R. Miller, D. D. New Edition. $1.

A beautiful little book, bound in pure white and gold, for a present to every couple, entering wedded life. It contains a blank marriage certificate; pages for signatures of friends; two forms of marriage service; then a chapter on marriage; another on the Husband's Part; and last, the Wife's Part. Those familiar with Dr. Miller's tender, beautiful and impressive style, do not need any word of commendation added, as to the value of this attractive little book. It is enclosed in a neat box.

7. The Westminster Question Book. International Lessons, 1895, 15 cents.

A valuable, compact, helpful manual for teachers and scholars. It embraces the year's course.

8. The following are useful tracts:

The Family and Religion, by Rev. W. P. Swartz; an Essay read before the Synod of Baltimore, $3.20 per 100.

"A Letter on Joining the Church" and "Loving Words to Silent Men" (each $1.07 per 100) by Rev. Francis A. Horton, D. D. These two tracts press to an open avowal of faith in Jesus. All are in neat pocket form.

"The Ten Commandments, The Creed and the Lord's Prayer" on a folded, stiff, illuminated card. $4 per 100.

"While Shepherds Watched" is an excellent programme of music and recitations for the Sunday-school at Christmas. It is prepared by Dr. J. R. Miller. $4 per 100 copies.

Washington Letter.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D.C., Dec. 12, 1894.

President Cleveland has transmitted to Congress, in compliance with a Senate resolution, the correspondence relating to the outrages upon Christian Armenians. Therein is a communication from Secretary Gresham, which explains why this government has forwarded no "expostulations" to Turkey—they are substantially the same which have been given in this correspondence—and states that at the request of the governments of Great Britian and Turkey he has designated U. S. Consul Jewett to accompany the international commission, but not as a member of it, which is to make an investigation.

The bill providing a Territorial form of government for that portion of the Indian Territory now occupied and governed by the five civilized tribes of Indians, has aroused much interest in Washington and is much talked about, both in and out of Congress. While public sentiment here is mostly favorable to the change, there is opposition from those who live nearer to the Indians. For instance, Judge J. M. Lindsay, of Gainesville, Texas, at present in Washington, says: "I hardly think it fair to the Indians to force a territorial government upon them just yet. They need the protecting care of the government a while longer. As soon as the territorial laws of the United States are applied down there the Indians will become a complete nonentity. The whites in that section are as aggressive and dominating as the Anglo-Saxons are everywhere, and once given the right of suffrage they will relegate the red men to obscurity in short order."

Memorial services were held last Sunday in the Luther Memorial Church, in honor of the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Gustavus Adolphus, who was declared by Prof. Fryxel, a graduate of the University of Stockholm, Sweden, who conducted the service, to have been "the great defender of the Protestant liberty of Europe." A feature of the services was the singing of the Battle Song of Luther, in Swedish, by Prof. Fryxel.

Dr. Talmage will not be apt to forget the oration given him last Sunday by the people of Washington for a long time, if he ever does. It was previously announced that he would preach twice, in the morning at the Eastern Presbyterian Church, of which he preached the dedicatory sermon when it was built, and in the evening at the First Presbyterian church, locally known as the "President's Church," because President and Mrs. Cleveland attend it. Notwithstanding the day being rainy and generally disagreeable out of doors, Dr. Talmage found the Eastern church packed to suffocation almost, and before he began his sermon, which was on the Authenticity of the Bible, he was informed that the Sunday-school room was also filled with those anxious to hear him, and that they would remain until he had completed his sermon if he would say a few words to them. He promptly agreed. At night there was a still larger crowd. More than 2,000 people were unable to get inside of the First church, although it is a large one, people having begun to arrive at the doors as early as 5 o'clock, although they knew that 7 o'clock was the hour at which they are usually opened. It was announced from the pulpit that Dr. Talmage would at the close of the regular services inside address from the church steps as many as cared to wait. The entire crowd waited, and were repaid by an address in the doctor's happiest vein, in which he told his hearers that Christ never preached except in the streets, as there were no churches in His day. His sermon inside was on "Future Reunion and Recognition of Friends in the World to Come," being preceded by an introduction in which Dr. Sunderland, pastor of the church, told of a young preacher who came to Washington in 1859, when the auditorium of the First church was just being finished, and of his asking him to preach from his pulpit. He said he recalled easily the subject of the sermon: "The Power of the Bible"—and that the young preacher drew a sublime picture of a glorious sunrise on a benighted sea. That young preacher was Dr. Talmage, who was not then one of the most widely known preachers in the world. In fact he was scarcely known at all at that time, and had it not been for a request made by a personal friend he would not have been asked to occupy Dr. Sunderland's pulpit.

T.

Condensed Smoke.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

Two young men sat together in an office, their feet tilted up on the office table, and both smoking cigars. One held a newspaper from which he was reading extracts to the other, and both were evidently lawyers, young, possibly briefless, and with their future, successful or otherwise, before them.

"Here's a queer item, Neddie, said the reader at length. "An object lesson for us chaps who are just starting in life."

"What is it Charlie?" asked the other, lazily puffing a blue cloud from his mouth and watching the smoke. "If you have found any condensed wisdom hid away in that paper, cough it up, and give us the benefit."

Listen to this then, Neddie. 'A man who died recently, at the age of 73, left a record which he began when 18 years old and continued for fifty-two years. The book, filled with methodical entries, showed that in these fifty-two years the man had smoked 628,715 cigars, of which he had received 42,629 as presents, while for the 585,086 he had paid about $10,433. In the fifty-two years, according to his bookkeeping, he had drank, 28,786 glasses of beer, and 36,081 glasses of spirits, for which he spent $5,350.' The diary closes, with these words: 'I have tried all things; I have seen many; I have accomplished nothing." "I tell you what it is, boy, that's enough to set a fellow to thinkin," said the reader, laying down the paper and his cigar with it. "One cigar at a time seems such a little thing that one doesn't realize how many he will convert into smoke in a lifetime."

"No-o, he certainly doesn't if those figures are correct," replied his friend, taking his legs down from the table, and looking thoughtfully at his half-smoked cigar. "I'm inclined to think that a fellow is a good deal of a chump who fixes the habit upon himself in the first place. I did it in my callow youth when my pin feathers were growing. Mother ought to have spanked me but instead she cried, and I was so wise I thought I knew more than a crying woman."

"I'm afraid you were not the only boy in America who knew more than his mother," replied Charlie soberly. "If I could allay my conscience by paying a dollar apiece for all the tears I've caused mother to shed, I'd be willing to work hard for the money. I shall never forget the look on her face the first time I came into her presence with a lighted cigar in my mouth. She hated tobacco, and she said to me gravely, 'My son, you are laying the foundations for a habit which you will regret forming all your life.' I called her a tobacco crank, I remember, and laughed at her. She used a queer argument in our talk that day which I have never forgotten. 'What if I should take a pound of flour, say three times a day, or oftener, and putting a match to it, burn it up merely for the pleasure of seeing the smoke and smelling the odor of burnt flour; what would you think of me?' 'I should say it was a wicked waste of money,' I replied quickly. 'No more wicked than your spending more than this in buying rolls of tobacco leaves to burn—not as much so, for my burned flour does me no harm, while you are subjecting the delicate mechanism of your body to the action of a poisonous smoke which will sooner or later bring on disease and weakness.'"

"And she was right, Charlie. I notice that mothers do have a way of hitting moral nails on the head, if they are not so successful with the hardware article."

"I say, Neddie, suppose we improve on our youth. We are men now, not boys, and seeing the folly, let's take it by the foretop. Stop this tobacco-puffing habit, and put the money we spend on it into a savings bank of our own. What do you say?" Neddie took some extra-long whiffs of his loved weed. He had not realized how attached to it he had become until he thought of giving it up. "That is the sensible course, I know, Charlie," he replied slowly, "but it is so much easier to be foolish."

"But just think, Neddie—you and I want a library, both in the office and in our homes by and by when we shall have them, and according to that old fellow's figuring, our tobacco money would furnish us liberal spending money for books. Come on—let's call it a go. I'll take the first step," and he tossed his cigar stump into the fire.

Of the two Charlie could give up a habit or an idea far more easily than Ned, but the latter, while it took him longer to make up his mind to a course, was a very stick-tight in tenacity, when once it was made up.

"That's a good idea about the books, Charlie. I've always had an ambition to own a good library. Let's see, thirty cents a day (for I hate your poor trash tobacco) and it won't be long at the rate we're going it, before we shall want our five cigars a day besides treating," interposed Charlie.

"Whew!" exclaimed Ned, with a blank look of surprise. "Fifteen dollars a month for smoking expenses for one. My, but it opens a fellow's eyes when he looks at aggregates, doesn't it Charlie boy, it's the driblets that entice one so, the little foxes which spoil the vines. There's my hand, you shall not suffer as a martyr in a good cause alone, and we'll go partners in this business as well as the other."

"We'll put the money in that 'nickel in the slot,' bank that father gave me when I was a kid," Charlie said, after a fervent hand-shake to bind the bargain. "It can only be opened at a five dollar deposit, and five dollars will buy a law book."

It was vastly harder to keep the resolution than it was to make it. Charlie Hall, with his light, sanguine temperament, had the hardest struggle. In truth there were days when he was "crosser than a bear with a sore head," as those who unfortunately came in contact with him affirmed, while the effects of the weed were passing out of his system, and more than once he would have given up in despair had not Ned Howard put the lever of his tenacious will power under his wavering resolution. It was no easy struggle for Ned himself, but once caught with his hand on the plow he would have scorned to look back. The pleasure of a certain bright-eyed young lady, when she missed the accustomed cigar-case from his pocket was an added incentive to perseverance; and in a few weeks nothing would have tempted him into the old slavery. The custom of treating presented the hardest temptation to resist. The wide-eyed wonder of their associates at their refusal to smoke with them—even taunts and jeers from some who, in their secret hearts, respected them the more for their abstinence. Society is like a nettle, humor it, cater to its usages, and show your fear of what "they say," and you will get stung. Grasp it with a firm hand, determined to follow your own highest ideals of truth and right in spite of "them," and it becomes like softest silk to the palm.

Ten years passed away. The firm of Hall & Howard was among the most prosperous of the now large and growing town. A handsome gothic cottage on one of the finest residence streets is occupied by Ned Howard, and the bright-eyed young lady has long since become his wife. Step inside and you will find that it is furnished simply, yet in exquisite taste. A bright little girl is playing a lively march on the piano, and the cottage walls are adorned with handsome paintings, the work of the mother's artistic fingers.

"Come into the library," Ned says, with a pardonable pride in his happy home. It is not a large room, but, like the others, its fittings are tasteful and cheery, two large bookcases filled with a varied selection of standard and modern works being the principal features.

"This is my condensed smoke," Ned says with a smile, "my cigar library, as I call it."

We look puzzled and he proceeds to explain.

"Ten years ago my partner, Charlie Hall, and I, resolved to give up the habit of cigar smoking, in which we were involved to the extent of from three to five a day. At ten cents apiece (the price we paid for the brand we were using), you can see that we were spending hard upon thirty dollars a month between us, and this money saved, we put into a bank which we christened our book deposit. As fast as we reached five dollars, and you have no idea how often the time came around, we took the money out and invested it in one or more volumes. Charlie lives just across the street in that handsome brick you see there. He had the extra lift (aside from our business), of the present of his home from his wife's father. He is a strict old fellow, with anti-tobacco notions so strong that Charlie could not have won his favor by any surer means. The words of a saint with the stain of tobacco upon his lips would be but a tinkling cymbal in the old gentleman's ear, and as for his daughter, Charlie would never have won her either, with cigars in his pocket."

"So the tobacco habit, if indulged in, would have cost you more than the books you have gathered or the money saved?" we remark.

"Just that, sir, and I think we are both cleaner, healthier men for it to-day. In addition, we shall probably never know how much of our success in business we owe to having our brains clear from the narcotic effects of tobacco and liquor, for a temperance pledge soon followed our first resolution. Charlie's library is numerically larger than mine, as his tastes run toward a different class of books which are not so expensive as many of mine, but our law library is, of course, common property. Come in and see it some day."

It was an instructive object lesson, worthy of recommendation as a subject for thoughtful study by any young man beginning a business career for himself, and having well studied it, may he go and do likewise.—Interior.

Family Worship.

That was a most noteworthy statement of Minister Bayard the other day, in an address to his neighbors and friends, when he spoke of the genuine and refined hospitality which had been accorded to him abroad, and added: "I have never passed a night in any house in which that family did not kneel every morning in common prayer to the Ruler of the world. Everywhere it is done. It is not done ostentatiously, but it is done by the hearts of the people, and it is almost their universal practice." It will not be forgotten that Mr. Bayard moved in the most aristocratic circles of British society, with the great lords and baronets and titled dignitaries. What a pleasant surprise to learn that family worship is common in such homes. We wish we could say as much for the senators and millionaires of American society.—Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in regular session at the Mission Rooms on Monday, December 10th, at 9:35 a. m.

The treasurer read his report which showed that the receipts for November were $11,-710.07, which was $4,585.94 less than the receipts of November, 1893. The receipts for the year since April 1st are $80.017.60, which is $13 380.14 less than the receipts of last year at the same date.

The Secretary reported that he had laid these facts before the Church, both through the papers and through personal letters to our ministers, and that many encouraging replies had been received, leading us to hope that a special effort would be made in the next month or two, to relieve our treasury of its embarrassing condition.

A letter was read from Mr. George D. Adamson, stating that on account of continued attacks of African fever, and in view of the fact that in a few months the time would have arrived when he would be entitled to a leave of absence, he had felt compelled to come home for the purpose of recruiting his health.

This leaves Dr. and Mrs. Snyder as the only white members of our mission at Luebo. It is greatly hoped that the way will be opened for us soon to send reinforcements to this important mission.

Rev. R. P. Baird was appointed as a missionary to Brazil, to be sent out when the way is clear. Mr. Baird is a native Brazilian, and already has the Portuguese language, so that he will be able when he goes, to start work immediately as a preacher of the gospel in Brazil. Mr. Baird has been doing very successful work in his present field at Acworth, Ga., and his people there are deeply attached to him and will be very loath to give him up; but he has long had the missionary work upon his heart, and will be ready to go whenever the funds will justify the committee in sending him.

Rev. W. S. Porter was appointed as a missionary, his field to be assigned later on. The Presbytery of Savannah have undertaken to send out Mr. Porter, and to raise the funds for the purpose, over and above their regular contributions to Foreign Missions. Mr. Porter will probably go by next spring, and it is expected that they will have the necessary funds in hand by that time.

A letter was read from Dr. DuBose, presenting the appeal of the China Mission for a reinforcement of twenty missionaries, and specially asking for a medical missionary to be sent to Kiangyin, to assist in the opening of that new station.

Letters were also read from Dr. Houston, Mr. Stuart, Mr. Sydenstricker, Mr. Woodbridge and others of the China Mission. These letters, or such parts of them as are of general interest, will be published in "The Missionary."

Papers and testimonials were presented bearing on the appointment of Miss Florence Patton, of Mexico, Mo.; all of which were eminently satisfactory; and she will doubtless be appointed as soon as some member of the Committee can pay her the required visit. It is believed that her support will be provided by the Ladies' Missionary Union of that Presbytery, over and above what they have hitherto been contributing.

Interesting letters were read from Mr. Pratt concerning the work in Cuba, an account of which will appear in The Missionary.

The chief business transacted by the Committee was that connected with our Brazilian work. To go into this matter at length would make these notes unreasonably long. The appointment of Dr. J. Rockwell Smith as professor in the Theological Seminary at Sao Paulo was confirmed by the Committee. Mr. Grillbortzer was directed to occupy the Bagagem field as soon as possible.

After transacting the usual routine business the Committee adjourned.

S. H. CHESTER,
Secretary.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Wilmington, St. Andrew's Church :—Sunday was the communion season and Mr. McClure announced five additions, four by letter, and one on profession of faith.

Antioch :—Rev. S. M. Rankin writes: We have just closed a good meeting at Antioch. Rev. A. McQueen assisted, preaching about half of the time. With other blessings, the Lord saw fit to give us a great ingathering of souls. Thirty-six were added to the membership of the church on profession of faith.

Charlotte :—Rev. Mr. White, of Rock Hill, S. C., who was called last Sunday to the pastorate of the Graham Street Presbyterian church, to succeed Rev. F. D. Hunt, has signified his acceptance of the call, and will take charge Feb. 1st.—Charlotte Observer.

Charlotte :—On Sunday, Dec. 16th, Rev. F. D. Hunt preached his farewell sermon as pastor of Graham Street church. Text, Acts 20:32. He gave the following statistics of the work during his three years pastorate. Members received by examination 104; members received by letter, 50; total 154; dismissed to other churches, 25; died, 4; suspended, 14; expelled, 2; present membership on roll, 244. He left for his new field, Sanford, Fla., on Tuesday, 18th.

Carthage :—Last Sunday we celebrated the Lord's Supper. The names of thirteen persons were read who have recently joined our church. Two by letter, and eleven on examination. The latter were brought into the church as a result of a few days meeting held by the late pastor, Rev. W. M. Eldridge, at a mission point two and a half miles from here.

Mr. Eldridge has very greatly endeared himself to the hearts of our people, and we regret very much to part with him, but we feel that Presbytery has acted wisely in calling him to the evangelistic work. He seems to have a special fitness for this work, and we commend him to the people among whom he may labor. May the Lord prosper him and give him many precious souls for his hire.

McL.

Fayetteville Church :—Rev. William Black, Superintendent of Synodical Missions, preached for us for ten days. The attendance upon the services was very large and a deep interest prevailed from the beginning. There have been twenty additions to the Presbyterian church here, three will join other Presbyterian churches and some the Baptist and Methodist. Mr. Black briefly and forcibly presented the cause of Synod's missions and $175 was subscribed to the cause—the Home Missionary Society supplementing this with $100.

We have just opened up a fourth mission point in connection with this church, by organizing a Sunday-school which promises to be largely attended.

A. J. McKELWAY.

VIRGINIA.

Lynchburg :—Rev. T. H. Rice, Jr., of Alexandria, has been assisting Dr. Fleming in Westminster church. The preaching was greatly enjoyed by large congregations, and the church was much revived. There have been twelve additions to the church.

Oxford, Rockbridge County :—At this church, of which Rev. W. L. Bailey is pastor, communion services were held, Dec. 2d, and there were six additions on profession of faith. Mr. Bailey has been conducting protracted services during the fall at a number of places in the bounds of his charge, and there have been numerous conversions. Last week he was conducting nightly services at Woodside church, of which he is also pastor.—Central Presbyterian.

Lexington :—Announcement was made Dec. 2d, that after January 1st the pews of the church should be free.

Richmond :—Quite a full meeting of the Christian ministers of Richmond was held on Monday morning, December 10th, the Rev. Dr. J. Y. Fair presiding. It was specially called for the consideration of a plan for the house to house visitation of the city; and such a plan, prepared by a special committee, was heartily adopted. An Executive Committee of one minister and one layman from each denomination was appointed, and a committee from each congregation is to be set to work in looking after those who are religiously or materially destitute. The meeting was an inspiring exhibition of the unity of the Spirit in the body of Christ, and was characterized throughout by confidence, regard and affection for each other; and by earnest desire to seek the good of all the people of this city. One of the results was the purpose to meet on the second Monday of each month at 11 a. m., in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. building.

The Rev. J. P. Gammon and Mr. Howard Swineford represent the Presbyterian churches on the Executive Committee.—Central Presbyterian.

Second Church, Richmond :—At the second church (Dr. Hoge, pastor), the communion was on the 9th; and ten additions were announced, eight by letter, and two on profession of faith.

Piedmont Church, Franklin County :—Rev. R. C. Anderson, Jr., of Roanoke closed a series of services in this church, Dec. 4th. The church was edified and revived, and nineteen persons connected themselves with the Presbyterian church, most of them being heads of families. Ten infants also were baptized. This is part of the field in which Rev. J. M. Holladay has been laboring.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Aveleigh Church :—At Newberry, rendered vacant by the recent death of its pastor, Rev. J. S. Cozby, D. D., has called the Rev. R. P. Pell, of Cranberry, N. C., to become its pastor.

Rev. A. L. Phillips :—Secretary of Colored Evangelization, has been making a visitation of some of the churches in upper South Carolina, in the interest of the cause he represents. He spent Sabbath, the 9th inst., at Spartanburg, where, after hearing his admirable exposition of the work, a good collection was raised.

Presbyterianism :—Of the white population in South Carolina the Baptists claim about 80,000 communicants, and the Methodists something over 70,000, while the Presbyterians report a little over 18,000. And yet Presbyterianism is said to be relatively stronger in this State than in any other in the Southern or Western States.

The Rev. H. B. Pratt :—Expecting to remain in Cuba till the end of April, requests his correspondents to address him at "Santa Clara, Cuba." Please to note that postage to Cuba is five cents the half ounce, with double charge on all excess of weight, or deficiency in the amount of five cents on each half ounce.

KENTUCKY.

Portland Avenue Church :—A protracted service of unusual interest was brought to a close in this church on Sunday, December 9th. The pastor, Rev. David M. Sweets, was assisted by Rev. Joseph Rennie, of the Stuart Robinson Memorial church, of this city. For two or three weeks before, both pastor and people made earnest prayer and preparation of heart for the approaching meeting, which began on Sunday, Nov. 25th. On Monday night, Mr. Rennie came to us, and preached every night for two weeks, except Saturday and Sunday, with unusual unction and power. Day service was conducted by the pastor. From the beginning, God was gracious, and as his people "proved" him (see Mal. 3:10), he opened the windows of heaven, and poured us out a rich blessing. Twenty persons professed faith in Christ, nineteen united with our church. There was also one addition by letter, making twenty additions to the church during the meeting. But this was not all the blessing. Christians were greatly revived and encouraged. The people have seen "the good hand of our God" upon them, and they "thank God and take courage." Since the beginning of the present pastorate, six months ago, twenty-five have united with the church; the people, who for a year were without a pastor, have rallied to the support of their present pastor, and this meeting is declared by the members to be God's most gracious blessing for many years. We thank him for sending us this brother for this special service, who, in his peculiarly earnest and spiritual way, "shunned not to declare unto us the whole counsel of God." To God be all the praise.—Christian Observer.

Carlisle :—Rev. J. H. Hopper, for two weeks, assisted the pastor, Rev. H. M. Scudder. The congregations were large and solemn. Twenty-four were added to the Presbyterian church on profession of faith, and Christian people were edified.

Dr. Dabney at the Louisville Theological Seminary :—The Rev. Dr. Dabney has been in Louisville for six week past delivering a course of lectures before the students of the Louisville Theological Seminary. His closing lecture was made on Monday, the 10th inst., and the following day he left Louisville for his home in Texas. In his lectures Dr. Dabney discussed two distinct but closely related topics, viz: Philosophy in its relations to Theology, and Christian Ethics. It is unnecessary to say that he handled those subjects in a masterly way. His farewell words to the young men were full of wise counsel and marked by affection for them and undying devotion to the Church of God. Dr. and Mrs. Dabney received many kindly attentions while in Louisville, and they not only renewed old friendships, but won for themselves a warm place in the hearts of many who met them for the first time.

GENERAL.

Bishop Haygood :—Of the Methodist Church, whose serious sickness was mentioned last week, is now reported to be getting well.

University of Virginia :—Rev. J. Wm. Jones, D. D., chaplain, writes to the Southern Churchman: Of the 551 students here this session, about 300 are church members. Nearly all of the Professors are church members. Some of the Christian students are showing a consecrated zeal and sanctified common sense in working among their fellows which is really beautiful.

Protestant Episcopal :—Through the gift of Mr. George A. Reinicker, of Baltimore, a lectureship has been founded by the Faculty of the Theological Seminary, Fairfax county, Va., somewhat similar to the famous Bampton Lectures. The lecturers are to be chosen by the faculty, and are not restricted to the Episcopal Church.—Baltimore Sun.

Reformed Episcopal :—A warm discussion of Vestments is going on in the Episcopal Recorder, between Bishops Latane and Cheney—Bishop Latane holds that as their Church rejects the word "priest" from the prayer book, it should also discard the surplice, which he regards as a priestly garment. Bishop Cheney intends that the garment has no such sacerdotal character, and wishes it retained as the distinctive dress of the Episcopal ministry.

Methodist :—The Rev. R. N. Wells, D. D., a prominent minister of the South Carolina Conference M. E. Church, South, died at Greenville, on the 11th inst, having removed there but four days previously to assume pastoral charge of the Buncombe Street church to which he had been appointed at the recent Conference. He had been in ill health for sometime.

Edgefield:—Rev. L. H. Baldwin who is supplying the Edgefield group of churches writes us that the interest in the work is reviving at all of the points in the group. Nine have recently been added to the churches. Two at Ropers; two at Johnston; four at Edgefield, and one at Trenton. Work has just commenced on a new church at Ropers.

THE RED CROSS ASSOCIATION—ITS ORIGIN AND METHODS

In regard to the origin of the Red Cross, it will suffice to say that the ideas which culminated in the International Treaty now adhered to by forty-four separate nationalities, were conceived by Monsieur Henri Dunant, a Swiss gentlemen, a member of the Society of Public Utility of Switzerland. Happening to witness the battle of Solferino in Italy, June 24th, 1859, he became horror-stricken by the needless suffering of the wounded and dying, who lay upon the field for days without medical aid. Monsieur Dunant described in a souvenir book which he wrote, the scenes which so profoundly stirred him. He also set forth in his book, plans for joining the Governments of the world in an international compact which should afford immunity and protection to civil aid upon battlefields, thereby augmenting the military medical facilities and reducing the needless suffering. His ideas were earnestly taken up by his Society and with the aid and co-operation of the Swiss Federal Council, a conference of Nations was held in Geneva in October, 1863, and that was followed by the Geneva Convention of August, 1864, at which the Treaty which bears that name, was created. This Treaty was at once signed by sixteen leading nations; which number has since been increased to forty, including the United States; the latter gave its adhesion by Act of Congress, March 1st, 1882. The Act was ratified by the Congress of Berne—the International ratifying Power—June 9th, 1882, and Proclamation by President Arthur, June 26th, 1882.

The incoming administration of 1881 was the first to awaken to the national importance of the Red Cross, and to the lamented Garfield, Arthur, Blaine and Windom, is due the credit of grasping the merits of the treaty with the utmost fervor.

The Red Cross (a red Greek cross on a white ground) is the universally adopted emblem or insignia of that organization which is known as the Red Cross Treaty of Geneva.

METHODS.

The resolutions of the Geneva Conference provide that there shall be, in every treaty country, one committee, and only one, whose duty it shall be to co-operate in time of war by all the means in its power with the medical and sanitary service of the army, and this committee shall place itself in communication with the government of its own country in order that its offers of assistance, in case of need, may be accepted. In the event of war, the committees of belligerent nations shall furnish relief to their respective armies in proportion to their respective resources and, if need be, they shall solicit the assistance of committees of neutral nations, within the treaty.

With the concurrence of the military authorities they shall, upon request, place nurses upon the battle-fields but only under the direction of the military commanders.

The interchange of communications between the several national committees is made through the Swiss committee, which bears the title of the "Comite International." As early as 1865 it had been indirectly proposed that the committees might increase their usefulness by relief work in cases of calamities other than war, but the proposal met with no favor. It was not until the formation of the United State Committee in 1881, that such a feature, owing to the earnest advocacy of such a progressive measure by Miss Clara Barton, took practical form and thereby broadened the scope of the humane work. The matter was laid before the International Committee which ably seconded Miss Barton's efforts. By that committee it was submitted to the other treaty countries; and finally unanimous sanction was given. The change, or addition to the original intention, became known as the "American Amendment." What this amendment has meant to the sufferers by fire, flood, pestilence, cyclones and other great calamities in our own country, during the past dozen years, need not be repeated here. There is scarcely a section of the country that has not made its acknowledgment in tears of gratitude.

Upon adopting the treaty of the Geneva Convention, each nation is required to at once instruct its army in the philanthropic and humane objects, and the provisions of the treaty,

JAPAN.

Japan gave its adhesion to the Treaty of Geneva in 1886. In 1889, at the third reunion of the Japanese Red Cross Association, His Majesty, the Emperor, was tendered and accepted the Presidency. In accepting, the Emperor spoke as follows: "I am more than honored by this distinguished assembly, in receiving and accepting this honorable position. It will give me great pleasure to be an active worker in an active association."

The fullest protection of the emblem of the Red Cross was given by an Imperial Decree, forbidding its use for any purpose except by the army, and the Red Cross Association.

There can be little wonder, then, that the Association is doing such noble and efficient work during the present hostilities; nor that the Japanese Minister of War promulgated, on the 22d of September last, a notice to the army, and to the inhabitants, recalling to their minds their obligations and duties in behalf of the cause of duty and mercy to the suffering, sick and wounded, whether of their own army or that of their enemy.

The spirit of the Geneva Treaty insists that immediately a soldier is wounded or becomes disabled by sickness, he is no longer a belligerent but becomes from that moment a neutral, subject for the merciful care of those employed in administering relief under the Treaty; hence Japan, by instructing her army to show the same degree of tender mercy to a wounded, sick, or even a dead Chinese soldier that they would to their own, is simply carrying out with the most commendable faithfulness the obligations she took upon herself when her solemn signature and seal were given to the Geneva Convention; because this is not more nor less than every other Treaty Nation has pledged itself to do. This is what the Red Cross means; and no better object lesson could be given to those who would know what the Red Cross is, than that now being shown by the treatment of Japan toward her own and her enemy's sick and wounded.

It is the result, not so much of the "exceptionable humanity, progress and advancement" of Japan as of the protection of the Red Cross, the co-operation of her military with it, and the strict discipline of her troops in regard to it. Japan is not only in perfect accord with the letter and spirit of the Red Cross, but her splendid work in this war challenges the admiration of the world. His Majesty, the Emperor, at once grasped the vital principle which is the foundation of the Red Cross—THE PROTECTION OF ITS INSIGNIA—and having enacted laws prohibiting its use by any one unauthorized by the Red Cross Society or the War Department, is enabled to carry out the wise and beneficent provisions of the Geneva Convention unhampered.

The American National Red Cross is located at Washington; its Presidency was tendered to President Garfield who declined in favor of Miss Clara Barton, "as a just recognition of her valuable services in having brought the Red Cross into this country and carried the treaty through Congress and the American Amendment through the foreign ratifying powers."

Our American National Red Cross, under its Amendment, has rendered relief in great disasters in civil life of the last twelve years. It now remains to be seen how well our Government and people would perform their part in recognition, protection and discipline in case of war, to give America as commendable a reputation for advancement, progress and humanity, as Japan so enviably wears to-day. (Furnished by Clara Barton, President of the American National Red Cross.)

FROM CHAPEL HILL.

DEAR PRESBYTERIAN:—Since "C. P. S." has removed to the cold north we will all miss her genial chatty letters from Chapel Hill—though I hope not from that great seat of learning—Harvard, which has, by force of circumstances, won her from the hill and dell, the forest and field she loved so well. Her letters in the News and Observer are greatly enjoyed and I trust we may hear often from her through the columns of our paper, as of yore.

We have just had a pleasant communion season. No preliminary services and no additions, but a season of refreshing from the hands of the Lord.

Rev. Mr. Turnbull, of Durham, preached twice to full audiences. We greatly enjoyed his visit and hope he can come again and stay longer.

Bro. D. J. Currie is doing some good preaching and is organizing the forces of the little church. We are a little but willing band.

Of the students here the past session, a fair proportion of them, (about 75), are of Presbyterian families. A reception was given at the manse early in the session by the ladies, when a social hold was gotten of these.

Three deacons have recently been elected, ordained and installed viz: Dr. T. J. Wilson, Prof. E. A. Alderman and Mr. E. L. Harris. We have had no deacons for some time, but the faithful session, with Dr. Venable always at his post, has been doing all the work. The new Board of Deacons made Dr. Wilson, Chairman, E. L Harris, Treasurer, and Prof. Alderman, Secretary; so each one has an office.

Mr. Currie preaches very acceptably one Sunday in each month at New Hope church seven miles off. We are glad that by the help of Synod and Presbytery we are thus enabled to have so good a pastor. * * *

DR. PECK'S COLLECTED WORKS.

About three hundred subscribers have been secured for the first volume of these works.

The Committee of Publication desires in order to safely undertaking to publish this volume, two hundred subscribers more; or about one hundred subscribers more, together with one hundred dollars freely contributed toward the stereotyped plates.

Between this and January 1st, the subscription price is $1.25 per volume, net; after that the price per volume will be higher.

Will not the friends of Dr. Peck, the friends of the Church and the friends of Christian literature generally, avail themselves of the opportunity to secure the book at the lowest price and come to the support of this good enterprise.

THOS. C. JOHNSON.

The Presbytery of North Alabama.

Adjourned Meeting: Rev. A. B. Curry was received from the Presbytery of Suwanee. Mr. L. M. Fleming was taken under care of Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry. A call was approved for the services of Rev. W. M. Eldridge, of Fayetteville Presbytery, presented by the Second church of Birmingham. Rev. A. S. Doak, was dismissed to the Presbytery of Holston. Licentiate C. C. Epperson was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry and arrangements made to install him pastor of Lacon church.

Fourth Quarter.—Lesson XIII.

Dec. 30.—Review.

Golden Text. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Heb. xiii. 8.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Review briefly the events of the life of Jesus up to the beginning of this Quarter, covering: Part I. The Thirty Year of Private Life—from the Birth of Jesus to the coming of John the Baptist; Part II. The Opening Events of Christ's Ministry—from the coming of John to the public appearance of Jesus at Jerusalem; Part III. The Early Judean Ministry—from the public appearance of Jesus in Jerusalem until His return into Galilee. Write under each the events belonging to it, and go over it until you are thoroughly familiar with it.

Second Step. Arrange the events of this Quarter under the heading given by the guide of the references, and study until you are familiar with them in their order.

Part IV. First Period of the Galilean Ministry—from the return into Galilee to the choosing of the Twelve.

The Return and Beginning of Work, Mark i. 14, 15; John iv. 43–45. Compare for season of year John iv. 35.

John iv. 46–54.

Luke iv. 16–32.

Mark i. 16–20. Compare Luke v. 1–11.

Mark i. 21–37.

First Preaching Tour. Mark i. 38, 39: Luke iv. 43, 44.

Mark i. 40–45.

Mark ii 1–12.

Mark ii. 13–22. Compare Matt. ix. 9–17.

Second Passover. John v. 1. Compare (for season of year) Luke vi. 1.

John v. 2–16.

John v. 17–47.

Mark ii. 23–28; Luke vi. 1–5.

Mark iii. 1–6; Luke vi. 6–11.

Part V. Second Period of the Galilean Ministry—from the choosing of the Twelve to the withdrawal into Northern Galilee.

The Beginning of Organization.

Mark iii. 8–19; Luke vi. 16.

Matt. v-vii a Luke vi. 17—vii. 1.

Second Preaching Tour, with the Twelve, Luke viii. 1–3. (This Tour evidently began with the descent from the Mount, and Luke after giving some of the events during its course sums up the rest of it in these words.)

Luke vii. 2–10.

Luke vii. 11–17.

Luke vii. 18–35.

Matt. xi. 20–30.

Luke vii. 36–50.

Strengthening opposition results in changed form of teaching and greater manifestations of power.

Mark iii. 20–25; Matt. xii. 14–50.

Mark iv. 1-34; Matt. xiii.

Mark iv. 35-41.

Mark v. 1-20.

Mark v. 21-43.

Mark vi. 1-6.

Third Preaching Tour—the Twelve sent forth. Mark vi. 7; Matt. ix. 36—x. 4.

Matt. x. 5-42; Mark vi. 8-13.

The rest of the events of this period are not covered by the lessons of this Quarter.

Third Step. In Christ's sermon at Nazareth He announced from a prophecy in Isaiah, what His programme of work was to be, as follows:

1. To Preach the Gospel to the Poor.
2. To Heal the Brokenhearted.
3. To Deliver the Captives.
4. To Give Sight to the Blind.
5. To Set at Liberty the Bruised.

Group under these five items in His programme the events you have just arranged in the order of time, that you may see how far He carried out His programme. (Note. It may not always be easy to distinguish between 3 and 5. The "bruised," however, are rather those that are under oppressive yokes—as of the law as interpreted by the Scribes—which the "captives" are those held under the power of Satan—either physically or spiritually.)

Fourth Step. Make a list of the principal teachings of Christ.

Fifth Step. Make a list of the characteristics of Christ, as they are brought out by this Quarter's Lessons and events.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

First: A rapid review of the Topics and Golden Texts by the Superintendent should be a part of the exercise in every school. To keep it from being merely by "rote," and to bring out the significance of the texts it may be arranged as follows:

LESSON I.

Supt. Where did Jesus formally open His Galilean ministry?

School. At Nazareth.

Supt. What warning is given us by His departure from Nazareth?

School. [Repeat Golden Text.]

LESSON II.

Supt. How did Jesus begin His ministry in Capernaum?

School. With the draught of fishes.

Supt. What promise did He make to the four whom He called to follow Him?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON III.

Supt. Describe the first Sabbath in Capernaum.

School. He taught in the synagogue, cast out a demon, healed Simon's wife's mother, and at sunset healed all the multitudes that were brought to Him.

Supt. What impression did His teaching and miracles make?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON IV.

Supt. How did Jesus reward the faith of the men who let down their friend through the roof?

School. The paralytic was healed.

Supt. Before healing his body what more wonderful power did Jesus claim?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON V.

Supt. How did Jesus vindicate His disciples from the charge of Sabbath breaking?

School. By showing from the Old Testament the true spirit of the law.

Supt. Who alone has the authority to interpret the Sabbath law.

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON VI.

Supt. When Jesus wished to organize His Kingdom, what body of men did He appoint?

School. The Twelve Apostles.

Supt. What was the object of their appointment?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON VII.

Supt. When He had chosen the Twelve what great discourse did He deliver?

School. The Sermon on the Mount.

Supt What is the central precept of that sermon?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON VIII.

Supt. What two different classes sought to hinder Jesus in His work.

School. Open foes and misguided friends.

Supt. What statement about His reception does this Illustrate?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON IX.

Supt. Who sent to Jesus to inquire if He were the Christ?

School. John the Baptist.

Supt. What prophecy did Jesus quote in His testimony to John?

School. [Pepeat G. T.]

LESSON X.

Supt. When opposition to Jesus increased what method of teaching did He use?

School. Teaching by Parables.

Supt. What seed was He sowing in men's hearts?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESSON XI.

Supt. How did Jesus seek to multiply His own influence?

School. By sending forth the Twelve.

Supt. What commission did He give them?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

LESON XII.

Supt. What prophecy about Christ did we have for our Christmas lesson?

School. Isaiah's prophecy of the Prince of Peace.

Supt. What is the final outlook and promise of His kingdom?

School. [Repeat G. T.]

Second Either in classes or from the desk the scholars should be drilled into familiarity with the outline of Christ's life. If the Teacher looks ahead a week—as all teachers ought to do—and will give the more advanced scholars some of the work to do described under Study of the Leson, it will be most valuable.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF DEC. 6.

124. a. The Sower, Mark iv. 4, compare Matt. x. 7.
b. The Reaper, Matt. ix. 37, 38; John iv. 35–38.
c. The Shepherd, Matt. x. 6; John xxi. 15–17.

By "country life" we meant life on the farm, but some took it in a wider sense to include fishermen. This we could not count a mistake. The "Messenger" or "herald" cannot be considered a feature of country life. Nor is the general reference "workman" (Matt. x. 10) definite enough to be considered a metaphor; the verse does not describe their work but their reward. Other answers given, such as "sheep among wolves," the "vine and the branches," etc., fail in that they are not descriptive of the work of the Apostles.

Correct answers have been received as follows:

Isabelle Robeson, 124.
Chas.P.Russell, 124b.
Bettie Overcash, 124.
Beatrice T. McEachern, 124.
Flora C.McNeill, 124c.
Chas. E. McMillan, 124b.
Mary McIntyre, 124c.
Robbie McIntyre, 124c.
Willie Arrowood, 124c.

ORGANIC UNION IN THE SOUTH CAROLINA SYNOD.

MR. EDITOR:—In your editorial of the 6th inst., upon Organic Union, you say that "the Synod of South Carolina had only a majority of two to declare its approbation" of the Assembly's action in this matter. Without explanation your statement is likely to mislead. When the matter was brought up in the Synod and the resolution was proposed "That in the opinion of the Synod of South Carolina the action of our Assembly was not only consistent with proper courtesy, but was eminently judicious, and therefore to be commended," not a voice was raised nor a word uttered in disapprobation of the Assembly's action in the premises. Several did not object to the Synod's taking any action upon the matter, but simply because they did not regard such action pertinent under the circumstances, it not being the province of the Synod to sit in judgment upon the acts and deliverances of the supreme judicatory. And some, if not all, who thus opposed the resolution were particular to state that they were utterly opposed to Organic Union. Hence the closeness of the vote in the Synod, as these brethren generally voted against the adoption of the resolution. But that vote, I am sure, does not at all indicate the sentiment in our Synod with regard to the merits of the question. From a wide acquaintance with Presbyterians in South Carolina, and a fair knowledge of their views upon Organic Union, I believe that the vote of the commissioners from our six Presbyteries in the last Assembly upon this question more nearly represented the will of our people upon that matter, when only one out of sixteen voted for the appointment of conference, and he has since removed from our bounds.

STATED CLERK.

PEACE INSTITUTE.

Dr Shearer's report on Church and Christian Education published in a recent issue of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, while, no doubt, not so intending, has in it an expression which seems to the writer rather unfair to Peace Institute. He says Peace Institute has done "fairly well," whereas it has had a success, equaled by few female colleges in the South. Its faculty, its equipments, its buildings and its standard of scholarship is such as to cause a feeling of just pride in the heart of every Southern Presbyterian. And while its enrollment has not been as large as it deserves, still it has kept pace and even surpassed most other colleges, and will show an attendance of about 200 during this year. The writer greatly rejoices in the success of Davidson College, and is sure that Dr. Shearer and all others will be glad to have this correction made public, and will rejoice with the rest of us in the success which has attended Peace Institute also. READER.

JONESBORO, N. C.

The Rev. K. A. McLeod, writes. We are due many thanks to the ladies of the Jonesboro congregation for a pretty carpet and nice counterpane as a thanksgiving present. We are also due thanks for many nice baskets of good things.

Mrs. McLeod has been very sick for five weeks. I am happy to say she is now convalescent. During her sickness every possible kindness was shown. Words cannot express our appreciation for such kindness. May the Giver of every good and perfect gift abundantly reward them all.

Gastralgia and Chills Cured.

Dovesville, S. C., March 15th, 1894.

Dear Sir:—Yours of 3rd, to hand and in reply would say, that the Electropoise I bought of you in December last was for my wife, who has for several years, had very severe attacks of what the physicians called "Gastralgia;" these attacks did not yield to any medicine, but would simply take their course, causing the greatest suffering, lasting from one to three weeks at a time; she had about the first of December last the worst attack of any before. She had for some time before felt that the Electropoise would be beneficial to her, and desired me to purchase one for her. She commenced its use a few days after it was received, and has been greatly benefitted by it, and would not give it up for any consideration. She has not had any attack of the trouble since its use.

About ten days ago while on a visit to friends, she was taken with a violent chill followed by severe headache, and pain in the lower spine, and considerable fever. It was necessary to come home (a distance of nine miles) and went immediately to bed using the Electropoise faithfully, from which she obtained a good rest, with no fever next day and no recurrence of the chill, and on the third day she was up and attending to household duties. She feels that her health has greatly improved by the use of the Electropoise.

Hoping that you may meet with still greater success, I remain,

Yours truly,

J. F. WILSON.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A fire on the Eagles' Island on the West side of the river—opposite Wilmington—consumed over 1,000 barrels spirits turpentine, several thousand barrels of rosin, and three or four warehouses. The wharves also were badly damaged. The loss some $20,000 fell mostly upon Mr. Matt. W. Heyer. The Champion Compress Company lost $5,000—about half covered by insurance.

The Mt. Airy section has experienced severe drought this year. Very little rain fell during the summer. Many wells have been dry for months and some failed recently. Notwithstanding, the News says, a good corn crop and a fair tobacco crop have been made in most places.

The Scotland Neck Democrat gives these figures as the approximate crop on the Caladonia farm this year: Cotton, 11,000 bales; corn, 15,000 barrels; wheat, 6,000 bushels; molasses, 70 barrels; fodder, 300,000 bundles. Large quantities of clover and grass, some potato crop, and a number of small crops that cannot be estimated. There are about 5,000 acres in cultivation. There will be killed 500 hogs for pork.

DOMESTIC.

A tornado destroyed the Methodist church in Forsythe, Texas and destroyed other property to the extent of several thousand dollars. The people became panicstricken but no lives seem to have been lost.

The N. K. Fairbank Company have obtained a decision from the U. S. District Court in New York City as to the validity of "Cottolene" as a trade mark and have made permanent an injunction against an imitation of Cottolene.

A proposition is on foot in Southern California looking to the formation of a new State of that part of California.

Last week Reynolds, Ga., was swept by a cyclone. Some eight or ten house were demolished and several others badly damaged. Several person were badly hurt.

DIED.

MATTHEW HENRY McIVER. At his home, near Sanford, N. C., on October 23rd, 1894, in the sixty-first year of his age, M. H. McIver, who had been a ruling elder in Buffalo church for nearly twenty years.

At a meeting of the session of Buffalo church, held, November 11th, 1894, the following resolutions were adopted by the session, viz:

WHEREAS, God in His wisdom has removed from our midst, by death, our esteemed friend and fellow officer in this church, Mr. Matthew Henry McIver, therefore,

Resolved 1st. That we bow in meek submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

2. That we place on record the high estimation in which he was held, not only by ourselves, but by the entire community. And that we bless God for the influence among us of a Christian character so consistent, so steadfast, and so unique.

3. That, as an officer, we shall miss his wise counsel, and that as a member of this church, we shall miss his example in attending upon the services of the sanctuary, for, although physicially infirm, it was the exception for him not to be at every stated service.

4. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and pray that the consolation of the gospel may be theirs.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, and that a page, suitably inscribed, be set apart to his memory.

6. That a copy be furnished his family.

John D. Bellamy, Jr.,
Emanuel Haggitt and wife Grace, Benjamin Tucker, et al.

This is a special proceeding instituted before the Superior Court of New Hanover county, to divide a certain lot in the city of Wilmington, N. C., among the plaintiff and defendants as tenants in common—and it appearing to the Court that Benjamin Tucker is a necessary party to this action, and that he is a non-resident and cannot, after due diligence be found in this State, and that a cause of action exists in plantiff's favor against said defendant.

It is now ordered that the defendant Benjamin Tucker be and appear before the Clerk of the Superior Court of New Hanover county, on Thursday the 17th of January, 1895, and answer or demur to the complaint already filed in this cause or judgment will be awarded against said defendant according to the prayer thereof.

THE MOTHER'S CRADLE SONG.

The following beautiful hymn, is a translation from the "Home Songs" of Sweden. It is crooned by the mother as she is putting her little one to sleep.

Oh, little child, lie still and sleep;
Jesus is near, thou need'st not fear;
No one need fear whom God doth keep
By day or night.
Then lay thee down in slumber deep
Till morning light.

Oh, little child, be still and rest;
He sweetly sleeps whom Jesus keeps;
And in the morning wake so blest
His child to be.
Love every one, but love Him best—
He first loved thee.

Oh, little child, when thou must die,
Fear nothing, then, but say "Amen"
To God's demand, and quiet lie
In His kind hand,
Until He say, "Dear child, come, fly,
To heaven's bright land."

Then when thy work on earth is done
Thou shalt ascend to meet thy friend;
Jesus the little child will own,
Safe at His side;
And thou shalt dwell before the throne.
For He hath died.

Items for Lady Readers.

A pretty Christmas pen-wiper is made of crinkled and shaded green kid cut to represent a four half leaf clover with inner leaves of chamois skin and the lowest layer of plain green kid or felt. Upon the centre of the top is fastened a large clover blossom of either red or white. Another useful little article for a desk is a quaint conceit in the shape of a blotter, of which a clever girl can make a half a dozen at a very slight expense, and send as a holiday remembrance to her men friends. Take a piece of thick, stiff leather and cut it out in the shape of a sole of a shoe or slipper. Cut three or four blotters to correspond, paste one on neatly and fasten the others by means of small holes bored through the extreme ends of the heel and toe and narrow ribbons. Then across the leather, letter irregularly in gilt, "I wish you a merry Christmas from the very bottom of my sole."

Another pretty blotter is made of squares of heavy blotting paper, with a cover of pasteboard covered with kid or satin, on which is inscribed: "Blot out my faults, but not my memory.

To make an attractive and useful present purchase some poem or prose work nicely but plainly bound, and cover it with linen prettily embroidered, or with water-color paper on which dainty designs have been painted. To one of artistic taste this will be a valuable hint.

Some Words About Sarcasm.

We get the following from The Sunday at Home: Once upon a time there was a young girl whom a wise person took to task for the grievous fault of sarcasm.

"My dear," said the kind old voice, "you have a very pretty wit and quite a distinguished gift for sarcasm. I have been watching you, and I have noticed that all your arrows speed home. You find it amusing now to be feared and dreaded, but one day, perhaps, you will wonder why it is that nobody loves you; that everybody shuns you and would rather run away than stay in the same room with you; and then, may be, you will wish that you had not made the world so lonely. We are not all as clever as you, but we have our little good points too, as most of us are trying humbly to do our duty; and be sure, my dear, that the stupidest of us is capable of being wounded and disheartened."

Things Useful.

The roots and tough stalks of celery, chopped fine and dried, are invaluable for soups and dressings.

Chocolate Blanc Mange.—Cover an ounce of gelatine with water. Boil one quart of milk, four ounces of chocolate and twelve ounces of sugar five minutes. Add the gelatine and boil five minutes longer, stirring constantly. Flavor with vanilla, and pour into moulds to cool. This dessert may be served with sweetened cream or a rich custard sauce.

A delicious apple meringue may be made by covering the bottom of a baking dish with pieces of stale cake dipped in sweet milk. Pare, core and slice three or four tart apples; spread over the cake; sprinkle with half a cup of sugar, grate over a little nutmeg, and bake in a moderate oven until the apples are tender. Turn out; heap meringue over the top, and set back in the oven to color. Serve cold with whipped cream.

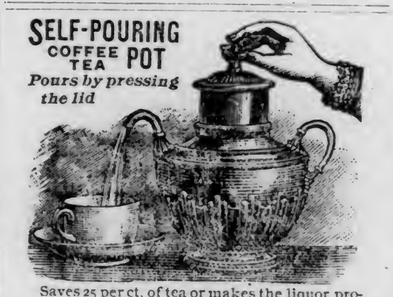
A cork that has been boiled may be pressed more tightly and securely into a bottle than when it is cold.

Small Sand Cakes—Wash one pound of butter and stir it to a cream; gradually add half a pound of sugar, two eggs, and one and one-half pounds of flour. Roll out thin. Cut out into round cakes, wash over with the yolk of egg beaten with a little sugar, and strew with sugar, cinnamon and almonds.

A Little Thing.

Our school has a children's choir, and we were all standing in the gallery that bright morning waiting a minute or two while the organ played its prelude. I could look down over the church, and I thought how pretty it looked with the classes all in their places and so many bright faces and pretty suits. I'm afraid I was thinking most of the suits, for I had a new one myself—cloak and hat and gloves to match, and that makes one feel so comfortable, you know. It was just the time for putting on spring clothes, and nearly everybody in the choir had something new and nice except poor little Maggie Dane.

Maggie has a sweet voice, and she is a pretty girl, too, but that brown dress of hers! Why, it was old last year, and it never was anything very nice. Of course she can't help it, and I'm afraid she was feeling badly about it, too, and noticing how different it was from the others, for I saw her eyes under their drooping lashes steal a glance along the line. I think some one else saw it, for just then Minnie Grey, who had a bunch of roses—beautiful hot-house roses—turned and gave them to Maggie and whispered softly:



"I know they must belong to you, Maggie, dear, for they just match your cheeks."

The gift and the loving words flashed a light all over the drooping face, Maggie's soft cheeks touched the roses in delight, and the next minute her voice rang out in the hymn. How clear and sweet it was!

"Scatter seeds of kindness! Scatter seeds of kindness!"

I have sung those words a good many times, but I never thought of their meaning as I did just then after Minnie had done a little "scattering."

I wonder if that one thoughtful act wasn't really sweeter praise than all the singing of the choir? "It was such a little thing," Minnie would have said if anyone had spoken to her about it. But I am beginning to think that it is the little things, done at the right time, that count for most in this world.—Sunbeam.

LITTLE BROWN BUSHY-TAIL.

Little Brown Bushy-Tail lived up in a tree,
And mossy and snug was his nest;
Acorns and beechnuts in plenty had he,
And he scarcely knew which he liked best.

He was cheery of temper and agile of limb,
And his own little will was his law;
For what was the world and its worries to him
When he held a plump nut in his claw?

As he cracked it he twinkled his knowing black eyes,
The kernel picked out by and by;
Then he ate it and looked uncommonly wise,
Said, "Folk may be worse off than I.

"For I'm sure I'm content with my portion in life,
And of nuts I've a plentiful store;
With my little brown babies and little brown wife,
What on earth could a squirrel want more?"

He had lots of near neighbors as merry as he,
They were cheery and playful each one;
Don't they show us that happy 'tis easy to be,
If good humor we give with our fun?

Content with the blessings our Father may give,
How happy would all of us be;
If we tried with our friends and our neighbors to live,
As the brown squirrel did in the tree!

The Cork in the Bottle.

BY J. F. COWAN.

"Rob," called his mother from the bedroom, where she was finishing her dressing for church," have you studied your Sunday-school lesson this morning?"

"Bother! no!" Rob answered in an impatient tone, scarcely glancing up from the book in which he was very much interested.

"Why, Rob!" said his mother, with some astonishment. "I thought you told me you didn't know anything about it, and I expected you would spend the hour trying to learn something."

"I have tried, mother, as hard as ever I could, but I can't get a bit of it into my head. Some way or other, it is so dry and stuffy that I can't get interested in it."

His mother at that moment came out of the bedroom, and took a glance at the situation. In an instant she saw what was the matter. Going to her room, she came back holding in her hand an empty bottle with the cork driven tightly into its mouth. She walked over to Rob, and handed it to him, saying:

"I wish you would please take this to the kitchen sink, and fill it for me."

Rob arose and left his book quite reluctantly. He went to the kitchen, slamming the door behind him in a way which indicated either that he was very careless or in a very bad humor. After a little while he came back, as he entered the room exclaiming, in a tone which show that he was out of sorts:

"Mother, how do you suppose I am going to get water into this bottle with the neck corked up tightly?"

"I didn't suppose you could, Rob," was the quiet reply.

"Then why in the world did you tell me to do it?" he demanded, half indignantly and half in wonder.

"Just to show you'" said she, "how impossible it was, and that you might understand another matter about which I heard you complaining a moment ago."

"What was that?" asked Rob, dropping his eyes as though he half suspected.

"Why," said his mother, "don't you remember about the Sunday-school lesson? You said you couldn't get it into your head, and you threw the blame for it on the lesson, declaring that it was so dry and stuffy. But don't you see it was simply another case of trying to pour something into a bottle while the mouth was corked?"

"Corked? What do you mean, mama?" asked Rob, now very much interested. "What corked me up?"

For answer his mother simply pointed her finger to the book which he had been reading.

"I don't care," half whimpered Rob. "Uncle Jack said it was a good book for a boy to read."

"Possibly there is nothing wrong in it," said his mother, "if you would read it at the right time; but when you use it on Sunday morning as a cork to stop up your mind, so that the Sunday-school lesson, which is God's message to you, can't get in, I think it is a clear case of a book out of place."

Rob thought the matter over, and evidently came to the same conclusion as his mother; for presently he walked deliberately to the bookcase, and put the book in its place upon the shelf. Then, picking his Sunday-school quarterly out from under the pile of papers and magazines on the library table, he sat himself down in his chair with a resolute look upon his face, saying to himself: "There, now the cork's out. See if you can't go in."

And the bright, interested face with which he came home from Sunday-school a couple of hours later, repeating to his mother some of the things he had learned, and some of the explanations the teacher had given, proved that attempting to fill the bottle with the cork out was an entirely different thing from attempting to fill it with the cork in—Sunday-School Times.

A Happy Christmas.

"Christmas is coming! Christmas is coming!"

That is what little Lucy sang as she went through the hall with a hop skip and jump, clapping her hands for joy.

"And what is little daughter going to do to make somebody happy on Christmas day?"

Papa asked this as he came out into the hall. Then he kissed Lucy good-by, took down his hat from the rack, and went out of the front door before she had time to tell him.

Lucy stopped running, and looked out of the window and thought about it.

Then she went upstairs to mamma and said:

"Mamma, what am I going to do to make somebody happy to-morrow? What can little girls do?"

"You can be just as sweet as a rose all day, and obey mamma as soon as she speaks. That will make me very happy," said mamma.

"But I want to give something to somebody to s'prise 'em and make 'em glad," Lucy said.

"Who is there that you would like to surprise?" her mamma asked.

Lucy thought a minute, then she said:

"Mrs. Bly."

Mrs. Bly lived in the "Home for Aged Women." She was a nice old lady, and Lucy often went with her mother to call upon her.

"Very well, dear," said mamma; "there is your gold dollar; if you want to give it you may."

"May I buy 'zactly what I please, mamma?"

"Yes, dear."

"O, how nice?" said Lucy. "Can't we go now, right off, to buy it?"

Mamma said "Yes" again, and Lucy ran off to get her hood and cloak and mittens. In a few minutes she was out on the street with mamma, gazing into all the shop windows. "What shall I buy? What shall I buy?" She kept asking.

Mamma said a little shawl for Mrs. Bly's shoulder's would be nice, or a pair of warm stockings or some handkerchiefs. But Lucy shook her head.

"Wouldn't she like a bu'ful dollie or a sweet little kitty better?" she asked.

Mamma had to laugh at that.

Just then Lucy cried out, "There it is! I see it! That is what I want.'

Guess what it was.

It was a beautiful large rosebush in a pretty pot. There were two roses on it and plenty of buds.

So they went in and bought it. The man said he would send it up right away.

Old Mrs. Bly was sitting in her rocking-chair knitting. There came a knock at the door. She opened it, and who should be there but Lucy and her mamma, and a boy with a rosebush!

How surprised Mrs. Bly was, and how pleased, when she knew that little Lucy bought the plant with her own money.

"You dear little lamb," she said; "it will make me very happy. It is like the roses in my old home."

"When Christmas morning came Mrs. Bly cut off one of those lovely roses and put it in a vase. She carried it to a poor old lady acrosss the hall who was ill in bed, and it made her glad.

So you see little Lucy made three people happy that Christmas day—the sick old lady, Mrs. Bly and herself.—Mrs. C. M. Livingstone, in the Pansy.

A SURGEON'S KNIFE

gives you a feeling of horror and dread. There is no longer necessity for its use in many diseases formerly regarded as incurable without cutting.

The Triumph of Conservative Surgery is well illustrated by the fact that

RUPTURE or Breach, is now radically cured without the knife and without pain. Clumsy, chafing trusses can be thrown away! They never cure but often induce inflammation, strangulation and death.

TUMORS Ovarian, Fibroid (Uterine) and many others, are now removed without the perils of cutting operations.

PILE TUMORS, however large, Fistula and other diseases of the lower bowel, are permanently cured without pain or resort to the knife.

STONE in the Bladder, no matter how large, is crushed, pulverized, washed out and perfectly removed without cutting.

STRICTURE of Urinary Passage is also removed without cutting in hundreds of cases. For pamphlet, references and all particulars, send 10 cents (in stamps) to World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

COTTOLENE.

You Will

never need another dose of Dyspepsia Medicine after a meal, if your food is cooked with Cottolene, the new vegetable shortening, instead of lard. Cottolene aids the digestive powers—lard destroys them, which will you choose? The genuine Cottolene is identified by this trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every pail.

Made only by
The N. K. Fairbank Company,
ST. LOUIS and CHICAGO.

Does This Hit You?

The management of the Equitable Life Assurance Society in the Department of the Carolinas, wishes to secure a few Special Resident Agents. Those who are fitted for this work will find this

A Rare Opportunity

It is work, however, and those who succeed best in it possess character, mature judgment, tact, perseverance, and the respect of their community. Think this matter over carefully. There's an unusual opening for somebody. If it fits you, it will pay you. Further information on request.

A BUSINESS, POLITICAL AND FAMILY PAPER.

Don't Be Selfish.

If you take a newspaper it should be one that not only you, but all your folks will find pleasure in reading.

THE SAVANNAH MORNING NEWS

is that kind of a journal.

It gives more real reading and news matter than any other paper in the South. It is not the organ of political cranks or personal favorites, but of pure democracy; of low tariff and sound currency, and of the economial administration of the State and federal governments.

It is independent in all things, and does not change its views through fear of losing a few subscribers by advocating what it knows to be right

Daily, every day in the year (335 papers), $10; 6 months $5; 3 months $2.50; 1 month $1; 1 week 25 cents. Daily, without Sunday News, 1 year $9; 6 months, $4.50; 3 months, $2.25.

THE NEW YEAR.

Like a milestone, the approaching New Year reminds us that another stage of life's journey has been travelled. Usually time slips by unnoticed, but the season reminds us to pause and consider. The year has not left us where it found us. We are one year nearer heaven or hell. We may not know how much longer life's journery will be, perhaps next year will bring us to the end; but now it is possible to determine what that end shall be. Which way are you now going? May God so teach you to number your days, that you may apply your heart unto wisdom.

Old age without religion must be unspeakably sad. The inexorable march of time drags the unwilling sinner steadily toward death and the judgment, while the pleasures of life grow flat and stale, or elude his grasp.

"You can win no new affection,
You have only recollection,
Deep sorrow, and dejection,
Every year."

To the aged Christian, however, new hopes brighten declining years, and, in spite of infirmities and sorrows, there comes a mellow, happy old age, richer in peace and satisfaction than the years of early manhood's vigor.

"Earth's hold on us grows slighter,
And the heavy burdens lighter
And the dawn immortal brighter,
Every year."

The little poem from which I make these quotations is so fine and so appropriate to this season, that I will give it all to you.

Albert Pike, the author, had a romantic and adventurous career. The son of a shoemaker in Boston, he was able to obtain a good primary education in the public schools. His course at Harvard was very brief, as he had to leave the University on account of poverty, and go to teaching for a support. When about twenty-two years old, he set out to see something of the world, and travelled through the Southern and Western States, chiefly on foot. Going with a party of trappers into what was then the wild West, he and four others became separated from their party, and walked five hundred miles back into Arkansas, reaching Fort Smith in a destitute condition, "without a rag of clothing, a dollar of money, or knowing a person in the territory." Here he opened a school, and began to write for the newspapers.

In course of time, the editorship of a paper in Little Rock was offered him, and he moved to that town to accept it. And, not content with editorial work, he now began the study of law and became a prominent lawyer. His adventurous spirit carried him as a volunteer to the Mexican war, in which he attained considerable distinction. And when the war came on between the States he took the Southern side, and, raising a band of Cherokee Indians, joined the Confederate army, in which he rose to be a general.

This poem, which has been going the rounds of the papers, was probably written in his old age; for it is not included in Griswold's collection, made in 1855, and is so far superior to what is published there, that it would hardly have been overlooked, if it had been written before that time. The sentiments also indicate advancing years; and it is pleasant to infer that the General's old age which was overcast by the clouds of earthly disappointment and defeat, was cheered by the glow of the "dawn immortal".

EVERY YEAR.

The spring has less of brightness
Every year,
And the snow a ghastlier whiteness
Every year,
Nor do summer flowers quicken
Nor autumn fruitage thicken
As they once did, for they sicken
Every year.

It is growing darker, colder,
Every year
As the heart and soul grow older
Every year.
I care not now for dancing
Or for eyes with passion glancing.
Love is less and less entrancing
Every year.

Of the charms of friendship ended
Every year,
Of the ties that still might bind me
Until time to death resigned me
My infirmities remind me
Every year.

Ah, how sad to look before us
Every year.
While the cloud grows darker o'er us
Every year;
When we see the blossoms faded
That to bloom we might have aided
And immortal garlands braided
Every year.

To the past go more dead faces
Every year,
As the loved leave vacant places
Every year.
Everywhere the sad eyes meet us,
In the evening's dusk they greet us,
And to come to them entreat us
Every year.

"You are growing old," they tell us,
"Every year.
"You are more alone," they tell us,
"Every year.
You can win no new affection,
You have only recollection,
Deep sorrow and dejection,
Every year."

Yes, the shores of life are shifting
Every year,
And we are seaward drifting
Every year.
Old places, changing, fret us,
The living more forget us,
There are fewer to regret us
Every year.

But the truer life draws nigher
Every year,
And its morning star climbs higher
Every year.
Earth's hold on us grows slighter,
And the heavy burdens lighter,
And the dawn immortal brighter
Every year.

OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

With sincere regret we announce that Dr. Hoge has given up the management of our Sunday-school Department. For a year he has prepared the exposition of the Lesson with the ability and thoroughness that characterize all his work. And now, when the labors incident to the pastorate of a large and important church admonish him to turn the work over to other hands, we extend to him our hearty thanks for the valuable assistance he has given. We publish below his letter in which he announces the prizes, and speaks a few words of farewell.

THE PRIZES.

"Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize?" As will be seen from the above record this honor falls to Fayetteville Presbytery, and to Master Willie Arrowood, the son of our moderator. As it was the Editor's privilege to present to the father the Synod's gavel, so it is now a pleasant duty to award to the son this reward for work well done, with the prayer that he may follow in his father's footsteps and preach the Word that he has so early begun to study. The race, however, was so close between him and Miss Bettie Overcash, of Statesville, that the lead has passed from one to the other three times in the last three weeks and was only decided by the last question. It is a great pity that no one in Concord Presbytery offered a Presbyterial Prize that Miss Overcash might have received what she has so well earned.

The prizes for Wilmington and Mecklenburg Presbyteries were offered from March 1st, but as the result is the same it is not thought necessary to give the stand from that date. Those who did not begin until some time between January and March are D. R. Johnson, N.E. Monroe and Olive Wilson.

The prize for Wilmington Presbytery, which is presented by Mrs. S. S. Lewis, Wilmington, falls to Miss Isabelle Robeson, of Mt. Horeb church, who was a close competitor for the Synodical Prize.

The prize for Mecklenburg Presbytery, which is presented by Dr. Frank Robinson, of Lowell, falls to Miss Olive Wilson, of Hopewell church. Miss Wilson is very young and contended against disadvantages, but persevered patiently and improved continually, and well deserves her reward.

STANDING FOR THE YEAR.

Note. It will be recalled that each question was valued at one except where there were subdivisions, in which case each sub-question was valued at one. In a few cases where the question was complicated, as Qu. 70, a special value was given it that was noted at the time. Only the standing of those who continued to the end is given. They are grouped according to Presbyteries.

THE INTERNATIONAL BIBLE.

This Bible, while not yet so well known as the Oxford and Bagster, contains the very latest and most improved "helps" and is the only Bible that is the joint work of American and British scholarship. The Maps are corrected by the latest reports of the Palestine Exploration Fund, and the helps are profusely illustrated from the recent discoveries in Egypt, Assyria and Palestine. There are eleven departments to the "Helps" in which we find such names as those of Dr. Stalker, Bishop Vincent, Wm. R. Harper, Maj. Whittle, C. H. H. Wright, Geo. Adam Smith, A. B. Davidson, Maj. Couder and many others. The style selected is in "Emerald" type, with "French Seal" binding, leather-lined, red and gold edges, round corners, of the style known as "divinity circuit;" it is provided with Denison's Patent Index on the edge, and is a perfect specimen of the book makers' art. It is "a thing of beauty" and we hope in the deepest sense will prove "a joy forever." Mr. C. W. Yates is the agent for these Bibles in Wilmington.

We must now say

to those who have travelled this course with us this year. To us it has been a delightful labour, and we regret the pressure of other duties compels us to lay it down. We are glad to leave it in such competent hands as those of Dr. Rawlings, the editor of the paper. We have had abundant reward—aside from the study of God's Word, which is always its own reward—in the numerous testimonies that have come from parents, teachers and scholars to the benefit they have found from these studies, and the increased love of their Bibles which has come from the looking out of these "Prize Questions." While only some dozen continued to the end, there have been over thirty that have sent answers first and last, and we know of many parents and teachers—some outside of this Synod, and some even across the sea—who have regularly looked them out and kept their own record.

We trust that one and all may take this Word as "a lamp unto their feet and a light unto their path." Wishing all a "Happy New Year" of Bible study, we remain

Yours in His Name,
Peyton H. Hoge.

INK SPOTS.

We often complain that we are tired of old sights, we wish to see something new—why place a man on almost any spot on the earth, with sunlight and sky, and clouds, and the thousand things that lie on the surface of the earth, there is a new picture given every hour for those who have eyes to see. What we need to make every hour of day and night a new and charming picture is not material, but observation.

Says one writing on the Spring: "This is a year of blossoms, I always knew nature was prodigal but I never knew before what she could do, her display is almost extravagrant, every twig is doubled and quadrupled with blossoms. The apple trees stand like white clouds in the air from the multitude of their blossoms. The peach trees are holding up their silent lessons in pink. Cherry and pear trees are holding up silent lessons in white, and apple trees in both colors. All the grass is full of germinal flowers, the grass is lifting up its hands for joy. Behold the multitude of nature's children. Some hidden in coverts, there under dark cool rocks, there where mosses are, there growing in the broad fields, there springing up in the shadow of forest trees, there suspended upon their boughs in the air—life blooming, growing, manifesting itself every where." This man had pictures because he had eyes to see.

"The Psalmist spoke of the multitude of God's thoughts toward him. So to-day I have been looking at the flowers, listening to the birds, looking on the meadows, thinking of the multitudes of God's thoughts as expressed in the world. As I have looked at all these things I have thought what is God's message to me in these? Is it not His munificence to man? Again and again as my eye fell on the rich profusion around me, I thought how many notes has God rung, how much care He has lavished, how much power exerted, how much wisdom displayed, and there came to my mind such a sense of God's overruling providence and presence as has made the whole day one of unexampled sweetness to me. All day long, I have been thinking, sometimes birds, sometimes Bible, sometimes flowers, sometimes Saviour. It is difficult to tell where the transition is from one to another." These meditations arose in the heart of one who observed the living pictures around him.

We sometimes say a man ought not to read any but first-class books. Is this quite true? None but the very best ought to be our constant companions, those that we study, and from which we gain our intellectual food and strength. But as we do not always need or can stand violent exercise, or long walks, or rides, when milder exercise and short walks or rides may be useful and refreshing, so there are books which amuse, or give a mild pleasure, or useful, if not very important, knowledge and interest, and refresh from harder studies. Here before me is Hamerton's "Intellectual Life." It is by no means a great book, and the author something of a free thinker in religion I fear.

Yet its short chapters furnish much quiet thoughtfulness, and provoke to meditation—and it is a book much harder to write, than its seeming simplicity would suggest. It is in fact a very entertaining book, containing much very suggestive, on the ordinary topics of human life and business.

It is very much like floating leisurely down a gently-flowing and winding stream, with picturesque banks, and interesting scenery, constantly changing, and so giving constant freshness and variety to the beholder.

"I used to believe," says one, "a great deal more in opportunities and less in application, than I do now. Time and health are needed, but with these there are always opportunities. I have a rich friend who travels more, and buys more costly things than I do, but he does not really learn more, or advance farther in the twelve months. If my days are fully and wisely occupied what has he to set to against them. If he is getting benifits in St. Petersburg, he is missing the benefits I am getting round my house and in it." This witness is true. If one is learning much abroad, I may be learning much at home.

If my friend is traveling over many lands, seeing many cities and many men, I may be having the wisdom that is in the great thinkers and poets of the past. If he spends a great deal of his time in traveling, I spend as much in thinking and living with the great masters of thought. A man may travel, yet not go abroad—a man may stay at home, yet travel far. So those that stay at home may not need to be pitied after all.

"Nothing can replace the conversation of living men and women, not even the richest literature can replace it." This is true, not however because in any society, we can find richer and loftier thinking than can be found in books, but because our social instincts call for the companionship of our fellow-men. We cannot live by and on intellect alone. We need the warmth, the cheer, and comfort which the sympathy and presence of our fellows impart—often too the lessons learned from books as cold abstractions, we find illustrated in social intercourse in concrete examples—also it confirms or disproves by actual observation, what was stated as mere theory. Then almost every man has seen, heard, or in some way experienced, what we have not, and we are interested in these facts, new to us.

If a man lives intensely in the present, he needs to commune much with the saints, sages, poets and teachers of humanity in the past, to keep broad and wide views, to keep him from that narrowness and provincialism which too close and constant contact with the actual present is sure to give. Man must stand, walk, transact his business on the earth, but his view will be narrow if he never lifts his eyes to blue sky or starry heavens.

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

I heard the bells on Christmas day
Their old, familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

And thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

Till, ringing, swinging on its way,
The world revolves from day to day—
A voice, a chime,
A chant sublime,
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

But in despair I bowed my head.
"There is no peace on earth," I said.
"For hate is strong,
And mocks the song
Of peace on earth, good will to men!"

Then pealed the bells, more loud and deep:
"God is not dead, nor doth he sleep;
The wrong shall fail,
The right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men!"

HIGH SCHOOL OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY, MEBANE, N. C.

If there is any kind of a preparatory school specially needed more than any other sort at this time, (and that has been needed for a score of years,) by the Presbyterian Church, and for the want of which she has suffered, and her candidates for the ministry have suffered, it is just the sort of a high school, so auspiciously inaugurated at Mebane some two years ago, and which is winning good opinions, (I understand,) from all who patronize it. The grounds and conveniences, it is well known, are admirable, the location, the health of the place, the character of the neighborhood and people, and its easy accessibility, make it one of the best places in the State for such a school. I wish to call, in this communication, the attention of Christian parents and guardians of boys to the superior advantages in every point of view of the Orange Presbytery High School at Mebane, N. C.

I have made special inquiry about it from those who have sent their boys to it, and their response has been in the highest degree satisfactory. "You have boys there?" I asked one, a day or two ago, and the reply was, "It is the best and cheapest school anywhere we—(they were Christian mother and older brother,) are more than satisfied, and we think the boys study better, make better progress in study and good behaviour and manners, than in any school we know of," &c., &c. Our Presbyterian Church at large, our Synod, and one Presbytery of Orange especially, have all begun to feel the great need of such preparatory schools, and have taken action towards supplying this need. Our public and graded schools, (I speak especially of those in Greensboro,) are admirable and are doing great good, but they utterly ignore the study of Greek, the language in which every line of the New Testament was written, and all our candidates who have attended no other schools than these, go to the college sadly deficient, and are hampered and impeded at every step by the little knowledge they have, or can acquire, owing to their want of early study and discipline in this language. I feel sure that five out of six of our candidates will readily acknowledge the above statement to be true. This makes a special appeal to every Presbyterian minister and church to favor and patronize such schools, and a special appeal to the ministry and membership of the Presbytery of Orange. I write this article to call attention to this school, when our Presbyterian fathers and mothers are considering the question, "Where shall we send our boy?" The undersigned would whisper: "Send him to the High School of Orange Presbytery, at Mebane, N. C."

Christian Kindness.

An engine bumped against some empty cars in the early dawn of a winter morning. A boy who had been asleep in one of them was thrown, dazed and bewildered, against the door, which he had pulled to when he crawled into the car the night before.

Just then a brakeman thrust his head in the car and reached for his jacket, which he supposed was hanging where he had left it. He was somewhat surprised to find a boy on it and took it from him without ceremony.

"Now get out of here!" he said thrusting the boy from the door. "If I catch you in one of these cars again, I'll give you to a policeman."

"What's he been up to, Bill?" said a man who was putting freight into the next car.

"Up to my coat," he said, giving it a vigorous shake as he walked off.

The boy looked dirty, and dejected, as he limped along the side of the track. The man who had spoken called after him:

"Hello, there! Do you want a job?"

The boy turned back quickly.

"If you'll help me to load them firkins, I'll pay you for it; but you'll have to work spry."

The prospect of a little money brightened the boy, and he set to work in earnest, though he was stiff and cramped and hungry.

"Do you live around here?" asked the man.

The boy shook his head.

"In case we should want to hire a boy about your size, can you give me any recommendations as to your character?"

The boy's face flushed, but he made no answer. The man watched him narrowly, and when the car was loaded handed him twenty-five cents, saying: "We're short of hands in the freight-room. Do you think you'd like the job?"

"Yes, I would like it.' The boy's face was almost painful in engerness as he followed the man into the freight-room.

"Now," said the freight man, seating himself on a box, "we'll have a bit of talk, before we get to business. I don't know anything about you, except that you're cold and hungry; you look that. But I think it is likely that you've got into some scrape; if you hadn't, you wouldn't be loafing about stations and sleeping in freight cars. I'm not going to ask you if you have done anything wrong, but I'm going to ask you if you've got a mother."

"No; she's dead."

"Got any father or folks that belong to you?"

"I've an uncle and some cousins."

"Well, now, if you had a mother, I'd send you to her in no time, for there is nothing that a mother won't forgive; but uncles and cousins are different.

"If I recommend you at the office, they'll take you; but mind, if I do it, I'm going to watch you as a cat does a mouse. You'll have to spend your evenings and Sabbaths with me.

"I went wrong myself when I was no older than you are," lowering his voice. "An' if it hadn't been for my mother—well, that was a long time ago. You've got switched upon the wrongtrack, I am very sure, and as you haven't any mother to help you get on the right one, God helpin' me, I'll do it, if you'll let me.

"Preachin' isn't in my line, but there's just one thing you don't want to forget, and that is the good Father is giving you a chance now to get back where you can do right and feel right. Are you going to take it?"

The boy answered faintly that he would try. He was taken into the freight yard, and was under his new friend's eye constantly, and it was not long before the man had so won his confidence that he told him his story.

There was trouble and dishonesty connected with it, but for two years the lad proved himself faithful and trustworthy in his new occupation. He was then advanced to a more responsible position, but there was something almost pathetic in his devotion to the man who had befriended him and in his respect for the religion he professed.

Here was practical Christianity, worthy any man's emulation.—Exchange.

The Art of Self-Control.

BY DAISY RHODES CAMPBELL.

If, as in the charming old fairy-tales, we mothers could choose one gift for each child that is ushered into the world, that gift should be self-control. Beauty is attractive to the eye, but it brings with it no slight temptation and snare; intellect is a great gift, but too often accompanied by weak will or a character unbalanced: goodness, amiability, are of little value unless strength of will is also an attribute. But self-control implies unusual characteristics. To keep one's self well in hand, to hold the rein with a firm hand to one's desires, is to have the power of an unlimited monarchy. To be sure the subject is in the singular tense but the government of the passions, will, temper, appetite of that subject is no insignificant task. The heartache, the worry, the ruin, caused by lack of this single characteristic are appalling. If each individual possessed it we should have the millennium. There would be no need of "cures" for inebriety, no temperance societies, no shame, no haunting fears of dire mortification and disgrace. Yet this art of self-control is not cultivated as it should be, its importance is either not recognized, or its attainment is too difficult. Other arts—fine and useful—are placed before it. Perhaps if it had a grander title it would be more sought after—we all despise the commonplace. Some day it may be called Ethical Culture or a lost Art in Ethics, and it will be the fashion to cultivate it. Physicians say that the lack of it helps more than any other cause to fill the insane asylums.

We smile over the "tantrums" or the angry word of the very small child—it is food for our entertainment. If we have the care of the child such exhibitions perhaps annoy us. But few realize that it is the important, critical period in the art of self-control. The child must learn that giving way to impotent rage does not gain the desired end and further, that every lapse of the kind brings as a necessity some penalty. It must be done firmly, compassionately, but unwaveringly. The poor little tempestuous creature, ignorant, helpless—how much we parents owe to it! Perhaps a violent temper is its direct inheritance. How lovingly must we watch over this child of ours lest some day it curse the hour of its birth! We dare not overindulge, we dare not fail in firm, unyielding government in these earliest years. It only makes it the harder for both child and parent later on. Obedience is the first lesson, but as the children reach years of intelligence—varying in different temperaments—it is well to leave many questions for them to decide, perhaps telling them your own opinion in the matter. Parents have no easy task to perform in guiding and controlling growing children. (It is far easier to put down certain directions in writing than to carry them out in practice). The main thing is to have a strong desire to teach them self-government, to be sympathetic yet determined. In nothing is Divine help more needed than in the difficult responsible post of a guide and teacher of children. Kindergartens are a great help in infancy, but after all, the one who has most influence over the child is the mother, or the one who stands in that mother's place. Every day we see grown people as near insanity as people ever are whom the asylum does not confine. There is a mother, who has always given way to every passing impulse. She is not only a mother but step-mother, and her home is, described by one who knew it well, "a hell on earth." As soon as possible, the boys seek other homes: the step-daughter earns her living. The husband alone cannot escape and must endure to the end. Another refined, talented woman, fitted in many ways to bring delight and comfort to those about her, has fits of temper which imbitter and poison the lives of her home-people and wound and stab the hearts of her friends. She declares that her nature is so sensitive, so highly wrought, that she can not be judged like the commoner clay about her, and wonders why people treat these outbursts so seriously. Another gradually learns the habit of opium eating. Life proves to her and those about her, one prolonged torment. Men in homes all about us fail to control their appetite for liquor, and we see lovely women dying prematurely, young-girls crushed or embittered, children's souls sick for shame—all because one man in this otherwise happy family fails in self-control.

We see young girls cry bitterly over trifles, in a rage over disappointment or some petty trouble, hysterical over a small wound—they too, are victims of this same broken law. But we do see also, men and women self-poised, ready to act in an emergency, helpful, because they have acquired, not stoicism, but a right use of their powers. They are our dependence, a power among men, the true arbiters of destiny.

We American women have nerves easily unstrung. We are physically less able to cope with life's struggles and emergencies than some of our sister nations. We endure and accomplish many things, but at a sacrifice. We need to learn the art of self-control more than others. We must give our children more sleep, simpler diet, outdoor exercise, less cramming at school, more natural hearty living. They need all helps possible to enable them to enter upon life's battle unhampered by ill-health and ill-breeding. There are so many hard places in life for most of us; we so often slip and fall at best—let us strive after the most helpful gift: that of self-control.—Interior.

An Experience.

One of our busy bankers, ever ready to turn a listening ear to the cry of a soul for light, however pressing his secular work, was interrupted by a mechanic, who entered his office evidently borne down by a heavy burden. His first remark was: "Mr,——, I am bad off. I am broke. I must have help."

Of course our banker expected to be asked for pecuniary aid. "Tell me what you need. Are you in financial straits?"

"Worse than that," was the reply: "I am a spiritual bankrupt!" and tears and sobs shook the strong man as he sat in the presence of his friend the personification of grief.

The story he told has its thousands of counterparts. Said he: "Myself and wife are members of the —— church. We have not been inside its walls for more than two years. I have drifted out and away into darkness, and I am at unrest. Will you, can you help me?"

"But tell me the cause of this backsliding. Where did the departure begin, and what has brought you to me into such a condition?"

"Well," said he, "my little girls were at the Sunday-school concert last Sunday. On their return, I asked as to the lessons of the evening. Their reply was, 'Prayer,' and turning to me, one of the dear pets said, with such an appealing look: "Papa, you used to pray with us; why don't you now?' This question for three days has sounded in my ears day and night. I cannot sleep. I am at unrest. What shall I do?"

"Where did you leave off?"

"With the omission of family prayer. At first, morning devotions were omitted. I was in haste to get to my work. I excused myself because of the lack of time. Then, at evening, I gradually left off the habit, on the plea of weariness, or some other excuse. The neglect of Sabbath service followed till at last I am here, with no rest, no comfort, no peace. Neither my wife nor myself has been to church for two years."

The practical answer for the banker was: "Begin where you left off. Commence to-night. Call your family together and pray with them."

"But I cannot; it is far harder than at the first."

"Very well, if you will not do this you will have no rest, and I hope you will continue in this condition till you again resume the duty which you never should have laid aside."

With a few kindly words they parted, but not till the tired soul had made the promise desired. The burden was taken up. Duty became a pleasure. New life and joy came to the household, and with loving harmony the family are now walking upward toward their Father's house —Congregationalist.

Election.

"But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you brethren beloved of the Lord because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth; whereunto he called you by our gospel, to obtaining the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thessalonians, ii. 13, 14.

One of you says, "I trust I am elect"—but I jog your memory about some vicious act that you committed during the last six days. Another of you says, "I am elect"—but I would look you in the face and say, "Elect! thou art a most cursed hypocrite! and that is all thou art." Others would say, "I am elect"—but I would remind them that they neglect the mercy-seat and do not pray. O beloved! never think you are elect unless you are holy. You may come to Christ as a sinner, but you may not come to Christ as an elect person until you can see your holiness. Do not misconstrue what I say—don't say, "I am elect," and yet think you can be living in sin. That is impossible. The elect of God are holy. They are not pure, they are not perfect, they are not spotless; but, taking their life as a whole, they are holy persons. They are marked and distinct from others, and no man has a right to conclude himself elect except in his holiness. He may be elect, yet living in darkness, but he has no right to believe it; no one can see it, there is no evidence of it. The man may live one day, but he is dead at present. If you are walking in the fear of God, trying to please him, and to obey his commandments, doubt not that your name has been written in the Lamb's book of life from before the foundation of the world.—Spurgeon.

The young Czar of Russia has started wrong. He or his advisers have issued a circular, signed by the Ministers of the Interior, which gives token that the rigorous edicts against the Stundists, which have been in force for several yeors, are to be continued in full force in the years to come. The circular forbids Stundist prayer-meetings, and declares this religious sect to be most dangerous to Church and State. The Stundists are an evangelical sect, who are, in worship, somewhat like Methodists, and baptize by immersion. They were good citizens, and quietly engaged in industrial pursuits. But the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, alarmed at their steady increase, resolved on their suppression. The civil power was invoked, and a fierce and cruel persecution of the Stundists began, which has continued unto the present day. The sufferings of the poor people, who have committed no crime except the gathering together of themselves and their children to pray to God and to read the Bible, have been most pitiable, and the circular just issued shows that there is to be no relief. Turkey and Russia must be classed together as despotisms whose tender mercies are cruel, and whose protection and care for the hapless people who fall within their bounds are the protection and care which the wolf gives to the lamb.—Presbyterian.

SUNDOWN.

The summer sun is sinking low;
Only the tree-tops redden and glow;
Only the weather cock on the spire
Of the neighboring church is a flame of fire;
All is in shadow below.

O beautiful, awful summer day,
What hast thou given, what taken away?
Life and death, and love and hate,
Homes made happy or desolate,
Hearts made sad or gay!

On the road of life one mile-stone more!
In the book of life one leaf turned o'er!
Like a red seal is the setting sun
On the good and the evil men have done,
Naught can to day restore!

Paul's Thorn in the Flesh.

He writes to the Corinthians about it. (See 2 Cor. xii. 7.) He does not tell what it is, and hence readers of the New Testament have been wondering and guessing for centuries. Prof. Henry E. Dorker. D. D., in the Homiletic Review for November, says:

"What may his specific disease have been? Periodic and excruciating headaches? Melancholia or epilepsy? Who knows? Numerous diseases have been named, and of all, supposed traces have been found in Paul's writings. The likeliest conjecture would seem to be that Paul was suffering from chronic ophthalmia, the common disease of the eye in Oriental countries."

The Professor's last suggestion reminded me of an article that I read more than forty years ago. It was from the pen of John Brown, M. D., an eminent physician of Edinburgh, and grandson of John Brown, of Haddington. I hunted up the article, and will give my readers an abstract of it. The Doctor quotes Paul's statement in Gal. iv. 15, "I bear you record that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes and given them to me." He has just told them that "through infirmity of the flesh" he had preached the gospel to them. If that infirmity had not been connected with his eyes, why should those who heard him and pitied him and loved him be spoken of as willing to give him their eyes "if it had been possible?" Suppose that you are deeply interested in a lame man or an epileptic, would you say, Gladly would I pluck out my eyes and give them to you? This reference of the apostle to the eyes seems to be decisive.

Again, the Doctor refers to the statement near the close of the Epistle, "Ye see how large a letter I have written with my own hand;" and to Col. iv. 18, "The salutation of me Paul with my own hand." It seems evident from these passages and from 1 Cor. xvi. 21 and 2 Thess. iii. 17, that Paul usually employed an amanuensis. Why? He had ample leisure while a prisoner. It must have been because of his imperfect eyesight. He always had some one with him as a companion who ministered to him in his infirmity both as a guide and a scribe.

Finally the Doctor calls attention to the fact that this infirmity is spoken of by Paul in connection with visions and revelations of the Lord. (2 Cor. xii. 1.) He also writes about "bearing in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus" (Gal. vi. 10.) He suggests that though Paul was relieved from blindness in Damascus, when Ananias touched his eyes, yet that the effect of the vision was not wholly removed. He says: "I can not help thinking that the words 'marks of the Lord Jesus' are chosen with a reference to that relationship which was established between Paul and his Master and Lord on the occasion of that extraordinary meeting on the way to Damascus, for it was then he received his commission to bear his name to the Gentiles.

"Stigmata were the brands with which slaves were marked to prove their ownership. So here the apostle intends to intimate that the blasting effect upon his eyes, produced by the glory of that light, constituted the brand which attested his being a servant of Jesus Christ, and commissioned by him to communicate to others the truths of the gospel. Yes, when he told his hearers of the miraculous vision, he could say, 'It was no dream of the fancy; it was a real, a blinding, and yet a glorious fact, and here is the visible proof; see it in my eyes."

If any of my readers wish to have the views of Dr. Brown in full, they will find them in a volume entitled "Spare Hours, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.—Senex Smith, in Herald and Presbyter.

Ingersol, The Scoffer.

In spite of the disgust with which Robert Ingersoll inspired us for himself when he delivered a lecture here on Shakespeare, curiosity might have carried us to hear him last night if we had not, during yesterday, met with an account of his lecture on the same subject in Washington city Sunday night. In glancing over that account our eye fell on this line of what he said: "Lying was forbidden, and yet Jehovah himself was a liar."

That was enough for us. Why should Mr. Ingersoll insist on coming into a Christian community like ours to shock it with his blasphemy, and to spread his repugnant doctrines and poison the sources of the happiness of our people? He comes, of course, for money, and sensational journals have given him a notoriety that enables him to sell his blasphemous diatribes on God and religion to people of prurient tastes and ideas.

We have no objection to men holding any views that their minds prompt them to hold, nor do we object to the fullest discussion, by which men may seek to maintain their opinions in argument, on religion or anything else; but decency should suggest to any man that where he is seeking only to make money he should do so without ruthlessly reviling and besmirching the sentiments and opinions that a whole community holds most sacred and reveres with all its soul, and should at least respect their prejudices, if he can consider them as nothing more, and refrain from open efforts to barter his blasphemy for the dollars of its unthinking members.

We cannot understand how any man or woman who, though not professing faith in the doctrines of the Old or New Testament—be he Jew or Christian—is yet in sympathy with those who have faith in God, and who would not be willing to see all churches torn down and all religion abandoned, can encourage the raids which Mr. Ingersoll makes upon us to get money by holding up to ridicule Jehovah and Christ.

If it was no more than an attack on the character of General Lee our people would not pay to hear it. Why, then, should they reward this mercenary blasphemer of him who spake as never man spake.

We heard this man about a year ago declaim for an hour or more upon the theme that Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, was an ignorant humbug, without mind or imagination. None could have been more utterly disgusted than we were at this. From the day that Lord Bacon put his theories and philosophy before the world its first minds have acclaimed him the greatest and most original thinker of the age, and his philosophy, by common consent of the great and the learned, has enormously advanced all modern progress. For a sophistical rhetorician to stand up before an intelligent audience and think to amuse and interest them by throwing the mud of his contempt at the gigantic statue which the mind and the virtue of the world has erected to Lord Bacon's memory disgusted and offended us.

This is Colonel Ingersoll's second visit here as a lecturer, and we hope it will be his last. We are a hospitable people, and we welcome nearly all comers. But a line may properly be drawn at which we shall hereafter decline to welcome some. That line is at the European Anarchists and Nihilists, and at the blasphemous infidel, Robert G. Ingersoll. —Richmond Times.

Abraham's Faith.

His faith was of the robust type. It is worthy of remark that, at each period when it was subjected to trial, the demands made upon it were what the world calls unreasonable. There was no natural corroboration in any instance.

It was unreasonable for a man of his years to leave the scenes and associations of a lifetime and go wandering over the country without any fixed point in view. No doubt his migration was very generally disapproved and condemned by the judgement of his friends and acquaintances. But it was the Divine command, and he made clean work obeying it.

It was unreasonable for a man of his years to expect posterity. No doubt that idea was heartily laughed at by his friends, but God said so, and he believed and took the comfort of it.

And how unreasonable seemed the call to sacrifice the child of promise! It seemed a stultification of all foretold convenant privileges; a flat contradiction of all that God had agreed to do. But Abraham did not so regard it. His faith was the righteousness of God and he prepared to obey. God's word in every instance was enough for him. That settled the matter. Antecedent improbabilities, uncertain issues, had no weight against the Divine command.

The father of the faithful, it would be well if his children were more like him. We are prone to submit Divine direction to human judgment. We want the opinion of Science and Philosophy on the Word. We look around to hear what the critics say. We do not see why we cannot serve God as well in one place as another, and think we have a right to our say in the matter.

Thus did not Abraham—Ex.

Tale-Bearing.

"Thou shalt not go up and down as a talebearer among the people."—Lev. xix.

Tale-bearing emits a threefold poison—it injures the teller, the hearer, and the person concerning whom the tale is told. Whether the report be true or false, we are by this precept of God's Word forbidden to speak it. The reputation of the Lord's people should be very precious in our sight, and we should count it all shame to help the devil to dishonor the church and the name of the Lord. Some tongues need a bridle rather than a spur. Many glory in pulling down their brethren; as if by this they raised themselves. Noah's wise sons cast a mantle over their father, and he who exposed him earned a fearful curse. We may ourselves one of these days need forbearance and silence from our brethren. Let us render it cheerfully to those who need it now. Be this our family rule and our personal bond: "Speak evil of no man."

The Holy Spirit, however, permits us to censure sin, and describes the way in which we are to do it. It must be done by rebuking our brother to his face, and not by railing behind his back. The course is manly, brotherly, Christ-like, and under God's blessing will be useful. Does the flesh shrink from it. Then we must lay the greater stress upon our conscience, and keep ourselves to the work, lest by suffering sin upon our brother we become ourselves partakers of it.

Hundreds have been saved from great sins by the timely, wise, faithful warnings of faithful ministers and brethren. The Lord Jesus has set us a gracious example of how to deal with erring friends, in his warning given to Peter, the prayer with which he preceded it, and the gentle way with which He bore with Peter's boastful denial that he needed such a caution.

"So let our lips and lives express
The holy gospel we profess;
So let our works and virtues shine
To prove the doctrine all divine."

—Spurgeon.

Election Lessons.

In your news a week or two ago you said that a clergyman in Baltimore preached on "Some of the Lessons of the Late Election." When a candidate for office in England asked Mr. Whitefield to give his influence that he might be elected, Mr. W. returned for answer, he was too busy in making his own "election" sure. It is a very difficult matter to know when a preacher with propriety may preach about such matters; therefore I do not absolutely condemn such sermons; but I am confident we were called into the ministry, not to discuss votes and elections and their results, but to preach the good news "that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." This is a large topic; to keep to it, with all its lessons and its hopes and fears and duties and responsibilities, will afford scope enough and demand time enough for any ordinary pastor. The extraordinary pastor I am not willing to condemn.—P. M., in Southern Churchman.

How Much Should a Christian Give?

The position taken by some that he ought to give to God in one or another form a tenth of his income cannot be maintained successfully. The obligation to do this was laid upon the Jews and before the Christian era, in which we live. The Jewish dispensation, with its various provisions, is for Christians a subject of historic and reverent interest and study, but is not necessarily to be otherwise regarded. We are under no more obligation to give a tenth because the Jews were than we are to practice circumcision or abstain from eating pork.

Christ put the relation of His followers to this and most other matters upon a nobler basis than that of Judaism. He declared not rules, but principles of conduct. So far as we have absorbed His Spirit, we recognize it as not only a moral obligation but a privilege to give to good causes according to our ability. We also understand that some are able, and should be ready, to give away a much larger proportion of their incomes than others. A tenth, for example, is as much too little to be given away by some, as it is too much by others.

We should not think it worth while to allude to the question whether debt-paying ought to have precedence of giving, had not the point been gravely argued by some. If a man has debts, yet is quite able to pay them, as often happens, there may be an alternative. But if he be not able to do both, and payment of his debts be due, of course he ought to pay them before he can have the right to give money away. As for systematic, in contrast with impulsive benevolence, there can be no doubt of the greater wisdom and value of the former. The great thing is to cherish the spirit of stewardship instead of that of absolute ownership, of our property.

Undoubtedly it is true that most Christians easily could afford to give away considerably more than they do give. The average contributions of professing Christians, large as their aggregates are, is scandalously meager. There is imperative need of a quickening of conscience on this subject. In hardly another direction does the spirit of self-sacrifice need more earnest culture. But, after all, each must decide for himself how much he ought to give.—Congregationalist.

Lest we get into mental confusion about the Church and its progress, we quote a few words from Mr. Lecky's "History of European Morals:"

"It was reserved for Christianity to present the world an ideal character, which, through all the changes of eighteen centuries, has filled the hearts of men with an impassioned love; and has shown itself capable of acting on all ages, nations, temperaments and conditions; and has not only been the highest pattern of virtue, but the highest incentive to its practice; and has exerted so deep an influence that it may be truly said that the simple record of those three short years of an active life has done more to regenerate mankind than all the disquisitions of all the philosophers, and all the exhortations of all the moralists. This has been the well-spring of whatever is best and purest in the Christian life. Amid all the sins and failings, amid all the priest-craft, the persecutions and fanaticism which have defaced the Church, it has preserved, in the character and example of its founder, an enduring principle of regeneration.

It happened not long ago, writes Margaret E. Sangster, that a friend of mine, who had been very near-sighted all her life, had her eyes fitted with glasses which have given her a new sense of the wonderful world she lives in. The first time she went to church after the new glasses had revealed to her the manner of place the world was, she felt embarrassed at seeing so much and so clearly. Walking through the aisle to her pew, she beheld for the first time, though she had heard him preach for years, the benevolent face of the pastor. She saw the choir, too, and elders and deacons. The new glasses had introduced her to a new world simply by revealing to her what had always been there. No change had been wrought on the world, and her environment remained what it had long been. But all was altered to her. Revelation had been granted, and she could almost say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see!" Something like this happens when one who has never realized the loving kindness of God suddenly awakens to a sense of it.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following change of address:

Rev. Geo. D. Armstrong, D. D., from Norfolk, Va., to Rockledge, Fla.

NORTH CAROLINA.

High Point and Ashboro:—Rev. W. Lee Harrell, of Georgia, has accepted a call from High Point and Ashboro churches and hopes to be with us by the first of the year.

Concord Church, Iredell County:—Concord church, Iredell county, N. C., has enjoyed a precious season of revival. The meeting began the 3rd Sabbath of November. On Tuesday night following, Rev. C. A. Munroe arrived and continued the meeting until Tuesday night, Nov. 27th. Large audiences were present at both the day and night services. Great interest was manifested from the beginning and continued to increase to the end. The Holy Spirit was manifestly present with His quickening power. All felt it was good to be there. Bro. Munroe preached very plainly, but with power from on high. God's people are greatly revived and some thirty-eight or thirty-nine were converted and reclaimed. The Lord has done marvelous works among us, whereof we are glad.

Mt. Horeb:—At the adjourned meeting of Wilmington Presbytery, held in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, the pastoral relation was dissolved between Rev. A. McFadyen and Mt. Horeb church.

Long Creek Church:—After the public service on Thanksgiving Day at Long Creek church, the Children's Missionary Society met to deliver their mite boxes, given out last winter or spring, and have them opened. When the names and amounts were read out and the results announced, it was found that they had saved $9.46, and, after leaving the matter of its disposal open for a few days, it was agreed to put the "Children's Missionary" into all the families of the Church where there are children old enough to appreciate it, and send the remainder to Dr. Chester for the committee, and also to order mite boxes again. The Men's and Ladies' Societies have also secured a club of fifteen for the Foreign Missionary. R. J. Mc.

King's Mountain Church:—At King's Mountain church, beginning on Wednesday evening before the first Sabbath of December, we had our communion preaching. Three were added to the membership of the church by letter and our new elder-elect, Mr. C. E. Neisler was ordained. Rev. R. A. Miller, of Lowell, assisted the pastor. R. J. Mc.

Grover Church:—At Grover church, on the third Sabbath, our people enjoyed the communion preaching, beginning Thursday evening before. Bro. Smith, of Gastonia came to our aid on Saturday, and on Sunday we had two services in the day-time, the old fashioned way, which the people seemed to enjoy very much. Baptism of children came off before first service, and after service a "Men's Missionary Society" and a "Children's Missionary Society" were organized. R. J. Mc.

Bryson City:—On the third Sabbath of December, Messrs. R. L. Leatherwood and T. S. Simpson, were installed deacons in the Bryson City church. Only Mr. Leatherwood was ordained as Mr. Simpson had already been ordained. One member was received upon certificate. This region has already been favorably impressed by Presbyterianism, for they have taken their impressions from such men as Dr. A. W. Miller, Rev. Wm. McIlwain, Rev. Plummer Bryan and others. It is earnestly hoped that our beloved Church may yet be firmly planted in this the fairest portion of our State. CHALMERS MOORE.

Concord, (Iredell) and New Salem Churches:—On December 6th, Concord (Iredell) and New Salem, (Alexander), congregations met by one consent at the residence of their pastor, bringing many tokens of kindness, which need not be enumerated. They brought baskets filled with dainties and at the proper time a long table was hastily arranged in the yard and a bountiful dinner was spread. About 150 partook of the dinner. All seemed to be happy and cheerful, the pastor and his family not excepted. Old people, young people and the little folks, all of one accord enjoyed themselves in various ways. Some talking, others discoursing music, vocal and instrumental. At a late hour in the day, a portion of Scripture was read and the divine blessing was invoked upon all. It was a pleasant occasion, and we hope all felt it good to be there, encouraging each other in every good word and work. The prayer of the pastor is that he may be more faithful to his flock, who have thus endeared themselves to him. At night a goodly number of the young people met at the same place, and gave us more delightful music. May the rich blessings of heaven be poured out upon this dear people.

The Clio congregation had sent in their thank offering prior to this. It was regretted very much that none of that congregation was present on the 6th inst.

Salisbury:—On Wednesday, the 19th inst., Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D. D., gave a most interesting and instructive explanation of the functions of a Christian Endeavor Society to the church at Salisbury. He gave an account of the formation, growth, and prosperity of the Endeavor Society in Greensboro, and of the great good accomplished thereby. He showed that the pledge of this Society does not enlarge the sphere of one's obligations, but merely intensifies the personal responsibility of those already existing, and that it is a great factor in growth in grace and Christian usefulness. After the service, twenty-four persons expressed themselves as willing to take the Endeavor pledge, and a time and place for organization was announced.

Concord:—On Sabbath 16th, the First church of Concord held a special service in behalf of the Waldensean colony in Burke county, near Morganton. An historical address was delivered by the pastor and an offering of $20 was made to this worthy cause.

Rev. H. D. Lequeux:—A correspondent from Concord writes: Rev. H. D. Lequeux, has resigned the pastorate of Poplar Tent church in Concord Presbytery. It may be remembered that Mr. Lequeux came to us from the Baptist church. He is a most excellent preacher and any church securing his services would be extremely fortunate.

The First Church, Concord:—This church is a loyal friend to our Orphans' Home at Barium Springs. At our Thanksgiving service an offering of $28 was made to this cause. Only a few weeks since, the Young People's Society of which Miss Lily Patterson is the active and efficient President also sent Mr. Boyd $28 and the Sabbath-school donates an offering once a month to the same cause. In addition to this the Ladies' Aid Society has undertaken the support of one boy. This labor of love is not "love's labor lost" for two of our little fatherless ones have recently been received into the sheltering arms of the Home.

Charlotte:—A correspondent sends us the following clippings from the Charlotte News:

Last night, Dr. Preston occupied the pulpit, and no grander, sweeter, or more convincing sermon was ever heard from the lips of human tongue, than his sermon on the theme of "Fools Make a Mock at Sin." His discourse was one appropriate to the season, and every soul in the hearing of his voice proclaimed it one of the grandest sermons ever delivered before a First Presbyterian congregation. His remarks as to how Christmas should be made merry and joyful was on the soul-touching order, and his cautions to the young men as to how this day should be observed was from deep thinking on the part of this true lover of mankind. His sermon of last evening has been the topic in Christian circles to day, and through his pleadings of last night Christmas will be observed more religiously this year than ever before. His text was selected from Proverbs 14-9.

At the Second Presbyterian church, Dr. Boyd's talk on charity given last night, was fully up to this great divine's standard. In a clear, practical manner, Dr. Boyd furnished convincing facts concerning Charlotte's poor, and the state of circumstances, that environ the poor classes of Charlotte was portrayed by the pastor, in a manner that was impressive and complete. In the last two weeks he has been astride of his bicycle calling on destitute families and learning their condition, and at each home he made a note of the circumstances, and these notes, he read to his large congregation last evening. He stated why charity should be worked on business and practical principles, and from the leading authorities on the laboring classes he derived considerable knowledge concerning this class. The talk was one of the pastor's usual long-headed discussions, and the impression made on his congregation is best told by the most liberal contribution he received. Yesterday morning a cash collection was taken, and a hundred dollars or more was given for the "Christmasless Homes." His concluding remarks last night were beautiful and imposing and there will be few, if any, of the Second church's congregation who fail to make at least one home happy. His wagon to-morrow will be loaded with substantial Christmas gifts to the poor and hungry, and the great work that Dr. Boyd has taken up will be appreciated in a way that can't be expressed in cold type. The organization for charity that was inaugurated last year has fallen through, and Dr. Boyd said some one had to do it, and while he was a busy pastor, anything in the way of contributions that was intrusted in his care, would be received and delivered with great care by him. Dr. Boyd's great work in the poor people's behalf will ever be remembered by them, and the homes that he will make glad and joyous on to-morrow will rise as a monument to his great thoughtfulness and devotion to the under classes.

Dr. Boyd's Wagon:—Rev. Dr. John H. Boyd has interested himself in behalf of the poor, and his wagon will be on the rounds to-morrow. Up to three o'clock to-day he had received eleven hundred pounds of flour, orders for groceries to the amount of $40 and $100 in cash. In addition to this, he has purchased a car load of wood which will be distributed in the right way.

VIRGINIA.

Blacksburg:—Rev. J. M. Holladay writes us: "We are here at Blacksburg and fixed for the winter. There are seventy boys from Presbyterian families in the Virginia Agricultual and Mechanical College—more than from any other denomination, so Dr. McBryde, the Superintendent tells me. I have from 125 to 150 boys to hear me preach every other Sabbath. More come to the Presbyterian than to any other church."

Covington:—On December 9th, Rev Colin Stokes received twenty-four persons into the Covington church on profession of faith.

Floyd C. H.:—The good effects of the meeting conducted by Mr. Howard are still manifesting themselves. Rev. J. K. Harris, the pastor, received ten more persons into the church on the first Sunday of this month.

Low Moor:—Rev. L. W. Irwin received eight persons into the church on December 16th.

Clifton Forge:—Rev. E. W. McCorkle has recently received into the church, twenty-one members, seventeen upon profession of faith, and four by letter.—Central Presbyterian.

Rich Patch:—Rev. E. W. McCorkle has been holding a meeting in this church, as a result of which thirty persons made profession of Christ.

Smithville:—On the 2d Sabbath of this month, eighteen persons were received into the Village church, (Rev. W. McC. Miller pastor), as the result of a meeting conducted by Rev. L. B. Johnston.—Central Presbyterian.

Bay View:—This church, under the pastorate of Rev. W. C. Lindsay, is making good progress. The building is well filled every Sunday morning. At Cape Charles the Presbyterians are at work on the plan of the new building they hope to build. They expect to have sufficient funds on hand to commence work in the spring.—Central Presbyterian.

Rivanna:—Rev. A. A. Little, Synodical Evangelist, has been holding services in this church which is vacant, and the blessing of God was manifest. The visible results are ten professions of faith, nine additions to the Presbyterian church, and a great quickening of the members of the church. The members of other denominations co-operated heartily in the work, and a liberal contribution was made to the Synod's Evangelistic work.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Bethel Presbytery:—At a meeting of Bethel Presbytery in Chester, Dec. 11th, the pastoral relations between Rev. J. R. Millard, and the Fishing Creek and Richburg churches was dissolved.

Fort Mill:—This church has called Dr. J. H. Thornwell for all his time.—Southern Presbyterian.

Anderson:—Rev. J. F. McKinnon, of Greenville, preached in the Presbyterian church at Anderson last Sabbath morning and evening. At the close of the morning service a congregational meeting was held and Rev. J. N. H. Summerell, of Tarboro, N. C., was called to the pastorate of this church.

FLORIDA.

Ocala:—Rev. Jno. G. Law writes us from Ocala: "I report my installation on the first Sabbath of December. Dr. Dodge conducted the services. Twelve additions since the first of October, nine by certificate and three on profession of faith. May the Lord bless you and your work."

MISSISSIPPI.

Starkville:—The church at Starkville, has just added to the session, Mr. E. L. Reid and Mr. C. R. Montgomery, making six elders in all. This not only strengthens the session but greatly encourages both pastor and people, Ripley:—A new house of worship was solemnly dedicated on Dec. 2d. The pastor, Rev. E. A. Smith, preached an appropriate sermon.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Comite:—Robt. J. Pemble and I. Duncan Norwood were ordained and installed ruling elders, and Louis Lindsay was elected deacon.—Ib, Holly Springs:—Rev. W. T. Raymond, was installed pastor of the Holly Springs church on Dec. 9th. This is the second time Mr. Raymond has been pastor here, having resigned three years ago to engage in evangelistic work.—N. O. Picayune.

MISSOURI.

Dr. Brank of the Central church, Saint Louis, who has been compelled to leave his charge, in search of health, is reported to be in Asheville, and much improved.

TENNESSEE.

Rogersville:—The Presbyterian church at this place, (Rev. Frank McCutchan, pastor), had an annual roll call of its members at their Thanksgiving service. Dr J. R. Walker, clerk of the session, called the roll of all the members in a clear tone of voice, each one answering to his or her name. Most of the members of the church, nearly 300, were present. The effect was good, not alone in awakening in the minds of the members a sense of their obligation, by reason of this connection, but in creating an esprit de corps among the members. An excellent sermon was preached by the pastor. The cause of the poor in the community was presented by Mr. A. B. Rogan, Secretary of the Board of Deacons, and a collection taken for charitable purposes. The exercises were interesting and improving, and the annual roll call will be a feature of the work of this church in the future.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

Buffalo Valley Church:—In Putnam county, is one of the churches recently organized by Rev. Jno. R. Herndon. Four members were received into its membership, upon profession of faith, December 9th, and W. W. Jared was ordained and installed to the office of ruling elde.r—Christian Observer.

Rev. J. F. Lloyd having accepted the calls to Somerville and Rehoboth churches, changes his address from from Tunica, Miss., to Somerville, Tenn. He and his family were most cordially received by the people of his new charge. They were met at the depot by the officers of the church, who accompanied them to the manse, which had been put in order. There they found the ladies of the congregation awaiting them with a nice warm supper.—Ib.

Rev. H. A. Hymes' address is now Webster Groves, Mo., instead of Memphis, Tenn. He has accepted the pastorate of the church at Webster Goves. This church is in connection with the Northern Assembly.—Ib.

CARD.

To the Sessions of Mecklenburg Presbytery:

DEAR BRETHREN:—You will remember that the months of January and February, with the exception of one day in February to be given to the cause of Church and Manse Erection, has been set apart by Presbytery for the Home Mission cause. I would state that on the 1st of January, we will need about $700, to meet our obligations. I have sent the apportionments for this cause to each church. Now, my brethren, I would not say that if we meet this urgent demand on us all it will depend upon your efforts, but I will say that much will depend on your zeal, instructions and liberality. See that all money is duly sent to Jno. W. Miller, Treasurer, Charlotte.

R. A. MILLER,
Chm. of Home Mission Com.

ALL QUIET ALONG THE YANGTSE.

Last week the city was in holiday attire on the occasion of the birthday of the Empress Dowager who ruled during the minority of the Emperor. She attained to the age of sixty, and sixty years makes a cycle in China. The last time a similar event was celebrated was in 1845. Over the business streets awnings of blue and yellow and red were spread; fancy lanterns and balls of many coloured silks were suspended in front of the stores; bamboo frame works rolled around with silk, with various ornamental designs, were displayed in the satin hongs and rockeries and gilt signs and mottoes were seen on every hand. The difference between this and a foreign country was noticeable in that the narrowness of the alleys prevented the decorations being seen to advantage and the denseness of the crowds blocked the streets and caused trade to be suspended.

There is little news of interest from

THE SEAT OF WAR.

The Japanese have been successful at the outposts, but winter finds them 200 miles from the Great Wall. They have invested Port Arthur which is the strongest natural fortress in the East and the key to the Gulf of Pechilee. Had they, finding the Chinese unprepared, pushed on to Peking, they might have overthrown the Manchu dynasty, but they allowed China to have what she so greatly needed, time. The Chinese have gathered an army of 200,000 around the capital and while ice blockades the ports, fresh legions will pour in from the provinces. Gen. Von Henneken is the principal foreign adviser to the throne, and it is reported that he has telegraphed for several hundred German officers to drill the troops. The actual conflict is delayed till spring and there is great hope for the mediation of foreign powers. If the war is transferred to the South, Japan can only attack China at certain points. The latter is acting on the defensive. It is very much as if Russia were to invade the United States, and that her troops had now reached Canada.

The government is on the alert for internal disorders and both city and country are under close surveillance. Instead of the usual five police stations in Soochow there are now between thirty and forty in the city and its suburbs. A short time since, for getting into a fight, four men were required to stand in cages with their necks in stocks. The lesson to the multitudes who looked on was—this is a bad time to break the laws.

We are living in great peace and quiet and the people consider the presence of foreigners as

A PLEDGE OF SECURITY.

Were the missionary families suddenly to leave Soochow, it would cause a panic in business circles. The Chinese are very polite to us. Last week I took my boys to see the decorations amidst crowds which have not been in the city since a similar occasion in 1845. They go rowing in their boat outside the city on the Grand Canal. On the Empress' birthday, 50,000 assembled to see the theatricals in front of the Palace, within 800 yards of our house. As all the Chinese in the place were out on the streets to "see the sights" I expressed a doubt about leaving home, when my young wife—the senior on the field among the missionary ladies of our church—said, "O! nonsense; you go and do your preaching; I am not afraid." As I returned from the chapel, the crowd had all merrily scattered.

Except once, in a cholera epidemic, I have never had such fixed and earnest attention given by large audiences to the preaching of repentance. They are made by the Holy Spirit to feel that the judgments of God are abroad in the land, and it is time to quit their abominable idolatries and learn righteousness.

Our mission needs speedy reinforeements. The emperor calls for troops, and brigades march at his command. Shall the soldiers of Immanuel not heed the orders of their King? The Church this year has sent us one man. Will not the ministers of Christ "speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward?"

EVANGELISTIC APPOINTMENTS IN MONTGOMERY PRESBYTERY.

DEAR BROTHER:—As now proposed in the Presbytery of Montgomery, the plan, adopted at its last meeting, by which ministers were directed to spend one week of evangelistic work with their brethren, the following facts will, I hope, be specially interesting to you as well as acceptable to the columns of the N.C. PRESBYTERIAN as the fruits of that measure.

The meeting held by Rev. R. C. Anderson, Jr., at Piedmont is mentioned in your paper this week. More than twenty professed conversion. Nineteen were added to the Presbyterian church and ten infants baptized.

Rev. E. W. McCorkle labored most faithfully, for ten days, at Rich Patch church, Alleghany county, Va., of which I am stated supply. He preached every night and went from house to house, holding religious services with nearly fifty families, and preaching once in a private house. The order and attention, at all the public services were indicative of general and deep interest, and the impressions made were unusual in the number of grown men and heads of families brought under their influence. On a visit to the field last Sunday I had the pleasure of receiving nine members. Two had been previously added last week, and four in October—fifteen in all. There are several expecting yet to apply for admission who were detained last Sunday by sickness and other causes.

Rev. C. M. Howard held a meeting there in the early fall; besides four members as the immediate result, there were some professions and interest when he left which were developed in the recent meeting, and there were seven additions to the Baptist church. There will probably be more.

Among the additions to our church there are several men heads of families, and two aged persons.

Yours truly,

P. B. PRICE.

Jan. 6th. 1895.—John the Baptist Beheaded.

(Mark 6 : 17-29.)

Golden Text. "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul."—Matt. 10 : 28.

I. INTRODUCTORY.

This Herod was Herod Antipas, one of the sons of Herod the Great, that atrocious villain who murdered the babes at Bethlehem. And the son was like the father, treacherous, cruel and lustful, though not so bold and talented. Visiting the home of his brother Philip, the beauty and wit of Herodias made such impression on him, that he asked her to leave her husband and come to him, as soon as he could divorce the wife he then had. His wife did not wait to be divorced : but, learning of the intrigue, ran away to her father, Aretas, king of Arabia Petrea. At once Herodias left her husband and came to Herod, while Aretas, incensed at the treatment of his daughter, attacked Herod's kingdom and defeated him in battle with great slaughter. It was probably during the preparation for this war, that John was arrested and put in prison. Josephus tells us that the place of his confinement was Machoerus, a castle and fortress nine miles east of the northern end of the Dead Sea.

II. EXPOSITION.

Vs. 17. For Herod himself, &c. For introduces the explanation of Herod's superstitious fear that Jesus was John the Baptist risen from the dead. Himself, i. e., at his own suggestion—for the personal reasons given afterwards.

Vs. 18. John had said, &c. Whether in public or private we may not know. But the prophet who rebuked the sins of the people and called them to repentance, did not let this wickedness in high places pass in silence.

Vs. 19. Had a quarrel, i. e., a grudge against him—which could not be satisfied with anything but his death.

Vs. 20. Herod feared John, i. e. Stood in awe of him, as Ahab did of Elijah and Mary Queen of Scots did of John Knox—observed him, better preserved him. R. V., puts it "kept him safe."

Vs. A convenient day. A day convenient for her purpose to procure John's death. The time of the feast was fixed by the birthday.

Vs. 22. Danced. The disgrace of this, it is hard for us to realize. The only dancing at such feasts was by professional dancers—women of bad reputation who were hired to come in scant apparel and dance or pose for the amusement of the guests. To this degradation, Herodias, a queen and the descendant of the noble Maccabees lowered her daughter in her intense desire for revenge, and sent Salome (Josephus gives the name) to dance before the half drunken guests.

It pleased Herod. She knew her man and the trap was suitably baited. Heated with wine and inflamed with passion, he did what his clever wife expected, and enthusiastically promise to give the pretty dancer whatever she would ask. And she, instructed of her mother, tripped back into the banquet hall and said, "I will (or wish) that thou give me by and by the head of John the Baptist in a charger. By and by means presently, i. e., not on the morrow, or next week, but in a little while. A charger is the old English name for a big dish or trencher. Did the maiden perpetrate a ghastly jest, as if she would eat the dainty morsel ?

Vs. 26. Was exceeding sorry : Not penitent, but worried and distressed, because he had been outwitted, and was placed in an awkward dilemma and made to do a thing which he hated.

III. SOME PRACTICAL LESSONS.

(1.) The approbation of goodness is not piety. Herod revered John because he was a just and holy man and heard him gladly. Yet Herod was treacherous, sensual, cruel.

The character of John's preaching was stern, radical and severe ; reproving sin and uncloaking hypocrisy and pretensed. (Matt. 3: 7-10, and Luke 3: 7-14.) What pleasure could a man like Herod find in hearing him ? Strange that he should hear him gladly, but this incongruity is often seen. The most wicked men love to hear Rev. Sam Jones. Gamblers, drunkards and libertines, often take pleasure in good preaching and have great respect for true goodness—this approbation of goodness is not love of it and may be found in men who like Herod are wallowing in sin. Hatred of our own sins and yearning after personal holiness are marks of conversion.

(2.) Partial obedience does not save. Herod not only heard John gladly, but did many things because of him.

Some of the evil ways he forsook and in many things he was willing to hearken to John's advice and obey God. But there was one sin he evidently had no idea of giving up. He would not put away his brother Philip's wife, and so he ruined his soul forever.

Let us take warning from his case. Let us not be satisfied to obey God in many things, but let us examine our hearts and see that there is no darling sin, which we are unwilling to give up. God calls for the unreserved surrender of our hearts, and a partial obedience such as Herod rendered is a fatal compromise.

(3.) The gay and frivolous are hard-hearted. "If there is a place in the world where selfishness reigns with unbroken dominion, it is in the bosoms of those who think of nothing but fashion and folly. Hence Herodias found Herod's birthday a convenient season for the murder of the prophet She knew very well that such feasts as Herod was in the habit of holding in his palace, were feasts in which the lusts of the flesh had full swing. She knew perfectly well that such a banquet as he proposed to give was an occasion on which there was an utter forgetfulness of God. She knew that people came together at that time in all the pomp and circumstance and parade of high official position and all the pomp and circumstance of fashionable life, in order to enjoy themselves, as they call it. She had experience in courts ; she was brought up according to the most approved methods of fashionable life, and, if she knew anything, she knew that these people who were devoted to fashion were people who had no heart. She knew also that wine would flow freely ; she knew the intoxicating revel that would take place. In other words Herodias knew that it was a convenient day. And has it not always been so ? Has not this been the uniform connection of things ? Where was there ever a line of monarchs that made pleasure their chief end to the same extent as the line of the Roman emperors ? Men who spared no expense in order to multiply the instruments and appliances of luxury, and of course all, who were able to do it, followed the example of the court. Now what was the character of these people—these lovers of pleasure—these people who lived for nothing, but to gratify themselves ? What was their character as to cruelty ? Why, feeding the fishes in their fish-ponds with the flesh of their slaves ! But worse than that, it possible, we find the virgins and matrons of Rome assembled in the vast amphitheatres to witness for their amusement and spectacle ? O my God ! for their amusement hundreds of men slaying one another before their eyes, saturating the sand of the arena with their blood.

Herodias knew this fashionable revel was the very place for murder, for self-indulgence, hardness of heart and cruelty go together."—Dr. Peck.

(4.) God's children must not look for their reward in this world. "If ever there was a case of godliness unrewarded in this life, it was that of John the Baptist. Think for a moment what a man he was during his short career, and then think to what an end he came. Behold Him that was the prophet of the Highest, and greater than any born of woman, imprisoned like a malefactor ! Behold Him cut off by a violent death before the age of thirty-four—the burning light quenched—the faithful preacher murdered for doing his duty,—and this to gratify the hatred of an adulterous woman, and at the command of a capricious tyrant ! Truly there was an event here, if there ever was one in the world, which might make an ignorant man say, 'What profit is it to serve God ?'

But these are the sort of things which show us that there will one day be a judgment. The God of the spirits of all flesh shall at last set up an assize and judge every one according to his works. The blood of John the Baptist, and James the apostle, and Stephen—the blood of Polycarp, and Huss and Ridley, and Latimer shall yet be required. It is all written in God's book."—Ryle.

Let all true Christians remember that their best things are yet to come. Let us count it no strange thing, if we have sufferings in this present time. It is a season of probation. We are yet at school. We are learning patience, gentleness and meekness, which we could hardly learn, if we had our good things now. But there is an eternal holiday yet to begin. For this let us wait quietly. It will make amends for all. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." (2 Cor. 4 : 17.)

"Nor let the good man's trust depart
Though life its common gifts deny,
Though with a pierced and broken heart,
And scorned of men, he goes to die."

"For God has marked each sorrowing day,
And numbered every secret tear.
And heaven's long age of bliss shall pay
For all his children suffer here."

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF DEC. 13.

125. a. To the people on the borders of Zebulon and Naphtali, in Galilee of the Gentiles. Is. ix. 1.

b. When Christ took up His abode in Capernaum, Matt. iv. 13-16.

Note. The terms "precisely" and "specifically" in the question indicate a definite Scripture statement. It was by missing this and relying on general considerations that so many failed to give the right answers.

A good many answers were received, but only the following were correct :

D. R. Johnson, 124, 125.
Willie Arrowood, 125.
Miriam McFadyen, 125a.

January.

It is mid-winter. The days are short ; the mercury in the thermometer, like the sun on the horizon, ranges low. The roads are apt to be bad, the school rooms are likely to be cold. Yet five days in the week teachers and scholars, with a fair degree of regularity, find their way to school by nine o'clock punctually. They go to teach and learn a little of mathematics, science, history, geography, and the like. They triumph over all the inconveniences of the season. Shall not the Lord's people meet one day in the week to learn the lessons of eternal life ?

If Sunday schools are discontinued, what are parents and pastors doing in the way of Bible teaching during the long winter evenings ?—Dr. E. C. Gordon, in the Earnest Worker.

Experience is an ill-attended school. The trouble is not so much that persons fail to get wisdom from their expriences as that they do not get the experiences that are within their reach. We are too apt to take it for granted that one who has taught a primary school or a Bible class, or any other kind of class, for ten, twenty or forty years is therefore an experienced teacher. But it is the fact that some teachers of six months' practice have really had a larger experience with the characteristics of pupils, their needs, and all that pertains to them as pupils and as individuals, than others who have occupied a teacher's chair for a quarter of a century. It is the business of every one to get experience in his business. He can if he will.—S. S. Times.

CARD OF THANKS.

We are the recipients of many nice presents from the good people of Pocket church, delivered to us through Capt. Wicker, one of our elders.

These presents coming at Christmas season, remind us of the mythic Santa Claus robber verily came, in these gifts, to gladden the hearts of our children, satisfying their ideal of things, good and beauriful; and also to make us glad—who have put away childish things—in the reception of so many useful and valuable articles which are always needful in providing for a household.

For these gifts so varied and so abundant we are gratefully thankful to the givers and pray that He, from whom all blessings flow, may crown their lives with His loving kindness and tender mercies ! PASTOR.

Dear Sir :—Since March 1893, I have used the Electropoise in my family with satisfactory results, for rheumatism, neuralgia, indigestion, kidney trouble and fever. My wife, for whom it was purchased, had been a great sufferer for a long time, her health being completely broken down. Now she is in better health than for fifteen years though she has not taken a drop of medicine since beginning its use. I would not be without it for many times its cost.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Items for Lady Readers.

The Hon. Lady Freemantle contributes to the Queen an interesting account of an audience which she and her cousin, Miss Wells, recently had of the Empress of Japan at the Mikado's palace. "We duly received our cards of audience through the British charge d' affaires." To meet the necessary requirements I had to adapt a handsome evening gown of black and grey brocaded satin, trimmed with black velvet, by filling the neck and sleeves with black lace. A set of moonstone stars, necklet, etc., completed my costume. Miss Wells looked well in a handsome gown of black broche silk, trimmed with a front of black beaded net over mauve silk, and gold ornaments. We passed over a drawbridge and through several gates, all guarded by sentries in the smart-looking uniform of the Imperial Guard. There was very little life stirring in the courtyard, nor was at all an imposing-looking building—simply a large bungalow-looking building, but raised from the ground. We were received by three Court officials in plain black Court dress, who conducted us along numerous corridors, all very handsomely carpeted and papered, with here and there a magnificent old lacquered door brought from some old palace. At length we were shown into a magnificent room looking into a court with fountains and shrubs, the room very well furnished in European style. We had not long to wait before being ushered into the presence of the Empress. The room in which she receives private presentations is very small, and I was quite unprepared to come upon her so suddenly, and only just had time to make my curtsey before finding myself close to her. The room was almost devoid of furniture—only a table or two and some pretty Japanese ornaments.

THE PALACE

THE EMPRESS

was accompanied by three ladies, all dressed in soft mauve or grey shades of brocade, with high necks and trains. The Empress had on a mauve brocade made with high—rather pointed bodice, and fitting beautifully, and the skirt plain, with train. She wore some beautiful diamond ornaments in her hair and on her neck. She is small, as are most Japanese ladies, with a pleasant face, and, I can imagine, might brighten up if she were animated; but during our visit she was perfectly emotionless, and we could just see her lips move, but scarcely heard what she said. All our conversation was carried on in a low whisper, and, as I towered above my little interpreter, it was most difficult to hear what was said, and I had to bend my head in the most uncomfortable way. Our interview did not, however, last long. Then the Empress told me how glad she had been to see me, and put out her hand for me to take. I then made another curtsey and retired, Miss Wells taking my place, and after her little interview we both and found ourselves in the fine large corridor leading to the private apartments of the Emperor and Empress, into which we were not allowed to intrude. From all I heard during my stay in Japan, the Empress must be a very good woman. She takes great interest in schools and hospitals, and visits them constantly, and is most generous, denying herself many little luxuries so that she may devote her own private money to gifts of charity; and she is much beloved by the ladies and gentlemen of the Court."—Belfast Witness.

BACKED OUT OF THE ROYAL PRESENCE,

Things Useful.

Delicate White Puffs.—Beat a pint of rich milk and the white of four eggs until very light, and add, slowly beating all the while, a cupful of finely-sifted flour and a scant cupful of powdered sugar and the grated peel of half a lemon. Bake in buttered tins in a very hot oven, turn out, sift powdered sugar over them and serve hot with lemon sauce.

German Christmas Cakes.—Into one quart of molasses (New Orleans is best) put a tablespoonful of black pepper, one of cinnamon, a teaspoonful of ground cloves and the grated rind of two oranges and one lemon. Let this stand a day. Then add flour enough to make rather a stiff dough, add about four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, which must be mixed with the flour, and a large spoonful of lard. Roll out the dough into long strips about as thick as your finger (working in more flour if too soft to roll), and with a sharp knife cut into pieces the size of a nut about half an inch long. Bake in a hot oven. Be careful not to put the nuts too near together in the pans or they will stick together. If they do, break them apart while hot.

Kate's kindergarten. If she was happy, that was enough. She should have her own way, whatever it might be, but for once it was a sweet, unselfish way, and a way that proved infectious, somehow. Before Christmas came every one in the house was interested in the ever increasing pile of gifts that were being made ready for the wonderful tree that Pen was to prepare for the kindergarten children, and by the time the possibilities of the box were exhausted, there were enough gifts not only for the babies, but for the "little mothers" and older brothers of the kindergartners proper.

And the happy day when Pen and Aunt Kate trimmed the tree with its gay blossoms of tinsel and sparkling ornaments, and hung upon it the wonderful fruits of delight, and of the still happier day when a living, loving little Pen watched the happy faces about the tree, giving the gifts with her own hands, was so carried away by her feelings that she gave yellow hired Gretchen a hug and kiss with the doll baby which brought out such rapturous shouts—well, all that is another story, you know, and I was only to tell you about Pen's possibilities.

You must guess the rest for yourselves. But I will tell you this. Pen had a royal Christmas gift. Her gift was a key that unlocked the doors of the kingdom of joy, the purest and sweetest joy in the world. She had learned the secret of happiness, loving and doing for others, and that is the secret that lies at the very heart of Christmas joy.

Rice Pancakes.—Boil half a pound of the best rice to a jelly in a little water; when cold mix with it a pint of cream, eight well beaten eggs, a dash of nutmeg and a pinch of salt; stir into this six ounces of butter, just heated, and enough dry, warm flour to make it into a smooth batter. Grease the inside of a pan with butter, then fry the pancakes a golden brown. Send them to the table rolled, a few at a time; lay them on an ornamental paper, dust over a little castor sugar, and serve with red currant jelly.

Study Law at Home.

It was the ambitious young man and woman on the farm, behind the counter, in the mill, in the lawyer's office, in the bank—the man and woman without the opportunity of a college education, that made this method of teaching law a necessity. We offer two courses—

1. A Course Preparing the Student to Practise Law;
2. A Business Law Course for Business Men and Women.

The tuition fee is small, the course complete, the result perfect. Nicely printed catalogues explain both courses. They can be had for the asking. Address

A Popular Commentary on the Old and New Testament: Critical, Practical and Explanatory. 4 vols. in box, 8vo., cloth, $8. Half mor. $10. A New Edition, containing the complete unabridged notes in clear type on good paper. With copious index numerous illustrations and maps; and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

This is the only Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within the reach of the masses, while no commentary published is so highly commended, or so well adapted for the home, the teacher, or the preacher

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent D. D.

"I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it."—C. H. Spurgeon.

BENNY.

I told him Christmas morning,
As he sat upon my knee
Holding fast his little stocking!
Stuffed as full as full could be;
And attentive listening to me,
With a face demure and mild,
That old Santa Claus, who filled them,
Did not love a naughty child.

"But we'll be good, wont we moder?"
And from off my lap he slid,
Digging deep among the goodies
In his crimson stocking hid:
While I turned me to my table,
Where a tempting goblet stood,
Brimming high with dainty egg-nogg,
Sent me by a neighbor good.

But the kitten, there before me,
With his white paw, nothing loth,
Sat by way of entertainment,
Lapping off the shining froth;
And in not the gentlest humor
At the loss of such a treat,
I confess, I rather rudely
Thrust him out into the street.

Then how Benny's blue eyes kindled!
Gathering up the precious store
He had busily been pouring
In his tiny pinafore;
With a generous look that shamed me,
Sprang he from the carpet bright,
Showing, by his mien indignant,
All a baby's sense of right.

"Come back Harney!" called he loudly,
As he held his apron white
"You shall have my candy wabbit!"
But the door was fastened tight;
So he stood, abashed and silent,
In the centre of the floor,
With defeated look alternate
Bent on me and on the door.

Then, as by some sudden impulse,
Quickly ran he to the fire,
And while eagerly his bright eyes
Watched the flames go high and higher,
In a brave clear key he shouted,
Like some lordly little elf,
"Santa Kaus, come down the chimney,
Make my moder have herself!"

"I will be a good girl, Benny,"
Said I, feeling the reproof;
And straightway recalled poor Harney,
Mewing on the gallery roof,
Soon the anger was forgotten,
Laughter chased away the frown,
And they gamboled neath the live oaks
Till the dusky night came down.

In my dim, fire-lighted chamber,
Harney purred beneath my chair,
And my play-worn boy beside me
Knelt to say his evening prayer;
"God bess fader—God bess moder;
God bess sister"—then a pause,
And the sweet young lips devoutly
Murmured, "God bess Santa Kaus!"
He is sleeping—brown and silken
Lie the lashes, long and meek,
Like caressing, clinging shadows,
On his plump and peachy cheek;
And I bend above him weeping
Thankful tears—Oh! undefiled!
For a woman's crown of glory,
For the blessing of a child.

Pen's Possibilities.

BY MRS. GEORGE A. PAULL.

Pen was very pretty. Everybody said so, and, of course, what every one said must be so. Her hair was long and fair, and as Pen never romped, it was always in the most unruffled order. Her eyes were blue and they opened and shut—oh, what am I doing? Talking about Pen just exactly as if she was a French doll. I don't know but I would better begin my story all over again, if I am confusing Pen with the big Paris doll that was locked up in the trunk in the nursery, with all her wonderful Parisian wardrobe in another trunk with her doll ladyship's name upon it. But, you see, I know that Pen had not very much more heart than the doll, and that love and unselfishness and all the other qualities that make people happy had never been developed in poor little Pen, so she really might have been stuffed with sawdust, as far as her being a real flesh and blood child were concerned.

Aunt Kate was the most surprising person with whom Pen had ever become acquainted, she was so full of enthusiasm and enjoyed little things so heartily, while Pen won more pity from Aunt Kate than the most raggedy of the very raggediest children who went to the kindergarten where Aunt Kate taught. Of course, there were ever so many things, in fact, perfect oceans of them, that Pen had, and the dear little Antonies and Mickies, and Gretchens and all the rest of them, hadn't, but then they had something which was a richer possession than any of Pen's elegant ones. They each had a real child heart, and they were learning, in their happy hours in the kindergarten, some of the most beautiful lessons, of helpfulness and love for others, and they had reached the heart of the sweetest secret in the world—the secret of finding the very fountain of happiness by making others happy. When Pen simpered gently at something which aroused a passing amusement, Aunt Kate could have cried for her, thinking of the gleeful shouts and unrestrained laughter of the kindergarten babies, and she made up her mind that if she could only awaken the poor little doll up to interest in some one besides herself, she would be giving her a greater gift than all the money in the world could buy, for Pen had almost everything that money could give her.

Looking about one day through the house, Aunt Kate discovered a very large box. She stopped, turned back, and exclaimed ecstatically:

"Why, Pen, what are all these things? You will have to watch me till I go now, for I shall never be able to keep my hands off them."

Pen looked languidly into the box. It was a funny assortment. If you can imagine a perfect toy store all jumbled up together, with dolls, and their dresses and furniture, and animals that wound up and walked about, and snapped and snarled in a way to terrify you, and workboxes, and candy boxes, and books, oh! I cannot begin to tell you all, then you can imagine the contents of that box.

"Why, those are only my old toys, Aunt Kate," said Pen. "They are all broken somehow or other, and they aren't good for anything. Most of them are old-fashioned now, anyway. What would you do with them?"

"Oh! Pen, what would I do with them?" and Aunt Kate's face grew radiant. "I would give my kindergarten babies such a happy Christmas that they would laugh with delight for a year. Shall I tell you what this makes me think of? It is like looking into a mine of joys, and by just putting one's hand in, one could bring out such a lump of delight. Look at this," and she held up a little bead basket that had been bent into a cocked hat by being very much pressed for room by a toy elephant and a ball.

"If you should straighten this out, and send it to the little lame sister of one of my babies, you would make the child as happy as a queen. If every bead was a diamond, it would not make her any happier."

"Why, how funny," said Pen, but she looked more interested than usual.

"Pen, I do envy you, I declare I do," said Aunt Kate with another burst of enthusiasm, as she made a fresh dive into the box and brought up a small doll, elaborately dressed, with one arm hanging by a thread, but otherwise in perfect order. "I shall call this box 'Pen's possibilities,' and whenever I remember it, I shall think that very few little girls in the world have a chance to give as much happiness."

"Tell me more about it, Aunt Kate," said Pen, as she followed her aunt down stairs.

Aunt Kate could talk with golden tongued eloquence when it came to her kindergarten work, and she had won whole audiences, before now, into sympathetic interest, so it was not so strange that before she finished she had stirred this poor little selfish heart into warmth, and two bright tears crept down Pen's cheeks.

"And could I make them so happy, really Aunt Kate?" Pen asked wistfully. "Will you take my things to them? I don't mean only my old things, but anything that I have got. I don't care for my games a bit. I wish I did," she exclaimed, with a reflection of Aunt Kate's own zeal, "I would give them the thing I loved the very best in the whole world. Will you take the things to them, Aunt Kate?"

"I will tell you what will be better than that. You shall take them yourself. What do you think of that plan? And we will mend all the broken things while I am here, so that we shall exhaust all the possibilities upstairs first."

And Pen grew enthusiastic, and wanted to begin right away. When dinner came, she could hardly be persuaded to stop to eat, and her mother wondered somewhat sadly how it had happened that when she had given the child everything that money could buy, she had not once shown as much happiness as just now when she was working for Aunt

When bread is put in the bowl to rise, rub a thin coating of butter over it to prevent a hard crust forming. Cover bread as nearly air-tight as possible while rising.

NOTICE!

I want every man and woman in the United States interested in the Opium and Whisky habits to have my book on these diseases. Address B. M. Woolley, Atlanta, Ga., Box 327 and one will be sent you free.

It is said that the automatic penny-in-the-slot machine is over 150 years old. This is probably why it feels disinclined to work now and then.

Woman-hood

has its own special medicine in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. And every woman who is "run-down" or over-worked, every woman who suffers from any "female complaint" or weakness, needs just that remedy. With it, every disturbance, irregularity, and derangement can be permanently cured.

It's an invigorating restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and the only medicine for women so safe and sure that it can be guaranteed. In periodical pains, displacements, weak back, bearing-down sensations, and every kindred ailment, if it fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. Is anything that isn't sold in this way likely to be "just as good ?"

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure constipation, liver-ills, indigestion, dyspepsia, piles and head-aches.

The clove-tree is found in nearly every one of the West Indian Islands, and especially at Jamaica, Trinidad, Grenada, St. Vincent and Dominica. The largest number of trees is probably found in Grenada.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

Entirely New. Abreast of the Times. A Grand Educator.

Successor of the "Unabridged."

Standard of the U. S. Gov't Printing Office, the U.S. Supreme Court and of nearly all the Schoolbooks.

Warmly commended by every State Superintendent of Schools, and other Educators almost without number.

A College President writes: "For "ease with which the eye finds the "word sought, for accuracy of definition, for effective methods in indicating pronunciation, for terse yet "comprehensive statements of facts, "and for practical use as a working "dictionary, 'Webster's International' "excels any other single volume."

The One Great Standard Authority, So writes Hon. D. J. Brewer, Justice U. S. Supreme Court.
